INTENSE COLD CAUSES SUFFERING

Sudden Drop of Mercury Sets Everyone Shivering and Shaking.

Plainfield people are shivering and shaking with the cold today. It was bitter winter weather all last night and today the temperature has hovered nearer to the zero mark than it generally gets in this part of the country. While it is believed the present cold spell will not be of long duration yet the weather authorities at Washington do not hold out any hope of immediate relief.

The thermometer registered zero as late as 7:30 o'clock this morning. In some places in this city the temperature is said to have dropped to 3 degrees below the zero mark.

The cold snap has caused intense suffering among the very poor hereabouts. Some of whom have found it very difficult, if not impossible, to keep even fairly comfortable. Coal dealers have been busy answering telephone calls throughout the greater part of the day, with urgent appeals for a supply of fresh fuel where coal bins had become exhausted owing to the unusual demands made upon them by householders.

Overseer of the Poor Garrett T. Dunham, as well as the officers of the Charity Organization Society in Plainfield are on the lookout for aggravated cases of distress among the residents of the city. All such will, if if possible, it is said, be cared for and given material aid.

Horses as well as pedestrians, automobilists and other travelers suffered intensely from the rigorous weather of last night. Automobiles left with their hoods unblanketed in some cases were found by their owners to have frozen up and there were numerous inconveniences being reported to plumbers by citizens whose water pipes had frozen during the night.

The plant of the Ransome Concrete Machinery Company, on Rock avenue, started up on full time this morning. Before long, however, the low temperature froze up the plant and all work had to be stopped.

BAYONNE MAN TO WED GIRL HE RESCUED FROM RUNAWAY

Bayonne, Feb. 12.—An engagement which developed after the rescue of Miss Margaret McCooley, of Johnstown, Pa., from a runaway by Michael Machinsky, a local contractor, was announced yesterday. About a year ago Machinsky, while in Johnstown on business, stopped a runaway horse attached to a carriage in which Miss McCooley was riding. An acquaintanceship followed and Machinsky became a visitor at the McCooley home. When he proposed a few days ago he was accepted.

NEW BRUNSWICK CONCERN INCREASES CAPITALIZATION

New Brunswick, Feb. 12.—Johnson and Johnson, manufacturers of "red cross" medical supplies, have filed a certificate at Trenton with the Secretary of State increasing the capital stock from $3,250,000 to $4,900,000. The concern has added $11,650,000 worth of common stock, and now has $1,600,000 of preferred and $3,300,000 of common stock. James W. Johnson, president of the company, is the largest stockholder, having 3,199 shares in his own name and holding 1,031 shares as trustee. Each share is valued at $100.

Of the new stock, some will be put upon the market. The company plans to erect a new warehouse on the property within a short time.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

Miss Helen Bogart, of East Sixth street, teacher in the Bible School of Trinity Reformed church, gave her class a straw-ride to Westfield early in the week. The trip was greatly enjoyed.

The consistory of Trinity Reformed church met last night, but owing to the absence of some of the members, only routine business was transacted.

ANOTHER BOY SCOUT TROOP.

Twelve boys joined the Boy Scout troop organized, last night, at Temple Sholem, by Assistant Scoutmaster Earle Victorson, and six took the oath of the organization. Meetings will be held every Tuesday night at the Y. M. H. A. Hall. The boys are arranging to hold an entertainment of some kind to raise enough money to equip themselves. The boys who were sworn in as loyal scouts last night were Henry Dreier, Raphael Berse, Harold Livingston, Benjamin Kornfield, Robert Goldstein and Hyman Gould.

Mr. and Mrs. George E. Crowell, formerly of Plainfield, but now of Elizabeth, are parents of a boy.

PAY-AS-YOU-ENTER SYSTEM ON LOCAL TROLLEYS

Announcement was made by the Public Service Corporation today that possibly within a week, the pay-as-you-enter system would be installed on all the local trolley lines in Plainfield. The cars are now being equipped with the necessary appurtenances and the innovation will go into effect as soon as the cash boxes arrive. The order does not apply to the Main Line cars which have been equipped with part of the fixtures for pre-payment for several months, as a different kind of apparatus is needed.

The back platforms of the local cars will not be divided into the entrance and exit passages which the public is familiar with, instead patrons will enter by the rear door and leave the car only from the front way. The conductors will stand on the far side of the rear platform to supervise the payment of fares.

MRS. WILLIAM ASHTON DIES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

Following a long illness from a complication of ailments, Mrs. Anna Ashton, wife of William Ashton, died last night at her home on East Sixth street. She was fifty-one years old and had been a resident of this city since 1899. She was a native of Bound Brook where she lived nearly all her life. Mrs. Ashton enjoyed a wide circle of friends and was highly regarded for many estimable traits. Besides her husband, who has been an engineer at Muhlenberg Hospital for the past ten years, she is survived by one daughter, Miss Ethel Ashton, and three sons, John, William and Harry, all of this city. She also leaves one sister, Mrs. Thomas Watt, of West Front street.

The funeral will be held at her late home Saturday morning at 8:30 and in St. Mary's church at 9 o'clock. Burial will be in the family plot in St. Joseph's cemetery, Bound Brook.

South Plainfield.

The Baraca Class of the South Plainfield Baptist church will hold a "coal social" in the Sunday-school room this evening. Everybody is invited to come and spend the evening in a social way. Moving pictures and music will be given as entertainment and refreshments will be served.

Mrs. Bertha Hall Jenings will give a recital from Victor Hugo's authors in the Baptist church on Friday evening, February 20. She will be assisted by Miss Gladys Fearns, pianist, Miss Grace Norman, soprano, and Rev. J. J. Allen, tenor. An invitation is given to the public.

The pastor, J. J. Allen, is at present preaching a very interesting series of sermons on "Ancient Laws and Modern Sins," taking the Ten Commandments as the basis of the sermons. Much interest has been manifested in the discourses.

The Sunergol Club held its monthly meeting last night. It's a good number in attendance. Plans were discussed for a play to be given in the near future. The Sunergol has been organized but a few months.

LEHIGH ENGINEER INJURED.

David Graves, an engineer on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, was brought to Muhlenberg Hospital shortly before noon today suffering from severe injuries about the head. While running his train just west of South Plainfield he attempted to look out the side window of his cab and was hit by some obstruction, he is unable to tell what. The full extent of his injuries has not yet been ascertained, but it is believed that the skull is not fractured. Graves is twenty-nine years old and lives at Lehighton, Pa.

MINSTREL SHOW REHEARSAL.

The Elk's 1914 minstrel troupe held its second rehearsal at the club house last night under the direction of W. N. Runyon and Harry Weber. About fifteen members were in attendance and tried over a lot of new musical numbers secured by Ben LaVere, who has been added to the minstrel committee. It was announced last night that the end men would be Harry N. Blimm, Thomas M. Muir, William J. Firstbrook, John Campbell, "Jack" Todd and Edwin Bennett.

BIRTHDAY DINNER.

Miss Ethel Campbell, of the borough, was given a dinner last night in honor of her birthday. Twelve of her friends were present. Dinner was served at 6:30 o'clock. Miss Campbell, the guest of honor, was presented with numerous handsome gifts and also several bunches of violets. The dining room was prettily decorated American flags being used as the color scheme and the table was graced with flowers.

CONTINUES AS BOARD MEMBER.

Harry W. Marshall, who resigned as a member of the executive of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, Monday night, will continue as a member of the board, as heretofore. Owing to a pressure of business he will be unable to give his time to the work of the executive committee.

as well. It is the aim of Mayor Clark to conduct the affairs of the borough government in an economical and legal manner at all times and if this be done he believes an experienced lawyer should be in attendance at meetings of the Council to advise as to the legality of measures advocated and taken.

Attention was directed by Councilman Edmund Rushmore, at the last meeting of the Borough Council to the fact that that body would exceed its powers and authority given it under the law by voting the payment of monies to persons before such sums had really been earned. The matter was brought up upon a resolution having offered to pay Tax Collector George F. Brown, $200 for clerk hire and $250 for office rent. Councilman Rushmore declared the money should be paid the official named in monthly installments. Mr. Milne declared that Mr. Rushmore was inconsistent in his attitude as he had just had a resolution passed to pay to the Board of the Poor Fred De Ker $[illegible] on account of the pood farm. Talking about payment of money in advance, Mr. Milne declared. He accused his fellow councilman of an ulterior motive in saying that personal antipathy was evident. It was declared by Mr. Rushmore that the advancement of monies from time to time to the overseer of the poor was strictly legitimate and the resolution was finally sustained by the Council.

Regarding the clerk hire it is understood that objection from certain quarters to Mr. Rushmore largely, if not entirely, because of his constant work for the cause of good government in the Borough and his insistence that the affairs of the government be conducted by the Council in strict accordance with the law. He is very much pleased in this regard, his friends declare.

A lucrative position in the Queen City Hospital is said to have been offered by former Councilman William L. Smalley after Mr. Rushmore could never again be elected to any borough office. He is said to have offered a wager of $100 to $[illegible] on this proposition, in the presence of former Assemblyman W. de La Anderson and several others.

WANT TO SEE FITZ.

St. Louis wants to see Robert Father Time Fitzsimmons in action. The old town, however, is afraid to have the speckled one perform there unless Dan Morgan agrees to be a party to the proceedings. While the impression seems to prevail in hick towns like St. Louis that Fitz even now can put all the white hopes in one ring and lick the whole lot of them, the rubes don't want to place the bet straight. They feel as if they would like to hedge somewhere. For instance, if a speedy heavyweight with poor control like the Gunner ever conected with Fitz's orsophagus the services of an undertaker would be required. Absalom Meeks, Fitz's manager, knows this quite well, and has wired the timid St. Louisans that the difficulty may be overcome by having Battling Levinsky come to the front. Levinsky, Meeks says, is the only white hope that knows how to box. Translated, Meeks' statement means that the phenomenal Hebrew might make a fool out of Fitz, but would not kill the old fellow in doing it. St. Louis sport prothoters are planning to have the fight take place in the Coliseum some time in March.

SUNDAY SPORTS BILL.

Once again that battered veteran, the Sunday sports bill, has appeared in the Legislature. Its presence is opportunity for the cynics. Here we have our golf links and baseball diamonds, our Sunday newspaper and our Sunday automobiles rides, yes, our Sunday clubs and our Sunday saloons—and it is all illegal. Yet the law is neither enforced nor repealed.

BASEBALL INDOOR SESSION.

The first baseball meeting of the season has been called for tonight, when the Hope Chapel Sunday-school leaguers will gather about the hearth and discuss plans for the coming season of diamond work. Jack Martin, who resents the big leagues to unsuspecting listeners, will be on hand to scatter a few suggestions in the path of the Chapelites. The Hope team will probably be made up of nearly the same material that did valiant service last year and it looks as though the Chapelites were out to cop another tropny.

Even Bound Brook inhabitants have been afflicted with that bowling disease. One of the natives of that burg turned in a score of 257 tuddler night.

That Scotch Plains victory over the Y. M. C. A. team the other night was not wholly unexpected, but it came as a rude bump nevertheless.

POPE BLESSES GIANTS AND FAVORS BASEBALL

Rome, Feb. 12.—After granting an audience to the baseball teams who are making a tour of the world Pope Pius said to Cardinal Bisleti he wished all the Latin countries would adopt the American national game and waste no more time on the tango.

Charles A. Comiskey, president of the Chicago White Sox, was well enough to accompany the players to the Vatican. The party, which included Dr. Jones, United States consal at Genoa, who has been attending Comiskey, comprised seventy persons. They were presented to the pontiff by Mgr. O'Hern, vice rector of the American college in Rome.

Mgr. O'Hern explained to Pope Pius the importance of baseball in the United States, and the pontiff listened with keen interest. The pope conversed cordially with the visitors and imparted the apostolic blessing on them. In a short speech he praised open air health games to strengthen the body and advised the ball players to follow religious practices to strengthen the soul. The pontiff wished the players prosperity and a successful season.

After being photographed in the court of San Damascus the players were received by Cardinal Merry del Val, papal secretary of state.

The projected game was abandoned owing to bad weather.

Comiskey was examined after the audience under the X-rays by Professor Bastianelli, who said later that Comiskey was not seriously ill.

John McGraw and Mrs. McGraw have left for Nice.

PLATT ADAMS.

HANNES KOLEHMAINEN SPRINTING LAST LAP

The annual indoor meet of the New York Athletic Club held in Madison Square Garden last night brought out one of the largest crowds of track and field enthusiasts that ever packed the historic meeting place for such an affair and some unusually fine performances were registered, Platt Adams and Hannes Kolehmainen, leading in the laurel winning.

The Flying Finn and Harry Smith of the Bronx Church House, started from scratch in the three-mile limited handicap and with Smith setting the pace the scratch man gradually worked their way up through the field and went out into the lead at two miles and a quarter. At two miles and a half Smith and Kolehmainen started to carry the gaff to each other and it was anybody's race until the bell rang for the last lap, when the Finn went to the whip and raced away from his American rival and won by twelve yards

Platt Adams, the Newarker and former Plainfield ball player, competing under the colors of the New York A. C., was on scratch in the three standing broad jumps and came in second with thirty-four feet and one half inches.

Ralph Runyon, the Plainfield High School athlete, failed to place in the pole vault event, the leap being won by K. R. Curtis, of the New York A. C. from scratch with an actual leap of twelve feet.

GIANTS GIVE UP A COLD, GRAY $20,000.

The New York Club of the National League, through its president, Harry N. Hempstead, agreed yesterday to pay to the League 25 per cent. of the club's share of the last world's series. The amount involved is about $20,000. The question has always been a source of dispute between the local club officials and the rest of the owners, who argued that they ought to get a share of the profits in the big series. The New York Club refused to accede to the rule in 1912, and the matter was finally adjusted by a referee, who decided in favor of the League. Mr. Hempstead, although not convinced of the justice of the practice, agreed to submit in the interests of peace.

TO PICK FIGHT VICTOR BY REGISTERING MACHINE.

Tacoma, Wash., Feb. 12.—In a boxing contest today each of the judges held in his hand a machine to register the number of blows struck. At the end of the contest the boxer who has scored the greatest number of blows will be given the decision. It is said this will be the first time in the history of boxing that a device of this kind has been used in determining the winner in limited rounds of boxing matches.

BASEBALL NOTES

The Memphis Club has signed a player named Pat Moses. Manager Mique Finn caught only the first name and signed him.

Pitcher Ray Collins says the Boston Red Sox will have to come across with more money or he will stick to his Vermont farm.

Ben Tincup, the Phillies' pitcher, has been sent to the Lowell New England League club. A case of the Phillie losing a Tincup as well as a pitcher.

Manager Clark Griffith of the Washington team says the signing of Doc Gessler to manage the Pittsburgh Federal League team shows the class of the Feds. Whaddyeyu mean?

Arthur Irwin went to Chicago, grabbed "King" Cole who had previously signed with the Feds, and took him to New York, where the "King" signed to pitch for the Yankees. When it comes to kidnapping 'em Arthur is one fearless guy.

The Giants have sent Pitcher Goulait to Memphis. This youngster is clever and all that, but we're glad he has gone South. His name reminded us of "goulash" and every time he trotted out we had to buy a hot dog to satisfy our hunger.

For the first time in y'ars and y'ars Ty Cobb has condescended to do a little training with his fellow teammates this spring. Falling down in batting from .410 in 1912 to a percentage of .390 in 1913 shows that he needs training.

Why not add Brainerd to the title of the Athletics? Something like "Phila.-Brainerd World's Champions." Chief Bender and Joe Graves, Conie Mack's youngest pitcher, were born in Brainerd, Minn., and Leslie Bush makes his home there in the off-season.

VOORHEES DEFEATED TWO ASPIRANTS FOR THE TITLE

Voorhees won the individual championship among the pinners on the Paraca Class alleys in Dunellen, last night, defeating Snyder in two straight games and then taking two out of three from Wells.

Voorhees set the high score mark of the evening in his second game with Snyder when he knocked down 186 wooden images.

First series:
Snyder	143	173
Voorhees	178	186
Second series:
Wells	178	145	149
Voorhees	153	182	171

WITH THE BOXERS

Leach Cross says Willie Ritchie is the greatest lightweight developed since the day of Joe Gans.

Arthur Pelkey does not look so good to Tommy Burns as he did after Pelkey's bout with Luther McCarthy.

Matt Wells, former English lightweight champion, was defeated by Matt McCoy recently in Sydney, Australia.

Eddie Murphy, the Boston lightweight, and Phil Brock have been matched for a 10 round bout to take place in Canton, O., February 17.

The boxing commissioners of Cincinnati will not permits bouts between tenth raters. Boxers must show some class to get by in the Ohio city.

Two rival Australians promoters, Howe and Baker, are touring America in search of boxing talent. They want to take back a number of our best boxers.

If Battling Levinsky continues to fight so often he will fight himself out before he gets a crack at anything that resembles a championship battle.

Some time ago Sam Harris, manager for "Kid" Williams, promised Johnny Coulon $1,000 if he would sign to meet Williams. Johnny says he is now ready to sign and wants to see the thousand bucks.

GRACE BOYS AGAIN DEFEAT THE NONPAREIL QUINTET

The Grace Church Boys' Club basketball team hung up another verdict at the expense of the strong Nonpareil outfit on the church court last night, turning in a count of 38 to 18 without much effort.

Cottrell led the scoring for the winners who held the upper hand from the first chirp of the whistle, while Jim McCrae did the best work for the losing side, being especially accurate in caging foul shots.

higher if that is possible than that demanded by the awakened business conscience of the present day, but these bills, if passed as introduced in Congress would not in his opinion lead to that end.

Mr. Ackerman finished by saying that "the bills as now printed will affect the smallest corporation and its wage-earners and it seems to me the duty of every citizen to write for copies of House Bills Numbers 12120 and 12121, and to register a strong protest with their Congressman against their passage in their present crude form."

FEATURE PHOTO-PLAYS.

"The Great Leap," a thrilling photo-play in four parts, is the big feature attraction at Proctor's Theatre today and the rest of the week. The picture is full of thrills, including the leap of a boy and girl astride a horse from a lofty cliff into a rushing river. The special feature for tomorrow's program will be a three-part thriller entitled "The Buccaneers;" a Keystone comedy, "Kid Auto Races at Venice;" a two-reel film from the Lubin studios entitled "Treasures on Earth," and several other new pictures. The orchestra is growing in popularity as an added attraction at the popular theatre.

MURPHY READY TO REFORM PARTY

Tammany Boss Says He Will Aid Plan.

RETICENT ON CROKER NOTE

Tom Foley Thinks Retired Leader Is "Getting Crazy" In His Old Age. Says There Is No Objection to Osborne as State Chairman.

New York, Feb. 12.—Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, declared he was right in line with President Wilson and Governor Glynn for reforming the Democratic party in New York.

"I'll be very glad to aid in any way to uplift the party—if uplift's the word."

The chief smiled a very sly smile across the top of his desk at the reporters as he added the qualification. He made the statement in reply to an inquiry as to what his attitude would be toward the Wilson-Glynn pact to reform New York state's Democracy. Incidentally, he said, he recognized Governor Glynn as state leader.

"Would you agree to the reorganizing of the state committee and making William Church Osborn state chairman instead of George M. Palmer?"

"I don't object to Osborn," he replied promptly, "if Palmer wants to resign."

"Have you any information that Mr. Palmer wants to get out?"

"No. I haven't heard so."

"Do you know that a meeting of the state committee is to be called next week, according to Governor Glynn, for the change in the chairmanship to be made?"

"No. I didn't know it."

"Will you oppose the calling of such a meeting so soon?"

"No. If Mr. Palmer wants to resign I don't see why any one should oppose Osborn."

Mr. Murphy refused flatly to discuss the letter of Richard Croker to the late John Fox, in which the former Tammany leader declared that the organization could not hope to win as long as Murphy headed it.

"That's all past," was all that he would say about it.

Foley Unburdens Himself.

Thomas F. Foley was not so reticent. When asked about the Croker letter he exploded with the following remarks loud enough to be heard all over the reception room at Tammany hall.

"The old fellow's getting crazy. He's getting just old enough to be a damned old fool."

Mr. Murphy was asked if he had decided to go back to the Croker policy of attending strictly to city politics and not dabbling up state.

"I didn't know that was his policy," he retorted.

"Mr. Croker has suggested that you can best help in uplifting the party by stepping down and out," an interviewer suggested.

In reply Mr. Murphy simply settled himself more firmly in his swivel chair and smiled broadly.

"What do you think of Governor Glynn's statement that there must be a new state leader?"

"I haven't been state leader."

"Who has been leader then?"

"Oh, there've been two or three."

When pressed for an explanation as to who the "two or three" leaders were Mr. Murphy explained that William J. Conners, Governor Dix, Governor Sulzer and Governor Glynn had succeeded each other as state leaders during the last few years.

"You recognize Governor Glynn as state leader, then?"

"Yes."

"Won't you admit that the majority of the state committeemen have stood with you?"

Mr. Murphy declined to answer.

SCHMIDT IS SENTENCED.

Must Pay Death Penalty In Week of March 23.

New York, Feb. 12.—Hans Schmidt, the slayer of Anna Aumuller, was sentenced by Justice Davis in the criminal branch of the supreme court to die in the electric chair in the week beginning March 23. Schmidt heard his doom pronounced without the slightest sign of emotion. He had no word to say to the court or to his counsel.

After hearing his sentence he deliberately offered his hand to the deputy sheriff, who stood beside him, that a handcuff might be clasped on. Then with a half bow to the lawyers who had defended him he turned to walk to the rear of the courtroom and through the door leading to the Bridge of Sighs. It was just a little over five months from the day that he had murdered the servant girl, whom he said he had married, and after cutting up her body threw the portions of it into the North river.

TO BREAK MERGER OF SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Drastic Decree Is Asked by the Government.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Feb. 12.—A suit under the Sherman anti-trust law to divorce the Central Pacific railroad from the Southern Pacific railroad was filed in the United States court here by the department of justice. This is the first big suit under the Sherman law that has been instituted by the Wilson administration since the president declared his "constitution of peace" policy for big corporations. It seems to indicate that the government is prepared to enforce through court proceedings the Sherman anti-trust law, except in cases where corporations themselves readily conform to the views of the federal government.

There is a surprise in the suit, in that the government contends that the relations between the Southern and Central Pacific constitute a violation of the law under which the government aided in the construction of the Union Pacific road, as well as a violation of the Sherman law.

In this suit the attorney general makes his application for relief just as drastic as in the previous suits filed by the Wilson administration. He calls upon the court to compel the Southern Pacific railroad to dispose of its holdings in the Central Pacific and to cancel and relinquish its lease, control, management and operation of the lines. He petitions the court also to decree that the Southern Pacific's holdings with the Central Pacific shall be disposed of to persons who "are not its stockholders or agents, nor otherwise under its control and influence."

This means that the Southern Pacific stockholders would not be allowed to purchase any of the Central Pacific stock now owned by the Southern Pacific company.

WALKER APPOINTS 21 COMMISSIONERS

Chancellor Names Officials to Work With Sheriffs.

WILL HELP DRAW JURIES

Action Is Under the Chancellor-Sheriff Law, Which Requires Such Officers In Each County to Act With Sheriff In Selecting Grand and Petit Jurors.

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 12.—Twenty-one jury commissioners have been appointed by Chancellor Walker under the chancellor-sheriff law, which requires the appointment by the chancellor of such an officer in each county to act with the sheriff of such county in the drawing of grand and petit jurors.

Chancellor Walker's announcement puts to test the law which requires that the jury commissioners shall not be of the same political faith as the sheriff. He named Democrats to act in four counties which have Republican sheriffs. In giving out the list of appointments Chancellor Walker issued the following statement:

"The act requires that the commissioner in each county shall not be a member of the same political party as the sheriff. In the four counties where there are Republican sheriffs I have appointed Democratic commissioners. In the seventeen counties having Democratic sheriffs I have appointed fourteen Republican and three Progressive commissioners. These appointees were highly recommended to me by men in whom I have confidence. I hope and believe I have made no mistakes. If I have they can be corrected."

The commissioners are:

Atlantic—Wilson Senseman, Democrat, Bergen—Alfred Cramlich, Progressive, Burlington—Benjamin D. Spedaker, Republican; Camden—Charles O. Brown, Republican; Cape May—Anthony B. Smith Republican; Cumberland—John S. Horton, Republican; Essex—Edward E. Gnichtel, Republican; Gloucester—Alonzo Carey, Republican; Hudson—Andrew J. Knox, Republican; Hunterdon—Alvah L. Alpaugh, Republican; Mercer—Charles H. Levy, Republican; Middlesex—Frederick J. Cox, Republican; Monmouth—George W. Poole, Republican; Morris—Andrew L. Cobb, Republican; Ocean—William E. Nolan, Republican; Passaic—Thomas F. Morgan, Democrat; Salem—Richard K. Flitcraft, Progressive; Somerset—Eugene V. Cruser, Democrat; Sussex—William F. Howell, Republican; Union—Charles P. Russ, Democrat; Warren—Edward F. Cline, Republican.

DECIDE AGAINST COMMISSION

Wenonah Retains Present Rule by a Majority of Seven.

Wenonah, N. J., Feb. 12.—The commission form of government lacked seven votes of winning out at a special town election held here to decide whether the old borough council should be ousted and the new system adopted. The vote was 71 for a commission and 78 against it.

Councilmen who have been criticised for increasing the borough water rates made the election a personal issue and got out enough votes to save their seats. Their chief argument was that a commission would be extravagant for so small a town as Wenonah, which has a resident population of less than 1,000.

The election board got into a tangle as to who had a right to vote.

TO KEEP AFTER PATERSON.

Ministerial Association Decides to Increase Vigilance Committee.

Paterson, N. J., Feb. 12.—At a meeting of committees of the Paterson Ministerial association and the Law and Order league at the Y. M. C. A. in Ellison street it was decided to increase the vigilants' committee of 100 engaged in the vice and excise cleanup to a membership of 1,000.

The Rev. A. N. Smith said: "Conditions in Paterson have improved since the crusade started. There are still some lawbreakers in town who think that this is just a flash in the pan, but they are sadly mistaken. This movement was not begun to scare them out, but to clean them out and keep them out. Paterson is going to be cleaned if it takes us ten years."

BRIEF STATE ITEMS.

Frederick W. Riepe, who has served the Arlington borough as marshal for fifteen years without pay, was appointed chief of police at $800 a year by the borough council.

John Cselle of New Brunswick lost a $20,000 suit against his wife's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Rizsak of Port Reading. His bride of three months left him last year, and he sued for alienaton of her affections.

The Lincroft inn at Long Branch, built more than 100 years ago, was partially destroyed by fire. The inn was well known to motorists and for years catered to the drivers of speed horses and others who used the famous old Rumson road.

The improvements to the Hackensack Broadway public school have been completed, and the public has been invited to make an inspection of the innovation—an open air classroom. The new class has been organized and open air uniforms assigned.

Governor Fielder said that if Professor Winthrop M. Daniels resigns as a member of the state board of public utility commissioners to become a member of the interstate commerce commission former Judge John J. Treacy of the court of errors and appeals will be appointed to the vacancy.

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

We Eat too Much Meat Which Clogs Kidneys, Then the Back Hurts.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

The Housewife's Daily Economy Calendar

FRANCES MARSHALL

Campaign for Better Table.

The economical housewife—who, perhaps, wishes she had more leisure for broadening study or social life, should look in the realm of her own work for an object on which to concentrate her intellectual activity. Here at the beginning of the year she should resolve to effect some work of real value to her household before the beginning of 1915. At this present time, when food prices are high, when modern business life makes a tax on strength and health which can only be met by the man who is properly nourished, and when the excellence of food in hotels and restaurants creates a craving for delicacies, what better new year's resolution could the economical housewife make than the resolution to spread a better, more nourishing, more economical table in the coming year?

There is all the difference in the world between the performance of a humdrum task and the accomplishment of a chosen vocation. So the housewife should put all her energies to work on making the setting of a better table her great, stimulating interest—the work she has chosen because it is the work she enjoys.

To begin with, she should post herself on the chemistry and the psychology of food. The chemistry of food is perhaps of first importance. If she understands that she can set a nourishing table at the smallest cost.

But it is the psychology of food, if that term may be used, which bids the housewife vary her menus as much as possible, that tells her that broiled chops, mashed potato souffle, a fresh crisp salad, and a bit of unusual and perhaps expensive cheese, at the end of a muggy, damp, worrysome day in February is in reality cheaper than a heavy stew, with an accompaniment of turnips and boiled potatoes, and a denoument of hot apple dumplings. Occasional treats of expensive food pay for themselves in the added zest they give to the appetite, and in a certain feeling of satisfaction with the world in general cheaper foods makes them unpalatable and, therefore, practically useless.

So set about the year with a resolve in your mind to carry on a campaign for a better table. Have a two-fold end in view—to make it economical and attractive. At the end of 1914 take stock of your year's work and see whether you have got as much interesting and stimulating activity from this campaign as you would have got from the work of some of the clubs or societies for which you have not time.

Some Cookery Suggestions

WHEN EGGPLANT IS EATEN.

EGGPLANT may be purchased in the markets at reasonable prices and adds savor and variety to the winter bill of fare. Of the many ways of cooking the vegetable the following are especially good:

Eggplant Stuffed.—Cut the plant in two parts lengthwise and scoop out the meat, leaving the shells about one-half inch thick. Chop the pulp fine, season with salt and pepper, add one tablespoonful of butter and cook in frying pan for ten minutes, stirring well; then add one-half cupful of water and one cupful of breadcrumbs. Fill the shells with the mixture and spread surface with breadcrumbs. Place the two pieces of eggplant in a baking dish half full with hot water and bake one hour.

A Luncheon Dish.

Eggplant and Mutton.—Take a two pound eggplant, a pound of mutton, two medium sized onions, one tablespoonful butter, two ripe tomatoes, two cupfuls of broth and salt and pepper. Cut the eggplant into pieces the size of an egg and fry for five or ten minutes in butter. Cut up the meat into pieces and fry in its own fat, with the onions chopped in with it. When this is done put the eggplant with the meat, and after adding the tomatoes cut in small pieces, season the whole to taste and place either over a slow fire or in a moderate oven, adding the broth gradually.

Cooked With Cheese.

Eggplant With Peppers.—Take an eggplant and cut it into dice. Slice green peppers into thick rings. Now fry each separately in skillet, using half lard and butter. Have a baking dish or casserole ready, and fill alternately first with eggplant, then slices of pepper, each of which should be almost cooked, but not mushy. Sprinkle each layer with salt and pepper and grated Parmesan cheese. Have the last layer peppers and sprinkle with breadcrumbs. Bake for fifteen minutes in hot oven. When available, tomatoes may be used instead of peppers.

Fried and Baked.

Scalloped Eggplant.—Peel an eggplant, cut in slices half an inch thick; lay in cold water for half an hour. Dry, dip in beaten egg, then in cracker dust and fry in deep fat to a good brown. Cook together two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour until they blend. Pour on them a pint of milk and stir until you have a smooth sauce. Add to this two heaping tablespoonfuls of grated cheese and cook until this has melted. Pour enough of this into a buttered pudding dish to cover the bottom; arrange on it a layer of eggplant, sprinkle over a little grated cheese and pour in more sauce. Continue in this way until the materials are used, making the last layer sauce. Strew with crumbs and grated cheese; bake covered half an hour. Uncover and brown.

Daddy's Bedtime Story

Polly Was The Heroine Of the Fire.

Polly Shrieked at the Top of Her Lungs.

JACK and Evelyn had been to see a friend of theirs who owned a parrot. The parrot, whose name, of course, was Polly, had completely fascinated them. She could dance when a tune was whistled, she took sugar from her mistress' mouth, and she could talk. She could said: "Pretty Polly." "Polly, want a cracker?" "Polly hungry." "Polly, want a bite?"

So when daddy came home that evening, of course Jack and Evelyn told him all about the parrot, and later he told them a story about a parrot.

"In a small town," said daddy, "a little girl named Alice owned a pet parrot who was very clever. This parrot could talk a great deal and say ever so much more than just 'Polly, want a cracker?' This Polly could whistle, too, most beautifully and could do a great, great many wonderful tricks. Of course, as you can imagine, Alice was very proud of her parrot, and Polly was devoted to Alice.

"One night when every one in the town was fast asleep a fire broke out in a deserted barn, and, as there was a high wind, it began to spread. The house nearest the fire was the one in which Alice lived, and Polly Parrot was the first to smell the smoke. She shrieked at the top of her lungs, 'Fire, fire!' and the whole household came rushing downstairs and found the library, where Polly was, full of smoke.

"They put on coats and, grabbing Polly's cage, rushed out of the house as quickly as they could, for big flames were beginning to break through on all sides. Alice's daddy rushed off to ring the fire bell, while Alice, carrying her Polly Parrot, and her mother followed along. Soon every one in the town was up and out in the street. The firemen managed to keep the fire from spreading, and they saved all the valuable things in Alice's home.

"As every one stood around watching the firemen throwing the water on the fire Polly kept calling out: 'It's pretty hot! It's pretty hot! I tell you it's pretty hot!' That amused every one, so that it kept up their spirits during the awful fire.

"At last, however, the firemen succeeded in putting the fire out, and one of the neighbors invited Alice and her mother and daddy to stay at her house and, of course, Polly Parrot went along too.

"Polly was now not only considered a very clever bird, but a real heroine for she had awakened Alice and her family and saved their lives and also the lives of many others, for with such a wind many houses would have gone had not the firemen been called out just when they were.

"Instead of being vain about it Polly Parrot acted as though her one pride was that Alice was more devoted to her than ever."

MOTHERS' WORK

Conducted by the Plainfield Mothers' Association. Every Thursday

Contributing Staff.

Mrs. G. Stuart Simons, Mrs. Jos. Smith, Mrs. Herbert Parker.

The Daily Press for Thursdays containing the column on Mother's Work will be sent by mail for one dollar a year, in advance.

The Third International Congress on the Welfare of the Child will be held in Washington, D. C., April 22 and 27 inclusive, under the auspices of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations. The program in full is published in the February number of The Child Welfare Magazine and promises to be of unusual interest. Some of the sub topics are as follows: Education for Home Making, Knowledge Required by Wife and Husband, Adjustment of Expenses to Income, Furnishing the Home, Parents' Responsibility in Training Children for Self-support, for Marriage, for Home Making, for Good Citizenship. Delegates will be present from many parts of the world. It is hoped that Plainfield will send, as usual, the full quota of delegates allowed.

The Sun's School, College and Camp Bureau printed in last Sunday's Sun a letter from Lindsay Best, principal of the Plainfield High School in which he answers Dr. Dana's criticism of the American Schoolboy at the last meeting of the Schoolmasters' Association. Two charges against the efficiency of our secondary school system were made by Dr. Dana, first that the work it requires of its pupils is not intensive enough to cultivate the habit of concentration and to develop robust mental power, second that there is not time enough devoted to secondary school work during the day and year. Mr. Best states he is willing to match the boys of the graduating class of his school against a group of pupils of the same age in the schools of any other country in initiative power in acquiring information and power in using the information acquired also that the private schoolboy, presumably the son of well-to-do parents might possibly devote considerably more time to book work, though even he might profit from a greater leisure at meal time, a longer sleeping period, opportunity to cultivate the social graces through association with others outside the school room and a little reading for pleasure, but the majority of the children in secondary schools are not children of well-to-do homes. They have work to do, regular duties about the house, getting to school and back again, visiting with the family and (more than most people realize) work necessary to earn the little pocket money a boy must have and even to help support the family. All these things leave little of the two extra hours of the school day. Saturday and vacation days are for many boys the occasions of special opportunity for work. Mr. Best concludes his excellent defense of the American schoolboy by stating that we need further evidence to convince us that the school day and year should be lengthened and that puplis in our secondary schools are as universally a spineless lot as he represents them to be.

The Luncheon Committee of the Mothers' Association will meet each Tuesday morning at the home of the president, Mrs. C. G. Munro, to complete plans for the extension of the lunches in other schools and to arrange for a big luncheon to be given in the near future for the purpose of raising money for the extension work and to finance the lunches now served in the Bryant School for the remainder of the year. Contributions of jelly and canned fruit will be greatly appreciated if sent to the Bryant School. Visitors welcome.

Mrs. William M. Sandford, chairman of the State Parent-Teacher Extension Committee, has arranged a council of the local presidents of the Parent-Teacher Associations of Plainfield to plan for a Union Parent Teacher meeting to be held the first Thursday that the new auditorium of the High School is available also to visit every activity in the city relating to Child Welfare, and to discuss plans for the co-operation of the association.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Falsehood Under the Palms.

"WELL, it seems he'd bought a ticket for that loud colored country where I met him and come down there to forget. 'I could buy the ticket,' he said, 'as soon as I learned how to pronounce the name of this town. But I can't forget. I've tried. It's hopeless.' And he sat there looking like a man whose best friend had died owing him money. I won't go into his emotions. Mr. Bland, up at the inn, is suffering them at the present moment, I'm told. They are unimportant; I'll hurry on to the lie. I simply say he was sorrowful, and it seemed to me a crime, what with the sun so bright and the sea so blue and the world so full of a number of things. Yes, it certainly was a crime, and I decided he had to be cheered up at any cost. How? I thought awhile, gazing up at the sky, and then it came to me—the lie—the great, glorious lie—and I told it."

The hermit looked in defiance round the listening circle.

"'You're chock full of sorrow now,' I said to McMann, 'but it won't last long.' He shook his head. 'Nonsense,' I told him. 'Look at me. Do you see me doing a heart bowed down act under the palms?' And he couldn't, the lie unfolding itself in such splendor to me. 'You?' he asked. 'Me,' I said. 'Ten years ago I was where you are today. A woman had spoken to me as Mabel—or Marie—or what was it?—spoke to you.'

"I could see I had the boy interested. I unfolded my story as it occurred to me at the moment. 'Yes,' said I, 'ten years ago I saw her first. Dancing as a butterfly dances from flower to flower, dancing on the stage—a fairy sprite—I loved her, worshiped her. It could never be. There in the dark of the wings she told me so. And she shed a tear—a sweet tear of sorrow at parting.

"'I went to my room,' I told McMann, 'with a lot of time tables and steamship books—bright red books; the color came off on my eager hands. I picked out a country and sailed away. Like you, I thought I could never be happy, never even smile again. Look at me.'

"He looked. I guess my face radiated bliss. The idea was so lovely. He was impressed—I could see it. 'I'm supremely happy,' I told him. 'I am my own master. I wander where I will. No woman tells me my hour for going out or my hour for coming in. I wander. For company I have her picture—as I saw her last—with twinkling feet that never touched earth. As the spirit moves I go. You can move the memory of a woman in a flash, my boy, but it takes two months to get the real article started, and then, like as not, she's forgot everything of importance. Ever thought of that? You should. You're going to be as happy as I am. Study me. Reflect.' I waved my carpet slippered feet toward the palms. I had certainly made an impression on Alexander McMann.

"As we walked back over the sands and grass grown streets to the hotel his heart got away from that cupid's lunch counter, and he was almost cheerful. I was gay to the last, but as I parted from him my own heart sank. I knew I had to go back to her and that she would probably give me a scolding about the carpet slippers. I parted from McMann with a last word of cheer. Then I went to the ship—to her, my wife. That was the lie, you understand. She traveled everywhere with me. She never trusted me.

"We were due to sail that night, and I was glad, for I worried some over what I had done. Suppose my wife and Alexander McMann should meet. An estimable woman, but large, determined, but little suggesting the butterfly of the footlights I married long before. We had a bad session over the carpet slippers. The boat was ready to sail when McMann came aboard. He carried a bag, and his face shone.

"'She's sent for me,' he said. 'Marie wants me. I got a letter from my brother. I'll blow into Kansas like a cyclone and claim her.'

"I was paralyzed. At that minute a large black figure appeared on deck. It headed for me. 'Jake,' it says, 'you've sat up long enough. Go below now.'

"McMann's face was terrible. I saw it was all up. 'I lied, McMann,' I explained. 'The idea just came to me, it fascinated me, and I lied. She did turn me down—there in the wings. And she shed that tear I spoke of too. But when I was looking over the railroad folders she sent for me. I went—on the wings of love. It was two blocks, but I went on the wings of love. We've been married twenty years. Forgive me, McMann.'

"McMann turned around. He picked up the bag. I asked where he was going. 'Ashore,' he said, 'to think. I may go back to Kansas City—I may. But I'll just think a bit first.' And he climbed into the ship's boat. I never saw him again."

The hermit paused and gazed dreamily into space.

"That," he said, "was my one great lie, my masterpiece. A year afterward I came up here on the mountain to be a hermit."

"As a result of it?" asked Miss Norton.

"Yes," answered Mr. Peters, "I told the story to a friend. I thought he was a friend. So he was, but married. My wife got to hear of it. 'So you denied my existence?' she said. 'As a joke,' I told her. 'The joke's on you,' she says. 'That was the end. She went her way, and I went mine. I'd just unanimously gone her way so long I was a little dazed at first with my freedom. After fighting for a living alone for a time I came up here. It's cheap. I get the solitude I need for my book. Not long ago I heard I could go back to her if I apologized."

"Stick to your guns," advised Mr. Max.

Miss Norton rose and stood before Mr. Peters. She fixed him with her eyes—eyes into which no man could gaze and go his way unmoved.

"Just one tiny day," she pleaded.

Mr. Peters sighed. He rose.

"I'm a fool," he said. "I can't help it. I'll take chances on another day though nobody knows where it'll lead.

"Brooklyn, maybe," whispered Lou Max to Magee in mach horror.

The hermit doffed his coat, attended to a few household duties and led the delegation outside. Docilely he locked the door of his shack. The four started down the mountain.

"Back to Baldpate with our cook," said Mr. Magee into the girl's ear. "I know how Caesar felt when he rode through Rome with his ex foe festooned about his chariot wheels."

Mr. Max again chose the rear, triumphantly escorting Mr. Peters. A Mr. Magee and the girl swung into the lead the former was moved to recur to the topic he had handled so amatorially a short time before.

"I'll make you believe in me yet," he said.

She did not turn her head.

"The moment we reach the inn," he went on, "I shall come to you with the package of money in my hand. Then you'll believe I want to help you. Tell me you'll believe then."

"Very likely I shall," answered the girl without interest. "If you really do intend to give me that money no one must know about it."

"No one shall know," he answered "but you and me."

They walked on in silence. Then shyly the girl turned her head. Oh, most assuredly she was desirable. Clumsy as had been his declaration, Mr. Magee resolved to stick to it through eternity.

"I'm sorry I spoke as I did," she said. "Will you forgive me?"

"Forgive you?" he cried. "Why, I—"

"And now," she interrupted, "let us talk of other things—of ships and shoes and sealing wax—"

"All the topics in the world," he replied, "can lead to but one with me—"

"Ships?" asked the girl.

"For honeymoons," he suggested.

"Shoes?"

"In some circles of society I believe they are flung at bridal parties."

"And sealing wax?"

"On the license, isn't it?" he queried.

They were then at the great front door of Baldpate inn.

Inside before the office fire, Miss Thornhill read a magazine in the indolent fashion so much affected at Baldpate inn during the heated term, while the mayor of Reuton chatted amiably with the ponderously coy Mrs. Norton. Into this circle burst the envoys to the hermitage, flushed, energetic, snow-flaked.

"Hail to the chef who in triumph advances!" cried Mr. Magee.

Myra Thornhill laid down her magazine and fixed her great black eyes upon the radiant girl in corduroy.

"And was the walk in the morning air," she asked, "all you expected?"

"All and much more," laughed Miss Norton, mischievously regarding the man who had babbled to her of love on the mountain. "By the way, enjoy Mr. Peters while you can. He's back for just one day."

"Eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow the cook leaves, as the fellow says," supplemented Mr. Max, removing his overcoat.

"How about a quick lunch, Peters?" inquired Magee.

"Out of what, I'd like to know," put in Mrs. Norton. "Not a thing in the house to eat. Just like a man."

"You didn't look in the right place, ma'am," replied Mr. Peters, with relish. "I got supplies for a couple of days in the kitchen."

"Well, what's the sense in hiding 'em?" the large lady inquired.

"It ain't hiding—it's system," explained Mr. Peters. "Something women don't understand." He came close to Mr. Magee and whispered low. "You didn't want me there was another of 'em."

"The last, on my word of honor," Magee told him.

"The last," sneered Mr. Peters. "There isn't any last up here." And with a sidelong glance at the new Eve in his mountain Eden he turned away to the kitchen.

"Now," whispered the girl to Miss Norton, "I'll get you that package. I'll prove that it was for you I fought and bled the mayor of Reuton. Watch for our chance. When I see you again I'll have it in my pocket."

"You mustn't fail me," she replied. "It means so much."

Mr. Magee started for the stairs. Between him and them loomed suddenly the great bulk of Mr. Cargan. His hard menacing eyes looked full into Magee's.

"I want to speak to you, young fellow," he remarked.

"I'm flattered," said Magee, "that you find my company so enchanting. In ten minutes I'll be ready for another interview."

"You're ready now," answered the mayor, "even if you don't know it. I've been trying to dope you out, and I think I've got you. I've seen your kind before. Every few months one of 'em breezes into Reuton, spends a whole day talking to a few rats I've had to exterminate from politics and then flies back to New York with a ten page story of my vicious career all ready for the linotypers. Yes, sir, I got you. You write sweet things for the magazines."

"Think so?" inquired Magee.

"It will be a $200,000 story."

Cargan's scalp again, are you? I thought that now, seeing stories on the corruption of the courts is so plentiful, you'd let the same of the city halls alone for awhile. But—well, I guess I'm what you guys call good copy. Big, brutal, uneducated, picturesque—you see I read them stories myself. How long will the American public stand being ruled by a man like this, when it might be authorizing pretty boys with kid gloves to get next to the good things? That's the dope, ain't it—the old dope of the reform gang, the ballyhoo of the bunch that can't let the existing order stand? Don't worry. I ain't going to get started on that again. But I want to talk to you serious—like a father. There was a young fellow like you once—"

"Like me?"

"Exactly. He was out working on long hours and short pay for the reform gang, and he happened to get hold of something that a man I knew—a man high up in public office—wanted and wanted bad. The young fellow was going to get $200 for the article he was writing. My friend offered him $20,000 to call it off. What'd the young fellow do?"

"Wrote the article, of course," said Magee.

"Now—now," reproved Cargan. "That remark don't fit in with the estimate I've made of you. I think you're a smart boy. Don't disappoint me. This young fellow I speak of—he was smart, all right. He thought it over, Magee, the same as you're going to do. 'You're on,' says this lad and added five figures to his roll as easy as we'd add a nickel. He had brains, that guy."

"And no conscience," commented Magee.

"Conscience," said Mr. Cargan, "ain't worth much except as an excuse for a man that hasn't made good to give his wife. How much did you say you was going to get for this article?"

Mr. Magee looked him coolly in the eye.

"If it's ever written," he said, "it will be a $200,000 story."

"There ain't anything like that in it for you," replied the mayor. "Think over what I've told you."

"I'm afraid," smiled Magee, "I'm too busy to think."

He again crossed the office floor to the stairway. Before the fire sat the girl of the station, her big eyes upon him pleadingly. With a reassuring smile in her direction, he darted up the stairs.

"And now," he thought as he closed and locked the door of No. 7 behind him, "for the swag. So Cargan would give $20,000 for that little package. I don't blame him."

He knelt by the fireplace and dug up the brick under which lay the package so dear to many hearts on Baldpate mountain.

"I might have known," he muttered.

For the money was gone. He dug up several of the bricks and rummaged about beneath them. No use. The fat little bundle of bills had flown. Only an ugly hole gaped up at him.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

This plain, quickly made little gown (7267) will be found very comfortable later in the season, when to be cool is the thing most desired.

Nainsook or cotton crepe are both suitable and dainty for a garment of this kind. Cotton crepe is favored for its washing qualities and low price; it is quite a fad to use it in blue, pink and flowered designs for underwear. Although pure white has ever been most favored for this use, these delicate colors have lately been adopted by many dainty women.

An edging of cluny lace is effective if the gown is made of the crepe; when nainsook or linen is used a hand embroidered design across the front is pleasing for trimming or insertions of Valenciennes lace.

The pattern is cut in 4 sizes; 32 to 44.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, measuring over the fullest part of the bust for dimensions.

It may be obtained by filling out the coupon and enclosing 15 cents in stamps or coin to the Pattern Department of this paper.

LITTLE TALKS BY THE WANT AD MAN

Copyright, 1913, The Int. Syndicate, Baltimore.

No. 59.

"I AM FOR the daily newspapers strongly because I appreciate the wonderful vitality of their immense circulation," said President David L. Taylor, of the Taylor-Critchfield Advertising Company, at the banquet in his honor in Chicago. "The daily newspaper is a great and quick influence on the public mind. Being the carrier of everyday news, in which we are all interested, the advertising it contains naturally becomes a part of the news that it contains."

The Classified, or Want Ad. columns are as interesting in their way as are the news columns. I know folks who read the Want Ads. as regularly as they read what's going on in the City Hall or the details of the football game or the hundred and one news items of current interest.

That is because there is in the Want Ads. what psychologists term "human interest." And that high-sounding quality is nothing more nor less than a broad interest that appeals to Tom and Dick and Harry—to you and to me—because we are all human beings and are interested in other human beings.

In the Classified columns there are printed, each day, the little business stories of the man who wants to buy or the man who wants to sell—the woman who wants a domestic—the domestic who seeks employment—the man who has lost or found something—the people who are looking for situations—the employer who desire competent help—the man with a business chance to offer to his fellow-men—rooming and boarding accommodations—and so on through all of the many classifications that reflect the WANTS of the people.

"The daily newspaper is a great and quick influence on the public mind." And no section of a really good newspaper is quite so appealing in human interest to the great mass of readers as are the Classified columns, or WANT ADS.

By the way, have you read the Want Ads. in today's paper?

LINCOLN'S IDEALS THEME OF SPEECH

Former Governor Fort to Men's Club of Crescent Avenue Church.

GREATEST AMERICAN

Dinner Attended by Sixty Men—Former Senator E. R. Ackerman, Dr. B. VanD. Hedges, G. P. Mellick and Rev. F. L. Greene Also Speak.

Lincoln was the subject of an address made last night by former Governor J. Franklin Fort, at a dinner of the Men's Club of the Crescent Avenue church. About sixty men of the club and their guests were present, and following the address, a business meeting was held at which it was decided to hold another dinner before the present winter's activities were concluded. Dr. William D. Murray acted as toastmaster.

In his remarks former Governor Fort said:

"The life of Abraham Lincoln began in poverty and ended in tragedy. Between the beginning and the ending, notwithstanding all its handicaps, his success was phenomenal.

"Reviewing it historically, it seems an inspired life. In the world's history there is no parallel. It was asked concerning the master: 'How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?' In studying the life of Lincoln, the first wonder is, 'How did this man learn?' All his schooling, fitful and intermittent, did not exceed a year and this before he was nine years of age; beyond this the knowledge he possessed he gathered for himself. And yet, he was, at an early age, apparently accurately familiar with the history of his country and its laws and constitution. His knowledge of the Holy Scriptures was also markedly exhibited in all his writings and public addresses. His early environment was anything but helpful to education. Its tendency was, naturally, in the opposite direction. He came of the humblest walks of life, as he himself declared of 'undistinguished families—second families, perhaps,' as he put it. His companions in youth were no better circumstanced than he. Yet, amid all this, he lived a life of sobriety, industry, and marked integrity, and through it all there shone a high sense of public honor and duty.

"The last one hundred years of the history of this Republic have been the most wonderful in results, that the world has ever known.

"When Abraham Lincoln was born Thomas Jefferson was President of the United States, and James Madison, the fourth President of the Republic, was about to enter into that office. At the time the population of the United States was not seven millions and the frontier of the country was East of the Mississippi. Not a railroad or steamboat existed and electricity was not even a dream. President Jefferson had just concluded the Louisiana purchase and the line of 54-40 or fight had not yet been settled and the great West beyond the Mississippi guaranteed to the States. The second war with Great Britain was unfought. There had been just twenty years of government under the Constitution of 1787 when Abraham Lincoln first saw the light of day. He was born at a time when the living issues, inspired by love of liberty and proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence, were still fresh in the minds and heard in the talk, of the men who had made this Republic possible.

"Washington had been dead less than ten years and Jefferson lived until Lincoln was seventeen years of age. He grew to manhood midst the fierce contests of the Federalists and Whigs; and, in early manhood, witnessed the strife over the Missouri compromise measures, the Mexican War and later the Kansas border wars—himself taking high ground against the extension of slavery into the territories. He drank in liberty and the love of his fellow men from his earliest moments, and it grew with his growth and strengthened with his strength until he was called hence as his country's martyr.

"He was largely a man of one purpose, not to say one idea. He was something of a Cromwell, without his hatreds. His frontier life was lonely, and necessarily promotive of independence, self-reliance and liberty. It was equally conducive to democracy in government, and close touch with the people. His growth into manhood had no class prejudice, and, being close to nature, the very air he breathed was promotive of the belief that all men were created equal. There was nothing but Equality of all men, at Pigeon Creek, Indiana, and New Salem, Illinois. That one man could enslave another, was abhorant to every sense of justice of those frontier people. The color of a man's skin was not a criterion of superiority among the hardy pioneers of the Western civilization of this Republic from 1830 to 1850.

"He grew up amidst surroundings and influences to strengthen and con-

THOMAS J. HUGHES MAY GET THE JOB

Recommended by Senator James E. Martine as Income Tax Collector.

Following the refusal of John F. Zerega to accept the appointment of income tax collector, Senator James E. Martine yesterday recommended Thomas J. Hughes, of East Second street, for the political plum. The recommendation of Senator Martine was endorsed by Representative William E. Tuttle, Jr., of Westfield, and President Wilson will probably appoint the Plainfield man.

Mr. Hughes, when appointed, will serve in the Fifth district, with headquarters in Newark and the annual salary is $1,200. Mr. Hughes has been a life long resident of Plainfield and is well known locally. He was elected to the small Board of Freeholders recently but the Board was abolished before he had an opportunity to serve and he was afterwards appointed as special tax commissioner by Mayor Percy H. Stewart. Mr. Hughes was one of the members of the Board of Assessors selected by Mayor Stewart last month.

NONPAREIL SOCIAL CLUB GIVES MINSTREL SHOW

Members of the Nonpareil Social Club, a colored organization of this city, gave a minstrel show, last night, at the club rooms on St. Mary's avenue. Eighteen of the club members participated in an unusually good musical program. The interlocutor was Verona Marcellus and the six end men were Edmund Ford, Junius Smith, Leslie Kingslow, John Taylor, Eugene Hill and George Jackson.

The minstrel performance was largely attended and standing room was at a premium before the show began. The tenor solo, "You've Got My Mother's Big Blue Eyes," of Eugene Hill, was one of the hits of the evening, as was the singing of "Under the Chicken Tree," by Junius Smith. Leslie Kingslow sang "Oh, That International Rag," and there were numerous other singers heard, all of whom received hearty applause.

Mr. Tinker is now engaged in work under the auspices of the City Missions of New York, being superintendent in charge of the immigration department at Ellis Island, where he has an unusual opportunity to study true conditions. The public is invited to hear him speak on Monday.

The Epworth League of the M. E. church, Scotch Plains, will hold a valentine sociable in Meyer's Hall that place, tonight. The league of the Westfield church has been invited to attend. RECOGNIZES SOCIETY AS CHRISTIAN BODY

Formal recognition of the Mary E. Wilson Memorial church, which was organized at Watchung on Thursday evening, February 5, was taken at the meeting of the Plainfield Ministers' Association held at the Y. M. C. A., yesterday afternoon, the local ministers not only pledging their support and co-operation, but commends it to the fellowship of all Christian churches, through the following resolution which was adopted unanimously:

"Whereas, at the meeting of the congregation of the Mary E. Wilson Memorial Chapel, held on Thursday evening, February 5, 1914, attended by three ministers of this body, preliminary steps were taken for the organization of this Christian society into a union church to be known as the Mary E. Wilson Memorial Union Church of Watchung, and said organization having adopted as its confession of faith and basis of church membership, the articles of Christian faith as contained in that old creed of Christendom, known as the Apostles' Creed.

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the Ministers' Association of Plainfield, New Jersey, heartily approve of the action taken, recognize this society as a Christian church, commend them to our Christian fellowship and the fellowship of all Christian churches, and pray that God's blessing may continuously be manifest in the salvation of souls, and in the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom. Done at the meeting of Plainfield Ministers' Association held on Thursday, February 12, 1914."

PLAN TO STOP SPEEDING OF AUTOS

North Plainfield Township Committee Appoints Special Policemen.

The North Plainfield Township Committee met in the Improvement Society Hall yesterday and following the disposition of much routine business it received plans from the N. Y. Telephone Company of new work in the township which were approved and passed. A petition was received from the residents of upper Watchung to have that section of the avenue accepted by the township. This was referred to a committee for further investigation and the matter will be disposed of at the next meeting.

There will be sent to each taxpayer the annual township report. These circulars will be sent out immediately. This circular also contains a copy of the assessor's duplicate. Mr. Anderson's suggestion that future meetings of the Committee be held in the evening was turned down on the grounds that from experience of the school board which holds evening sessions there was not as much public interest as in the day sessions and further that it would be inconvenient owing to the lack of transportation for people in the sections other than Watchung.

Elmer Archibold was appointed special policeman for the Scotch Plains' section and "speed limit" signs were ordered to protect school children in front of the public schools. A traffic post at Watchung will be installed on which a light will be placed to guide drivers of vehicles after dark. The Board of Health committee communicated with Albert Rajotte in regard to the removal of clay from his brick-yard along Green brook and also gave instructions regarding the dumping of cesspool refuse on the land lying along and draining into Greenbrook. Mr. Anderson was given authority to represent the Township Committee in Legislative matters at Trenton pertaining to the interest of the township.

SCHILLER BROS. NOT TO MOVE.

The firm of Schiller Brothers, of 320 West Front street, has no intention of removing from Plainfield. There has been a rumor that the firm intended going elsewhere. This is untrue. The firm is engaged in making women's muslin underwear and has been in business in this city for nearly nine years, with success. Recently improvements have been made to the plant of the firm and additional operators are now employed. Attention is called to the firm's advertisement in today's Press.

PARTY FOR MISS WEISS.

Mrs. Henry Weiss, of 12 Regent street, the borough, entertained eight young people yesterday afternoon in honor of her daughter, Mildred. The guests enjoyed a musical program, played games and had numerous other social activities from 2 until 5 o'clock.

WILL MAKE HOUSE TO HOUSE INSPECTION

To Stop Waste of Water Which is Causing Serious Trouble at Sewage Beds.

Plainfield householders have been using so much water to prevent their pipes from freezing that the big main sewer has been overloaded, causing the manhole at West End avenue and West Front street to overflod. Normally, from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 gallons of water daily passes through this main sewer. Through the enormous waste of water by householders in cold weather this amount is increased, it was said today, to as much as 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 gallons.

With a view of stopping unnecessary waste of city water, officials have decided to make a house to house inspection. They will ascertain where the greatest waste occurs. Those who wantonly waste water will be prosecuted, it was said today. There is no intention on the part of the water company officials to interfere with those users of water who allow small streams to trickle from faucets during cold weather. What is aimed at is to reach those who let great quantities go to waste. The manhole at West Front street and West End avenue overflowed yesterday and today.

The report and plans recently submitted by George Fuller, the sanitary engineer, call for the construction of a new main sewer in West Third street. This will, it is said, afford relief to the present sewer in West Front street.

Detective-Sergeant Flynn, of the local police force, is on the trail of one Edward L. Riley, to whom he will break the news of a $30,000 bequest left him recently by his father, Thomas Riley, (of Waterloo, Va. In a despatch received here today it was stated that the heir until recently lived in this city but efforts to locate the man have been futile up to the present time.

The Riley in question is the only heir of Thomas Riley and when found will receive a farm worth $10,000 and cash amounting to $20,000. No one could be located here today who had any knowledge of such a person living hereabouts and Flynn will welcome any information that may be forthcoming concerning the missing man.

CAMP FIRE GIRLS GUESTS AT BENEFIT LUNCHEON

The members of the Heowanka Tribe of Camp Fire Girls, of the North Plainfield High School, served a delightful luncheon in the drawing rooms of the manual training building yesterday afternoon. Fifty people were served, including members of the faculty, students and mothers. The tables were appropriately decorated with American flags and the walls were adorned with camp fire pictures and the club colors. The lunch, which was served in courses was taken care of by the members of the club.

The dining room was in charge of Miss Eva Terry, who is at the head of this branch of the organization, while the kitchen work was supervised by Miss Bertha Spencer, the domestic science teacher. Many of the teachers and pupils of the grades were also present. The proceeds will be used for camping purposes next summer. The following girls acted as waitresses: Lois Peck, Aline Giddes, Dorothy Martin, Edna Green, Lucy Douglas, Ann Hull, Mary O'Connor, Bertha Keller, Bertha Bodine, Margaret Ewart, Marielle Dunham, Margaret Vossler and Marion Chandler.

VAN ARSDALE'S OPEN TODAY.

Through a mistake in the composing room of the Daily Press, M. C. VanArsdale's advertisement which read "Store will be closed tomorrow at noon" and which appeared in Wednesday's paper, referring to Lincoln's Birthday, was not changed in last night's paper. Thus the impression was given that the store will be closed today. This, of course is an error, and the store is open as usual all day today.

BAD CHIMNEY FIRE.

A dangerous chimney fire was discovered in the home of Charles A. Drake, 745 West Third street this morning and the No. 3 engine company responded to a still alarm. Four extinguishers were used on the fire before it was finally extinguished.

THE TEMPERATURE.

The temperature report from The State Trust Company today is as follows: 9 a. m., 9 degrees; 11 a. m., 17 degrees; 1 p. m., 21 degrees.

RUSHMORE SAYS HE IS NOT SURPRISED

When Asked to Comment on the Suit Threatened Against the Boro.

Councilman Edmund Rushmore declared today, when asked to comment upon the article published in The Daily Press, yesterday, regarding the threatened suit against the borough because of the closing of West End avenue, that he was not at all surprised at the announcement.

"Attempts," he said, "have frequently been made to harrass and annoy Mayor Robert Clark, Jr., and his administration. Certain people who are opposed to him have tried to discredit him whenever the opportunity arose.

"We have never had a Mayor who has served the people better or one who has devoted more time and thought to the office than has Mayor Clark and I do not think that there is any question but that the majority of the people of the borough appreciate this fact.

"As regards the criticism on the part of certain citizens to myself, that I do not mind, for I have at all times worked for the interests of the borough. So long as I am a member of the Council I shall continue to do so and that regardless of any other faction.

"I do not care to comment on the reported wager of William L. Smalley that I could never be elected to office again. That speaks for itself. Any public official who has the courage of his convictions and stands for what is right is bound to make enemies. I do not regret that I have done so, for to my mind a man is known by his enemies."

There will be nine lectures, divided into three parts, namely, "The Literature of the Bible," which will be assigned to Rev. Dr. Hughes E. W. Fosbroke, of Cambridge; "The Wisdom Books," upon which Rev. George Hodges, D. D., D. C. L., of Cambridge, and "The Story of Progress in the New Testament," upon which Rev. Dr. H. P. Nichols, of New York, will speak. The dates and subjects of the lectures are as follows:

MISS SHOTWELL BRIDE OF H. E. GRAY

Announcement of Marriage Performed in New York a Surprise to Friends.

Announcement was made today of the marriage of Herbert E. Gray, son of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Gray, of East Second street, and Miss Adrinne Shotwell, formerly of Philadelphia, but more recently of New York. The couple was married Wednesday evening by Rev. Dr. Thomas R. Slicer, at his home on Thirty-eighth street, New York. While the marriage was a surprise to the friends of the couple, it was known by the relatives that the ceremony was about to take place.

Mr. and Mrs. Gray spent yesterday with the parents of the groom in this city, receiving their congratulations as well as those of many friends. They returned to New York last night, where they will live.

The bride has frequently visited in Plainfield, where she has a number of friends. Mr. Gray is a native of Plainfield, where he attended the local public schools. For the past ten years he has held a responsible position with the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company in its New York offices. During his residence here Mr. Gray was more or less prominent in social affairs and popular in a wide circle of acquaintances.

RAISED THE ODDS ON ELECTION OF RUSHMORE

William L. Smalley, who was reported by The Daily Press of yesterday, to have offered to wager $100 to $20 with a friend some time ago that Councilman Edmund Rushmore could never again be elected to office in the borough, said today that his offer was a far more liberal one. His statement, he declared, was that he would be willing to wager the sum of $100 to $1 that Councilman Rushmore could never be elected to office in the borough again.

Mr. Smalley said that he believed, in justice to the gentleman in question, the correction as to the real odds offered against his prospective chance of office-holding should be made. Thus far no one, it is said, has offered to put up the small amount of money necessary to cover Mr. Smalley's bet.

PRAISES WILSON'S FOREIGN POLICIES

Miss Janet Richards Says That They Commend Themselves to Business Interests.

CURRENCY MEASURE

Speaker Discusses In An Interesting Way the Burnett Bill, Affairs in Japan and Sweden and English Home Rule.

Praising the actions, views and policies of President Woodrow Wilson, who, she said, was showing the world a recrudescence of eminent statesmanship, Miss Janet Richards, of Washington, in her talk yesterday afternoon at the Hartridge Auditorium, spoke interestingly of the subject, "Immigration." She declared the United States had too long a time been the dumping ground of the hoi polloi and refuse population of nearly all the nations of the world. The problem of immigration was a puzzling one, she held. Suggestion was made by the speaker that possibly it might be a good idea for this country to put up the bars and refuse for the next two years to permit any immigration to these shores. That would check the great flood of immigrants who are now pouring in from foreign lands, one and all of them seeking this land of opportunity for the most part for sordid gain.

"President Wilson's policies," said Miss Richards, "commend themselves to the business interests of this country and to thinking people generally, or else they would not so soon have been legislated into laws. The Democratic party has been able to redeem some of its pledges by the revision of the tariff, the collection of the income tax, and the currency bill, the latter establishing a system of regional banks for the use of bankers, which idea it is said will forever do away with the fear of future money panics in times of depression in the country. Within two months from the passage of the currency bill banks and trust companies must announce to the government if they desire to come into the membership ranks of such regional banks. The two months limit has not yet quite elapsed. It is provided that each regional or central bank, in order to do business, must have a paid in capital of at least $4,000,000. There is no limit to the maximum capital such an institution may have. In New York subscriptions totalled more than $20,000,000 for a regional bank.

"For the past two weeks President Wilson and the members of his cabinet have succeeded in eliminating the clause in the Burnett bill which provided for the exclusion of all Asiatic laborers from this country. It had also been proposed to keep out all Orientals who were unable to meet the United States Navy test as to stature, weight and other specifications. This idea was quickly recognized by Baron Chunda, the Japanese Ambassador to the United States, whose residence is, of course, at Washington, as a direct slap by this country at Japan. The result has been that the objectionable clause has been eliminated.

"It is now believed by many who are in close touch with the administration at Washington that even the illiteracy test which has arouse so much comment among the foreign population of the United States will be finally stricken from the immigration bill which is now pending. President Taft vetoed this measure on the ground that he deemed such a test to be impracticable. The whole question of immigration is indeed a very troublesome one."

Touching upon foreign affairs the lecturer said that Japan had to deal with a governmental crisis just now because of the openly expressed dissatisfaction regarding that country's attitude and affairs by her home people. There is also a most unusual cabinet crisis imminent in far off Sweden, she said, and in England there is a renewal of the strife over Irish militancy, threats having been made that the English will be engaged in a civil war if the Home Rule bill is not passed. The Home Rule bill is opposed by the peers of England. They compose the upper house, known as the House of Lords. The bill has twice been passed by the lower house, known as the House of Commons. Each time it has been rejected by the peers of the realm. If the bill be passed by the lower house for the third time the peers must, under the English law, ratify such action. An attempt is now being made, Miss Richards said, to have the people of England vote upon the question and the House of Lords is believed, she said, to favor a referendum. This, of course, would retard the passage of the measure. Although King George of England, in his speech from the throne, made at the opening of Parliament a few days ago, advocated the Home Rule bill, it is said that the project is not at all to his liking. It is customary for the Stirling, Feb. 13.—Conductors, brakemen, engineers and firemen conected with the Passaic and Delaware division of the Lackawanna Railroad are looking forward eagerly to the coming fruit and berry season, for the railroad has acquired a strip of land planted with fruit trees, berry bushes and grapevines, all of bearing age. The property in question has been owned by the company for some time, but it has been occupied by Mrs. Charles Ashman, who figured that long possession really made it part of her holdings. Now her dream has been shattered, for this week a section gang sent out from the company fenced off that part of the railroad's land, 40x100 feet.

TRAIN CREWS HAVE EYES ON "PRESERVE" AT STIRLING

Mrs. Ashman's property runs parallel with the line of the railroad tracks. Years ago she planted it with fruit trees and berry vines, and after awhile extended the line until she took in a strip of the company's property. The railroad officials offered no objection to the alleged usurpation of its rights until last year, when they decided to fence off that part of its land pre-empted by Mrs. Ashman. A wooden fence was built, but hardly had the railroad workmen departed from the scene when Mrs. Ashman tore it down. The railroad people took no action at that time, but last week the foreman of the section gang, G. L. Blott, received instructions from the Hoboken office to go to Stirling and put up a fence that would resist any attempt of Mrs. Ashman to tear it down.

The job was finished yesterday. The posts are of concrete, set deep in the earth and the other material is strong wire. The work cost the Lackawanna perhaps $50.

The P. D. trainmen figure that when the blackberry-raspberry-strawberry patch and the apple-peach-pear orchard begin bearing next summer there will be enough fruit to supply all their needs.

CRANFORD WOMAN ADMITS GETTING FORBIDDEN MAIL

Mrs. Grace C. Fredericks, defendant in a divorce suit brought by Herman C. Fredericks, of Cranford, yesterday, admitted at a further hearing before Vice-Chancellor Stevens that after her husband last June forbade her further association with a man named by her husband, she received souvenir postals and letters from him.

The woman admitted that she and her husband had had words over the cards, but denied that she said to him, as he had alleged:

"It it wasn't for hanging, I'd kill you."

Reading from one of the cards: "I'll see you tonight, honey," the vice-chancellor asked Mrs. Fredericks:

"How did he happen to use such an expression as that?"

"I suppose he talked like that to every one," Mrs. Fredericks answered.

"Did he see you?" the court asked.

"He may have walked by the house," said the defendant.

Mrs. Fredericks denied the authorship of an alleged incriminating letter, but said the handwriting looked like hers. She denied other offenses charged in her husband's petition.

FIFTH AVE. & FORTY-SEVENTH ST., NEW YORK

JUVENILE MUSICIANS GIVE A FINE CONCERT

An appreciative audience attended the third public concert given under the auspices of the junior Municipal Orchestra and the affair was a success that eclipsed the previous two. The juvenile musicians under the leadership of Martin A. Korff, rendered an excellent program of selected numbers and their efforts were well received by the music lovers present.

Marked improvement since the last concert was noted in the work of the players last night and the enthusiasm over the Recreation Committee's project has been aroused to a high pitch by these public exhibitions. The concert was given in the Washington School Auditorium and the orchestra was assisted by Frederick J. Hubach, who rendered a baritone solo accompanied by Mrs. Hubach at the piano.

A feature of the concert was a pleasing and impromptu address given by Mr. Hubach on Abraham Lincoln. The speaker described the home and political life of this great man and outlined incidents in his life that made him world famous.

The program:

Part One—March, Playmates, Lincoln; overture, Titania, Hildreth, Spanish serenade, Anita, Allen; cornet solo, Resignation, Cora Roma, Alfred Korff; baritone solo, The Last Man, W. H. Callott, Rev. Frederick J. Hubach, Mrs. Hubach at the piano; orchestra, The Rose Said to Me, Edwards.

Part Two—Selection, Salute to Erin, Lamotte; tone poem, Apple Blossoms, Roberts; cornet solo, selected; baritone solo, The Publican B. Vandewater; reverie, Cathedral Chimes, Arnold-Brown; march, Prince Imperial, Duble.

Miss Mary Viana and members of the Wetumpka Jolly Girls Club, of this city, enjoyed a straw ride to the home of Mrs. Adam Sacks, at Liberty Corner, on Wednesday night. Upon the arrival of the party of young people there was dancing, with Miss Hilda Story at the piano, games were played and an evening of thorough enjoyment spent by all.

BURNETT BRODZIAK SPOKE ON TRIP AROUND WORLD

Burnett Brodziak, a Boar war veteran, was the speaker at the meeting of the Men's Association of the Heavenly Rest church held in the church parlors last night, and he discussed a four and one half years' trip he made around the world while in the British navy. The speaker described the commercial life of each country which he visited and illustrated his lecture with numerous short and witty anecdotes based on the characacteristics of each nation.

Mr. Brodziak told of the lives of the people of the different countries and their chief sources of recreation and occupation. His talk was a decidedly interesting one and he kept the close attention of the men present from start to finish.

Following the talk the association enjoyed a social hour during which refreshments were served.

AMATEUR SHOW ENJOYED.

The second amateur show given by "Doc" and "Mac" at Debele's Auditorium last night, was enjoyed by a large audience. There was dancing during the evening. The show consisted of seven local acts. The award of the prize was made to Charles Davidson, Jr. He is a buck and wing dancer. The second prize was won by Patrick Honan, a harmonicalist. The third prize went to the Westfield duo, Messrs. Boyd and Lloyd. Another local act which received warm praise was that of the "Horn-em-Cows" minstrel troupe. This was a most unique performance and those who participated in the production were thought by the audience to deserve great credit for their heroic efforts to cause a laugh.

MISS CORNELIA B. PHILPOTT.

Miss Cornelia B. Philpott died this morning at her home at 36 Norwood avenue, this city. She was fifty-one years old and was a daughter of the late James and Catherine C. Philpott. Notice of funeral will be given later.

HENRY R. TOWNE PROTESTS.

(By Telegraph to The Daily Press.)

Washington, Feb. 13.—Henry R. Towne, of New York, today appeared before the House Judiciary Committee in opposition to that provision in the pending trust bills forbidding price discriminations. He said that a manufacturer should be permitted to sell or refuse to sell any customer at any price which is to his best interests. This is necessary in order to develop a market.

TURKEY SUPPER GREAT SUCCESS

Annual Affair at Warren Chapel Patronized by Nearly Four Hundred People.

The second annual turkey supper of the Missionary and Aid Society of Warren chapel was held last night. Three hundred and ninety-two partook of the feast provided by the women. It was a most enjoyable affair. Following the dinner there was an entertainment and social hour. The Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey, the pastor, made a brief address on "The Life of Lincoln." He dwelt particularly on the "martyred president's" great charity and infinite compassion as shown by his loving visits and kindly ministrations to sick and wounded soldiers and sailors during the Civil War, of both those of the Southern as well as of the Northern force.

One of the members of Warren chapel exhibited a flag, last night, that in 1865 was used in the memorial service held after Lincoln's assassination. There was also shown an old steel engraving of Lincoln.

There were orchestral selections, tenor solors by Mr. Jamieson, a flute solo by Elmer Wheeler and Miss Mary Martin gave recitations. John Richards sang a bass solo, "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," there was a violin solo by Arthur Mosher, a cornet solo by Whitney Frazee, and recitations by E. C. Smith in Irish dialect.

The decorations of the tables in the dining room were particularly attractive and symbolic of the anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birth. The red, white and blue shields used in the decorations were unique. American flags lent added color to the brilliant scene.

Those that served on the various committees were:

Rome, Italy, Feb. 13.—Charles A. Comiskey, president of the Chicago Baseball Club in the American League, who was taken suddenly ill with acute indigestion last Monday, took a turn for the worse today and is much weaker. Mr. Comiskey has not been able to take any nourishment for four days.

Comiskey went under the X-ray and was examined by Prof. Bastianelli, one of the physicians who attended J. Pierpont Morgan. The patient is under the care of Dr. John E. Jones and Prof. Underico de Luca. It was said that one of the chief causes of the attack was the drinking of a big quantity of ice water.

FORM YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH OF W. C. T. U.

Organization of a Young People's Branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, together with the election of officers, took place at a meeting held at the home of Mrs. William J. Hamilton, on East Seventh street, last night. The organization will take the place of the "Y's" and the Senior Loyal Temperance Legion, and will include both young men as well as young women. The objects of the society are to work for the passage and enforcement of prohibition laws in State and nation and to promote the cause of purity and total abstinence.

The branch starts with a membership of fourteen. These officers were elected: President, Robert B. Butler; recording secretary, Miss Mabel Cronce; corresponding secretary, Miss Edith Hamilton; treasurer, Gideon Fountain.

The vice-presidents and suuperintendents of the various departments of the work will be elected at the next meeting to be held on Thursday, March 5. The work, it is believed, will appeal to a large number of young people who have the interest of all social purity at heart and who are interested in the abolishment of the liquor traffic. It is expected that the next meeting will show a large increase in membership.

A GREAT FRATERNAL ORDER.

Local members of the Knights of Pythias are showing great interest in that substantial and well-known organization's fiftieth anniversary, which will be celebrated nationally next Thursday at Washington, where the organization was founded. One of the local organizations will celebrate the anniversary tonight, and others here and in nearby towns are planning to fittingly mark the passing of the half century mark.

An unusual feature of the celebration next Thursday in Washington will be the presence of Abraham D. Vanderveer and Edward S. Kimball, two of the first members initiated. On Thursday night, Secretary of State William J. Bryan, himself a member of the Lincoln, Nebraska, lodge, will deliver an address on "Fraternity, As Exemplified By the Knights of Pythias."

In the whole range of fraternal and beneficiary societies there is probably none that can equal the Knights of Pythias in its record of growth. Today it is the third largest organization of its kind in America, its membership being exceeded only by that of the Free Masons and the Odd Fellows.

It was on February 19, 1864, that Justus H. Rathbone, a New Yorker who was employed in one of the Government offices, called together a few of his friends to discuss the formation of a fraternal society. It was just at the close of the Civil War and the time was considered auspicious for forming such a society. The initial steps were taken and it was decided to call the order the Knights of Pythias.

The order prospered from the start. From its humble beginning it spread to every part of the United States and Canada. The total membership now exceeds 700,000. Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois have upwards of 50,000 members each. The Pythian Sisters, the women's auxiliary to the order, is organized throughout the country. The military department boasts of 20,000 members, while the insurance department has about 75,000 members who carry an aggregate of nearly $100,000,000 in insurance.

All fraternal orders do good work, but the record of the Knights of Pythias is an enviable one, and the local members are justified in manifesting their pride in the fitting manner which they have chosen.

INCOME TAX.

The questions involved in an income tax return are now being presented to all the people. The first return will be more difficult than subsequent ones, when the citizens will have become more accustomed to the requirements. An income tax return is undoubtedly a nuisance, and we wish the administration had not attempted to impose an income tax upon the country at this time. We should have much preferred to have seen this tax await some great emergency, like a foreign war, or something of that nature. Strictly speaking, it is a just tax; probably the most just of any form of taxation, because it imposes the burdens upon those best able to bear them.

The feature which exempts all who have an income under $3,000 is not inequitable. It would have been better if the tax had been imposed generally, so that it could not have been said that there was any distinction made among the citizens. If every one, having property, paid something toward the support of the government, it would quicken his or her interest in seeing that good government was maintained, and that is the ultimate ambition of every right-minded citizen. This tax may inconvenience and make hardship, but the experiment can only result in good, whether the present law stands or a modified one shall be subsequently enacted.

A Fitzgerald's Legislative Manual, the ever-present [illegible] in the time of trouble for the [illegible] publicist in New Jersey, has made its annual appearance and is bigger, better and more valuable than ever. Under the careful editing of Thomas F. Fitzgerald, dean of legislative correspondents and the best posted man on the public affairs of the State for many years back, the manual goes to the public a finished work. Year after year the number of copies is increased, but always there is a demand for these handy text books in excess of the supply. From the newspaper viewpoint, a volume of Fitzgerald's Manual and the current issue of "Who's Who In America" fortifies the editor to handle almost any question concerning the public men of the day in both State and Nation. May the Manual and its publisher continue to thrive for many years to come.

Samuel Rothberg has written the editorial for tomorrow's Press. As one of the many "live-wire" merchants in Plainfield he has prepared something that will be of interest to every person who hopes to see Plainfield thrive. "Get the Community Spirit" is his topic, and we want every reader of the Press to read what he has to say.

FOUNDER'S DAY AT PEDDIE.

Hightstown, Feb. 13.—Founder's Day, the birthday of Thomas B. Peddie, was observed yesterday at the school by a program of unusual interest. The address was delivered by Elmer Burlit Bryan, of Colgate University and the Peddie Glee and Mandolin clubs and orchestra furnished music. Thomas B. Peddie was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1808, came to America in 1833, and resided in Newark. After a number of years he had acquired a fortune, and became much interested in educational institutions. His attention was directed to the New Jersey Classical and Scientific Institute at Hightstown, which was passing through a crucial period, and was then heavily in debt. Through his aid, several times, the school was freed of debt, and became known as the Peddie Institute. The senior class held its annual promenade in the gymnasium in the evening.

CHARLES S. WHITMAN.

Assembly Still Wants Him to Head the Graft Hunt.

A new effort is to be made to induce District Attorney Charles S. Whitman of New York to become chief counsel for the assembly investigating committee which was named to probe state departments concerning which graft charges have been made. Should he accept it is likely that former State Senator Cobb D. Hinman will be named as his assistant, but if Mr. Whitman again declines Mr. Hinman will be made chief counsel of the committee. Assemblyman John L. Sullivan, chairman of the committee, will confer with Mr. Whitman.

The Rockefellers usually return to Tarrytown much earlier than this, but Mrs. Rockefeller's illness detained them this year.

BRANCHBURG FINANCES.

North Branch, Feb. 13.—The annual financial report of Branchburg Township has just been issued. Of this amount $6,929.21 was paid over to the county, $2,610.36 to the State school fund and $1,263.75 to the township treasurer. The balance in hand is $106.90.

"Look here, you swindler!" roared the owner of the suburban property to the real estate man. "When you sold me this house, didn't you say that in three months I wouldn't part with it for $10,000?"

"Certainly," said the real estate dealer calmly. "And you haven't have you?"

Ten Good Furriers Have Turned Over Their Season's Remainder of Small Furs to the Wanamaker Store Rather Than Place These Overstocks in Storage

Every first class manufacturer dislikes more than anything else to place tag ends of his stock in storage to start another year's season.

Knowing this, we communicated with the principal furriers of New York immediately after they had taken account of their stocks on February 1st.

How much stock had they on hand?

Not much. But what they had was in the way. They were willing to make large sacrifices in price in order to clear their stocks at once.

Please do not expect unlimited quantities of any of the furs. Values are far too good for that. Of some furs we have so few that we cannot even quote them. Of furs listed here we have ample quantity for those who come early.

A FUR TALK OF FACTS

If the ladies of Plainfield will visit my store and inspect my line of FURS and the prices, I am sure there would be a good many surprises. The time is near at hand when advertisements will be governed by the law to speak the truth and indeed I do wish that such was the case today. I am forced to believe that there are a good many statements made in advertisements thoughtlessly, and which today has depreciated the value of advertising, but I do want to impress upon the minds of those who read this that I am entirely dependent on my business for a livelihood, and with that purpose my success can only depend on my manner of doing business in an honest and straightforward business manner, which can be proven by those who deal with me now and have done so since the beginning of my business career.

Come in and select any set of Furs and if you find that you can buy the same thing somewhere else at a better price, I will gladly refund your money. I have a few FUR COATS left of the latest style cutaway, 45 inches long, kimono sleeves, real Pony Skin, not pieced, at 20.00

MRS. BOND TELLS HER OWN STORY

Relates Blind Senator's Attack In Washington.

SAYS GLASSES WERE BROKE

Woman Asserts She Never Gave Gore Any Cause to Make Approaches to Her—Appears Veiled on the Stand In Own Defense.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Feb. 13.—Four of the five principal witnesses in Mrs. Minnie E. Bond's suit for $50,000 damages for assault against United States Senator Gore have been examined and cross examined before District Judge George W. Clark.

Mrs. Bond took the stand when court opened and underwent an examination extending four hours. She apparently at no time contradicted herself and her memory did not fail her except in minor details.

Mrs. Bond was heavily veiled and noticeably agitated. A formal introduction during the second Oklahoma state legislature in 1909 was her first meeting with Senator Gore, she said. Just before Governor Cruce's inauguration in January, 1911, she met the blind senator at an Oklahoma City banquet. She then broached the subject of obtaining a federal position for her husband.

The next meeting, the witness said, was on March 8, 1913, in Washington, when Senator and Mrs. Gore kept "open house" for Oklahomans. This was followed by a visit to the senator's office.

"Was there anything unusual in the senator's conduct on this occasion?" asked Attorney Ross M. Lillard, Mrs. Bond's attorney.

Senator's Conduct "Unusual."

"I considered it unusual," replied the witness. "Senator Gore leaned forward to verify my statement that I had no outer wrap and remarked on the weather. Then he put his hand on the mesh bag I carried. He reached down and put his hand on my foot."

"What did you do then?"

"I left at once, stating that I did not want to monopolize his time."

Her next interview with Senator Gore, Mrs. Bond said, was in the Winston hotel, where the senator had offered to meet her when she demurred at visiting his office a second time. At the suggestion of Democratic National Committeeman James R. Jacobs, she said, she took the senator to the committeeman's room on the second floor.

She had demurred even to such a meeting, she said, unless Mr. Jacobs would come to the room also.

"I told Mr. Jacobs perhaps he didn't know Senator Gore," she explained.

Describing the scene in Jacobs' room, Mrs. Bond said that Senator Gore began talking of Bond's applications and inquired casually as to her size.

Found Her Hand and Fondled It.

The senator was sitting in a rocking chair, she on the bed, the witness said. On returning to her seat after answering the telephone, Mrs. Bond said, she found that the senator had moved nearer the bed, and as she sat down he found her hand and fondled it.

"I told the senator I was not the kind of woman he was accustomed to associate with," she continued, "and that if he had no respect for me he ought to have for his wife and children."

The senator begged her pardon and stated that Mr. Bond could not be appointed.

"I started to pass by the senator, and he tried to pull me down on his lap," Mrs. Bond went on. "I remonstrated and, I think, said I would call the police. I think perhaps at that time he begged my pardon again.

"Then he arose in a half stooping position and pushed me back on the bed. He put one hand over my mouth and nose.

"I tried to push him away. My glasses were broken in the scuffle, and Mr. Robertson broke in.

"I was crying and screaming. Mr Robertson told me to go into the bathroom. Senator Gore followed me in and tried to get me to make a statement that nothing had happened."

TO MODIFY LITERACY TEST.

Early Report and Passage of Immigration Bill Predicted.

Washington, Feb. 13.—Chairman Ellison D. Smith of the senate committee on immigration announced after a meeting of the committee that the immigration bill would be reported soon and passed by the senate, but he expected to see it amended in the committee.

The sentiment disclosed in the meeting indicated that the literacy test will be modified by the committee before the bill is reported back.

The New Typewriter OLIVER No. 7

WE ANNOUNCE AN AMAZING MODEL—The OLIVER No. 7—a typewriter of superexcellence, with automatic devices and refinements that mark the zenith of typewriter progress. A marvel of beauty, speed and easy action. Typewriting efficiency raised to the nth power.

The OLIVER No. 7 embodies all previous Oliver innovations and new self-acting devices never before seen on any typewriter. A leap in advance which places The Oliver ten years ahead of its time. So smooth in action, so light to the touch, so easy to run, that experts are amazed. A model that means to the typist delightful ease of operation.

A model that means a higher standard of tyepwriting, longer and better service.

The No. 7 is now on exhibit and sale at all Oliver Branches and Agencies throughout the United States.

The new model has more improvements, refinements and new uses than we can even enumerate here.

The "cushioned keyboard" with "anchor keys" and the new automatic features mean less work for the hands, less strain on the eyes, less manual and mental effort.

With all of these masterly mechanical improvements we have made the machine more beautiful and symmetrical. From every standpoint The OLIVER No. 7 attains superlative excellence.

Nothing you could wish for has been omitted. The new devices, refinements, improvements and conveniences found on the No. 7 represent an enormous outlay and vastly increase its value—the price has not been advanced one penny. We shall even continue in force our popular 17-Cents-a-Day purchase plan, the same as on previous Oliver models.

The OLIVER No. 7, equipped with the famous Printype, if desired, without extra charge.

You owe it to yourself to see the new machine before you buy any typewriter at any price. Note its beauty, speed and easy action, its wonderful automatic devices. Try it on any work that is ever done on typewriters. Try it on many kinds of work that no other typewriter will do.

It is a significant fact that the typewriter that introduced such epoch-making innovations as visible writing, visible reading, Printype, etc., should be the first to introduce automatic methods of operation.

ELY'S CREAM BALM OPENS CLOGGED NOSTRILS AND HEAD---CATARRH GOES

Instantly Clears Air Passages; You Breathe Freely, Nasty Discharge Stops, Head Colds and Dull Headache Vanish.

Get a small bottle anyway, just to try it. Apply a little in the nostrils and instantly your clogged nose and stopped-up air passages of the head will open; you will breathe freely, dullness and headache disappear. By morning the catarrh, cold-in-head or catarrhal sore throat will be gone.

End such misery now! Get the small bottle of "Ely's Cream Balm" at any drug store. This sweet, fragrant balm dissolves by the heat of the nostrils, penetrates and heals the inflamed, swollen membrane which lines the nose, head and throat; clears the air passages; stops nasty discharges and a feeling of cleasing, soothing relief comes immediately.

Don't lay awake tonight struggling for breath, with head stuffed, nostrils closed, hawking and blowing. Catarrh or a cold, with its running nose, foul mucous dropping into the throat, and raw dryness is distressing but truly needless.

Put your faith—just once—in "Ely's Cream Balm" and your cold or catarrh will surely disappear. Adv.

ASSASSIN SHOOTS OFFICER OF U. S.

Lieutenant Cook Wounded When Riding With Wife.

TROOPS ACTIVE ON BORDER

Hunt Huerta Allies to Prevent Breach of Neutrality Laws at Frontier—Plot Miscarried and Mexicans' Attempt to Cross Frontier is Foiled.

Vera Cruz, Feb. 13.—An attempt was made to assassinate Lieutenant Arthur B. Cook, flag lieutenant to Rear Admiral Mayo of the United States battleship Connecticut.

Lieutenant Cook, although struck by a bullet, was only slightly hurt. His assailant was not seen.

The lieutenant, accompanied by his wife and Miss Ethel McKenzie of Philadelphia, had been dining with Admiral Mayo aboard the flagship.

Returning to the landing place the party took a carriage to drive to the steamship Moro Castle, on which Mrs. Cook and Miss McKenzie were to sail.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 13.—Four troops of United States cavalry, under orders from General Scott, are hunting down the Mexicans who last night attempted to cross the Rio Grande from American soil to join the federals in violation of the laws of neutrality.

The plotters aimed at capturing a string of horses at Yaleta, about a mile and a half from the Rio Grande, and rushing them across to Mexico. The alarm was sounded at Fort Bliss about 10 o'clock last night, and on investigation it was found that about 100 automobiles, covered with canvas and apparently laden with ammunition, were headed toward the Rio Grande. The automobiles carried no lights. The United States cavalry arrived in time to prevent passage of the Rio Grande, but owing to the darkness the would be Huerta re-enforcements escaped capture.

The story, as told by the citizens of Yaleta, runs that for days past bands of Mexicans have been collecting in the village, but left the impression that they were refugees.

That the telegrams announcing the capture of Maximo Castillo and his Mexican bandit band, who were responsible for the Cumbre tunnel disaster were "manufactured" by General Villa, the rebel leader, is the charge made by Emilio Garcia, Castillo's lieutenant, according to a dispatch from Hachiti, N. M.

Garcia Is Detained.

Garcia is detained at Hachiti by United States troops. He asserts that he has private information that Castillo is recruiting his forces in northern Chihuahua to continue the campaign against Villa. General Villa himself, who is in Juarez, practically admitted today that his announcement that Castillo had been captured and executed was untrue, but he says he was deceived.

Villa had already begun his movement on Torreon a few weeks ago when the activities of the bandits caused him to halt. He sent out detachments of troops in every direction after Castillo, who seemed to be gaining recruits to his band and extending the scope and daring of his operations every week. The bandit's action in wrecking the Mexican Northwestern passenger train in the Cumbre tunnel and killing fifty-one passengers determined Villa to make no further effort toward an extension of his general campaign until the outlaws were cleaned out. His energies have been directed to this end ever since.

General Manuel Chao, the rebel governor of the state of Chihuahua, has seized four of the largest banks of northern Mexico in the name of his government, according to advices from Chihuahua city. The banks—the Banco Nacional, Banco Minero, Banco Desonora and Banco Commercio—are to be merged into one central state bank, it is said. All had been suspended for several months owing to the chaotic conditions prevailing in the state.

ROOSEVELT FOR GOVERNOR.

He'll Win, Say Leaders In New York State.

New York, Feb. 13.—Theodore Roosevelt was proposed as the next governor of New York at a meeting of the state committee of the national Progressive party held in 32 Washington square west. The suggestion that the colonel might be the nominee was received with marked enthusiasm.

John S. Van Duser of Elmira brought the former president's name to the fore. He referred to him as "the gentleman now in South America." He proposed that Colonel Roosevelt be apprised on returning from his travels with news of his nomination. Loud and prolonged handclapping attested the concurrence of the assemblage in the idea.

Van Duser ventured the opinion that Colonel Roosevelt because of his deep desire to aid the cause would not refuse the nomination. Then, the speaker said, Progressive victory in the campaign would be assured and would probably lead to success in the presidential election of 1916.

LOAN EXHIBITION AT PUBLIC LIBRARY POPULAR

Six hundred persons have already visited the loan exhibition now on view at the art gallery of the Plainfield Public Library. As the exhibition will close tomorrow night the time remaining is short although it is expected that scores will visit the display before the closing. Each visitor is presented with a fine catalogue which, with the information it contains, is of material aid in locating the various works of art. The catalogue helps one to to appreciate the character of the various works shown.

Members of the reception committee, composed of Plainfield women who are conversant with art, take pleasure in showing guests about the gallery and commenting upon the merits of the canvases, the sculpture, and the pen and ink drawings and book illustrations and decorations that are shown.

So much interest has been shown in the loan exhibition, and the attendance has been so large that the art committee will, in all likelihood, it is said, arrange for other exhibitions of a similar character in the not far distant future.

Though Tammany legislators disclaim any hostility to Governor Glynn, evidences of the changed relations between the wigwam and the executive chamber are not lacking. Certain Tammany senators prepared a resolution against Patrick E. McCabe, clerk of the senate, friend of Governor Glynn and the man who lined up with Murphy in bringing about the impeachment of Governor Sulzer. Whether Murphy is behind the attack on McCabe is not known, but it is strongly suspected drastic action against him would not be entertained without the chief knowing something about it beforehand.

BLIZZARD PREDICTED; COLD ALSO KILLS SIX

Thousands Suffer Intensely In Bitter Gale.

New York, Feb. 13.—Six deaths from the cold were reported in this city and its vicinity. Four of those who lost their lives were killed within the city limits. Scores were overcome by the bitter wind that swept the town, and thousands of those who lacked adequate clothing or homes in which to keep warm suffered intensely.

The national weather bureau in Washington reported that the cold weather would continue and that some time today perhaps a snowstorm approaching a blizzard in violence was due from the southwest. This snow storm originated in Texas and is being blown toward the east by heavy northwest winds. The storm is expected to cover the entire east, from the upper Mississippi valley to the New England coast.

With the cold in this city there came a wind out of the northwest that at one time attained a velocity of fifty-four miles an hour. From all parts of the city came reports of persons who had succumbed to exposure. In the night the municipal lodging house had taxed its maximum capacity of 768 persons early. The annex in Twenty-fourth street, the Charities pier, at the foot of Twenty-sixth street and the East river, and the department steamboats Lowell and Brennan were all housing homeless men and women. Some 1,771 persons were cared for in this way.

The first death reported was that of the baby boy of Pasquale Geramona of 97 Ninth avenue. The father found the baby uncovered in his crib yesterday morning. He sent for a doctor, who said the baby had frozen to death.

GET MESSAGE FROM POTOMAC

Navy Tug's Position Perilous In Bay of Islands Ice.

Washington, Feb. 13.—Confirmation of the perilous position in which the navy tug Potomac now lies imprisoned in the ice in Bay of Islands was given in a message received by the navy department. Boatswain's Mate Cutting, with four of the thirty-six members of the Potomac's crew, volunteered to make the dangerous journey across the ice from the tug to Norris point, Newfoundland, and Cutting sent the following message to Secretary Daniels:

"Ashore with four men. Ship wedged in ice; unable to move. Can find no way to get stores out to them. Through information gained do not think possible for ship to get to Potomac."

No word has been received here regarding two passenger trains between San Luis and Venegas.

LINCOLN'S IDEALS

firm the principles he later exemplified.

"The great men in life have been the men of a single purpose. Abraham Lincoln was ambitious. He never denied it. He always asserted it. His purpose in life was political. He wished to serve the State. How he came by that desire is past finding out. It was undoubtedly intuitive. There is not a suggestion in history that any one ever counselled him in this direction or urged him upon a political career. At twenty-three years of age, without, so far as we know, a single thing ever having been done or suggested by him before, he launched into political life in an address to the people of Sagamon county on March 9, 1832, reading in part as follows:

"'Having become a candidate for the honorable office of one of your representatives in the next General Assembly of this State, in accordance with an established custom and the principles of true Republicanism, it becomes my duty to make known to you, the people whom I propose to represent, my sentiments with regard to local affairs.' x x x

"'Every man is said to have his peculiar ambition. Whether it be true or not, I can say, for one, that I have no other so great as that of being truly esteemed by my fellow men by rendering myself worthy of their esteem. How far I shall succeed in gratifying this ambition is yet to be developed. I am young and unknown to many of you. I was born, and have ever remained in the most humble walks of life. I have no wealth or popular relations, or friends, to recommend me. My case is thrown exclusively upon the independent voters of the country; and, if elected they will have conferred a favor upon me for which I shall be unremitting in my labors to compensate. But if the good people in their wisdom shall see fit to keep me in the background, I have been too familiar with disappointments to be very much chagrinned.

"'Your friend and fellow citizen,
"'A. LINCOLN.'

"This is the first known public writing of Lincoln. It is almost as sudden in its oursting upon the world as the announcement on the banks of the Jordan of the Messiah by John the Baptist.

"From the day he sent forth this address until the day he fell, a martyr to the cause of the freedom of man, he never flagged in his ambition to represent and be esteemed by the people. His expressed wish that he might be 'esteemed by his fellow men' he realized in life; and in death his memory is revered by countless millions, not only of his fellow country-men, but of all seekers after liberty throughout the civilized world.

"Lincoln was, in every respect, considering his time and the then methods, an ideal politician,—for he was a politician in the truest and best sense of that word. He was an intense partisan; yet his country was always first, and his party second.

"In none of his writings or speeches is there found any partisan advocacy or suggestion of the advancing of any measure for mere partisan advantage. He believed that what was good for the country was always good for his party. In our day we have been hearing too much of 'this will be good for the party' and that will 'harm the opposition,' and the like. Lincoln never uttered a sentence like that.

"From 1832 to 1865 he never rested in his political activity. He aspired to leadership, and attained it honorably and grandly. Eight years in the Legislature of Illinois, two years in Congress, over four years President of the nation, and, at other times, candidate for Congress, and the Senate of the United States, and defeated. He loved the political arena. Yet, he never sought public office save for the promotion of the public weal. How grandly he succeeded. Can we give a reason for his success?

"In my view, the reason was twofold. First, he aways declared what he intended to do, and why he desired office. Second, he relied at all times upon the people only.

"He was not a time server. He never issued addresses, or constructed meaningless platforms, to deceive the people. What he said he uttered in sincerity, and never swayed from his promises. He stood for conditions as they were until they could be overthrown by constitutional methods. He believed in the Republic, with an intensity born of glorious prosperity under it.

"His belief in the people was sanctified by their devotion to him. In one of his speeches he said:

"'Why should there not be a patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people? Is there any better or equal hope in the world? In our present differences, is either party without fault of being in the right? If the Almighty Ruler of nations, with His eternal truth and justice be on your side or our side, that truth and justice will surely prevail by the judgment of the great tribunal of the American people.'

"His heart bled for the oppressed of the human race, and his sense of justice prompted him to aid in the overthrow of their oppressors; and in all his public acts and utterances there was an underlying reliance in the justice of his cause, coupled with a firm belief in the ultimate triumph of righteousness.

"It was this spirit of his, which had premeated the nation, which led Garfield to declare, when Lincoln fell by the hand of an assassin, 'God reigns and the Government at Washington still lives.'

"Courage, the quality of statesmanship so needed in our times, was the predominating characteristic of Lincoln. As a National political leader, his first great advance was made in 1858, when he declared in the Springfield convention, which nominated him for Senator: 'A house divided against itself cannot stand. I believe this government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free. I do not expect the Union to be dissolved. I do not expect the house to fall. But I do expect it will cease to be divided. It will become all one thing or all the other.'

"Considering the conditions that existed at that time, that was, probably, the most courageous statement ever uttered by any political leader. It was staking all upon a single throw. Lincoln knew it. His friends knew it. They counselled that he omit it from the speech. But he said, No. And, while it probably cost him the senatorship, it made him the President.

"What a campaign that was between Douglass and Lincoln.

"Did it ever occur to you that the modern suggestions that United States senators shall be elected by the people by nominating conventions or primaries, was not novel in the States? Both Douglass and Lincoln were so nominated by their party in 1858. It is the right way. After a long fight the people now elect United States Senators, and at last, in all the legislative branches of the Nation the people directly select their representatives.

"Is it not remarkable, that, in all Lincoln's political career, there is not a sentence of any leter or public address that we would wish he had never written or spoken? He was the ideal political leader. Would we had more like him. Men who put principle above party; honor above office; brains above money; integrity above political policy, and country above self.

"There is a splendid civic spirit abroad in our day. It is growing. The people are quickening in interest in public affairs. They are demanding higer principles in public service; that public officials shall be governed by a single motive, namely, that public office is a public trust, and that every official act shall be performed with the sole object of voicing the popular will. In short, that we shall have to represent us in all public office, men with the high ideals of Abraham Lincoln."

After the former Governor had completed his remarks, Dr. Murray called on former Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, who told a little about a great dinner he attended in Buenos Aires last year, at which persons speaking twenty languages were represented. He then deplored the present tendency of men to neglect the privileges of citizenship, saying that last year 72,000 men registered and called to vote in New Jersey. G. Stuart Simons told a little story in which Lincoln's picture played a prominent part, and then Dr. Murray called upon Leslie R. Fort for a report of the committee of the club which has been investigating the possibility of a public swimming pool being erected in the west end of the city. While progress has been made by the committee it has been thought that because of the present financial situation it would be unwise to attempt to raise money for a thing of this kind at the present time.

Dr. Ben VanD. Hedges, a member of the local Board of Education, said that while he wanted it distinctly understood that he did not speak officially, he felt quite sure that the members of the Board feel that the school buildings belong to the people, and should be used by them. One of the finest pools in the State will be placed in the new High School building, and he was quite sure that in time it would be thrown open to the use of the people during the summer months. Rev. Frederick L. Greene, pastor of Hope chapel, said that he felt that there was a crying need for better facilities to carry on the work there, before the men of the church considered the broader idea of a pool for the general public. George P. Mellick, of the Playground Commission, thought that the members of that body would be glad to take over the management of a pool, were the necessary funds provided by the city. After the discussion the meeting adjourned

Miss Richads paid a tribute to Abraham Lincoln, before closing her address. "Lincoln believed in the rights of men," she said, "and the rights of women, too, and is now claimed by some to have been a great woman's suffragist, although that statement I cannot prove."

The next talk by Miss Richards will be on the afternoon of Thursday, February 26.

STANDARD OIL LENDS CHINA $15,000,000

Also Gets Valuable Concession In Return.

London, Feb. 13.—The Morning Post's Peking correspondent cables that the Standard Oil company has concluded an agreement with the Chinese government by which it acquires the right to explore oil deposits in north China, particularly in the province of Shansi.

If the deposits justify exploitation a Sino-American company will be formed, in which China will have a share and Chinese will be allowed to invest, but the Standard Oil company will hold a controlling interest.

Washington, Feb. 13.—Official advices from Peking received here said that an agreement has been effected between the government of China and the Standard Oil company of America whereby the latter is to lend the government $15,000,000 in return for important oil concessions in Shansi province.

This is regarded as the most important event with regard to development of American interests in China since President Wilson withdrew governmental support from the American group of bankers participating in the then six power loan negotiations. Taken together with the successful endeavor of the American Red Cross to arrange for American construction of a $20,000,000 river improvement project in China and the reported arrangement between the Bethlehem Steel company and the Chinese government, it is now declared that American enterprise can succeed in China to a considerable extent even if it is not supported diplomatically by the Wilson administration.

It is understood that while the American legation was informed of the negotiations between the Standard Oil and the Chinese government it took no part in the discussions and neither opposed nor supported the arrangement.

NEGRO CONVICTS WON'T EAT.

Declare Hunger Strike After Segregation In San Quentin.

San Francisco, Feb. 13.—The 123 negro prisoners at San Quentin prison went on a hunger strike when the rule segregating them from whites in the dining hall went into effect. Sixty still held out after having missed five meals.

There will be no forcible feeding or other coercive measures, according to Warden Johnston.

"We believe that in time all will see the foolishness of their conduct," he said. "Those who don't want to go into the dining hall are not compelled to."

The rule was adopted because of friction between whites and negroes at meals.

GIMBELS

The Enthusiastic Crowds at This Great Sale of BLUM BROTHERS' Stock In the SUBWAY STORE

Are Eloquent Tribute to its Worthiness, and Ample Proof That New Yorkers Rarely Let Opportunity Knock Unanswered

BLUM BROTHERS Inc. Philadelphia, Carried Only Stocks of a Fine Grade Very Similar to Our Own. They Were in Good Order, Well Filled in, for the Receivers, from Whom We Bought Everything, Kept Them Always New and Fresh by Continuous Purchases

Neither Excellence nor Desirability Has Saved Prices. Everything Is Reduced. We Never Heard of Such SAVINGS ON DEPENDABLE GOODS

The Stocks of BLUM BROTHERS Totaled in Full Nearly A MILLION DOLLARS AT RETAIL

To the New York Store's Share of This Stock GIMBELS Have Added Thousands and Thousands of Dollars in Advantageous Purchases from High-Grade Manufacturers

EACH MORNING, NEWNESS! It will take days to finish unpacking and assorting—Carloads of stocks are on the way—some from Philadelphia containing more Blum merchandise, others from manufacturers containing fine merchandise which, in many cases, we bought at even lower than Receiver-sale prices on account of the manufacturers wishing to clear in big lots.

Tomorrow—Saturday—a store brimful of merchandise that it is a positive pleasure to see—to say nothing of buying

We cannot emphasize too strongly that the Blum Brothers stock compares favorably with the high-grade stocks carried in all sections of our Main Store, and in this Subway Store Sale you may expect to find merchandise at big and little price—with the fine assurance that

NOTHING WILL COST MUCH ABOVE HALF PRICE

To begin to quote prices in Saturday's festival of values would be taxing your time and patience—suffice it to say that short lots and long lots will all be assembled for easy choosing and that everything will be in added readiness.

Blum Brothers Specialized in Women's & Girls' Apparel

And so well had these departments been maintained by the Receivers that even the earliest of Spring fashions were shown.

You may expect, therefore, in connection with the many fine purchases we have added to the Blum collections—something wonderfully good in quality and value.

Men's Fine Clothing At Unprecedented Values

Because this is one of the lines they did not carry, although in our fine offerings for tomorrow of thousands of dollars of Men's Fine Clothing will be found over two hundred Suits for young men which Blums carried in their Boys' Section; rare pricings; come and judge.

Hosiery, Underwear & Sweaters Many Plums—Others at Blum Savings

Sweaters for Men, Women and Children, such values as one doesn't find once in ten years.

Blum Upholsteries, Draperies and Curtains Have Almost Swamped Us

Wise housekeepers will share in this distributing bee tomorrow—we can almost hear the hums of satisfaction.

Undermuslins, Negligees, Petticoats & Corsets

Remember, Blum Brothers was really a Woman's store, and 'tis said built a large clientele on just such things as these—we can readily believe it from the samples we have at about half Blum prices. Others from friendly manufacturers who did not want to be left out of this sale.

And a fine assortment of all kinds in Coats, Scarfs and Muffs.

The Boys' Clothing Stock at Blums Was Exceptionally Good and Large

And we have made it better and larger still. Boys' Hats, too, and furnishings—big doings tomorrow.

Oriental and Domestic Rugs—These Were Notably Big & Fine Stocks at Blums

The Orientals will appeal to the most exacting furnishers in New York, and the prices ought to whisk them off sharply.

Women's and Children's Shoes Were Specialized in Fine Fashions

A former Shoe man of GIMBELS was at the head of the business. With splendid reinforcements you may expect to save very substantially on every purchase you make.

Silks, Wash Goods, Dress Goods and Linens

Came in abundant supply, and fine they are, too; new and fresh and nicely selected—all at rich savings.

And on through over sixty-five Gimbel Sections will you find preparedness and fine welcome—both with Blum merchandise and choice pickings from eager markets. Few can afford to miss the offerings in any of the following sections:

NEWARK BANK IS READY FOR FLURRY

Frightened Depositors Able to Get Money Today.

SYMPATHIZES WITH THEM

President of Institution Expresses Sorrow For Timid Depositors For Taking Out Money and Losing Accrued Interest—Newark Board of Trade Believes In Bank.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 13.—When the Howard Saving institution opened for business this morning all the depositors who have been frightened by rumors of the bank's failure were able to get their money. Vague reports coming from unknown sources have been circulating for the last two weeks, and scores of persons, most of whom were foreigners, withdrew their deposits.

In a statement Samuel S. Dennis, president, expressed sorrow for the timid depositors for taking out their money and losing the accrued interest. According to Mr. Dennis, there will be more than $1,000,000 in gold and bills in the vaults of the bank and an additional $1,500,000 available within an hour.

"The Howard Savings institution is ready for any demands that may be made upon it," Mr. Dennis said, "and every depositor will get his money as fast as the paying tellers can pass it out."

As long as he remained president, Mr. Dennis said, the present method of operation at the bank would be continued. He said he talked with State Banking Commissioner George M. La Monte and that neither of them could account for the uneasiness among the depositors.

Resolutions expressing faith in the soundness of the Howard Savings institution were adopted by the Newark board of trade.

POSTMASTER CONTEST ENDS.

Charges Against James Norton Withdrawn In Hackensack.

Hackensack, N. J., Feb. 13.—The contest for the Hackensack postoffice appointment, with its salary of $3200, is at an end. The citizens' committee through its counsel, Frank H. Hall, withdrew the charges against James Norton, editor of the Bergen News, whose appointment was recently confirmed and then held up at the request of Senator Smoot.

It was charged that Norton was manager of the Democrat Publishing company when a tax list was printed for the town of Hackensack and overcharged $888, which was refunded. Charles W. Bell, who was mayor of Hackensack at the time and who was also at the head of the Bergen News, has come forward and absolves Norton from all blame. He says Norton had nothing to do with the questionable contract and also admits having signed Norton's name to the estimate given the improvement commission.

It is believed Norton's appointment will be confirmed again in a few days.

BABY STRANGLED TO DEATH.

Child Wrapped Up In Bundle and Left In Newark Store.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 13.—County Physician McKenzie performed an autopsy on the body of a newly born baby which was found in a retiring room in a Market street department store and discovered that the infant has been strangled to death. According to the doctor, finger marks were plain on the neck of the waif. Detectives were detailed to make an investigation into the murder.

All the information the authorities have is that a customer called the attention of one of the attendants to a bundle in the room. The latter notified one of the store detectives, who unwrapped the bundle and found the body.

ELEPHANT AN ARSONETTE.

Gets Mad and Thows a Lighted Stove Into Hayloft.

Hackensack, N. J., Feb. 13.—Two performing elephants that began an engagement at a local theater nearly caused the destruction of the stables of the Mansion house just before the matinee, when one of them broke away from the attendant and hurled an oil stove into the hayloft.

Flames soon surrounded the elephants, but they were rescued without harm and showed no sign of nervousness in their act this afternoon. The auto chemical apparatus quickly extinguished the fire.

TONSILS CUT, BLED TO DEATH

Girl Dies After Operation Because Blood Does Not Coagulate.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 13.—Ruth E. Johnston, seven years old, of this city, bled to death after an operation to remove adenoids and tonsils. Dr. William O. Bailey, a throat and nose specialist, who was called in by Dr. Ernest Tutschude, said the girl was one of the small number of persons whose blood does not coagulate.

The doctor said the removal of tonsil and adenoid growths upon normal persons is considered a slight operation.

EAT LESS MEAT IF BACK HURTS

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

WHITMAN IS SELECTED TO HEAD THE INQUIRY

Assembly Decides on Him as Chief Counsel.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 13.—District Attorney Charles S. Whitman will get a formal offer of the place of chief counsel for the assembly graft investigating committee.

A subcommittee consisting of Speaker Thaddeus C. Sweet of the assembly, Chairman John L. Sullivan of Chautauqua and Vice Chairman Alvah W. Burlingame of Kings went to New York and will have a conference with the district attorney at his office on his return from White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

One member of the subcommittee admitted that meetings have been arranged with at least two other prominent New York attorneys, who will be asked to assist should Mr. Whitman refuse to accept the place. Their names could not be learned. It has been settled that ex-State Senator Harvey D. Hinman of Binghamton will be one of the counsel for the committee.

On Monday afternoon the subcommittee will make a report to the full committee on counsel selected, and the committee will begin work almost immediately.

The first hearings will take place in Albany, probably in the assembly parlor or one of the assembly hearing rooms. The highway situation will be the first line of examination.

John N. Carlisle, state highway commissioner, has sent a letter to Chairman Sullivan of the committee offering to assist the committee in its work. This is Mr. Carlisle's letter in part:

"In connection with the investigation by your committee of matters in connection with the state highways department I desire to assure you of our willingness to actively co-operate with you in your work, and I trust you will feel at liberty at any time to call upon myself or any of the employees of our department for any information you may want."

PRINCES TO TOUR CANADA.

Dominion Undersecretary Laying Out Route For Trip.

Ottawa, Feb. 13.—A London cable to the Montreal Star says:

"It is understood that Sir John Anderson, permanent undersecretary of state for the colonies, has been directed by the king to draft a proposed route for the Prince of Wales' tour of the empire, which is expected to take place in the autumn of 1915.

"The prince will probably be accompanied by his sailor brother, Prince Albert."

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

7643

A smart draped dress for afternoons is shown in this number, 7643. It is suitable for one of the new silks or any favored dress material. The inset vest and the cleverly shaped single rever, together with the drapery on the skirt, are all the trimming that is necessary, unless one cares to add a line of novelty buttons and a soft satin girdle. Black charmeuse, with vest and collar of a softly colored Persian silk and a girdle of velvet or satin would be an attractive suggestion and a decidedly practical one as black may be appropriately worn for almost any occasion.

This design is suitable also for the new crepes that will be so much used for summer dresses.

This dress may be made in size 36, with 5¾ yards of 36 inch material. The pattern is cut in 5 sizes; 34 to 42.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, measuring over the fullest part of the bust for dimensions.

It may be obtained by filling out the coupon and enclosing 15 cents in stamps or coin to the Pattern Department of this paper.

Some Cookery Suggestions

FRUIT SOUFFLES.

FRUIT souffles make delicious desserts and are available at all seasons of the year, as any fruits may be used in making them. Successful souffles are light in appearance, nourishing and easily digested.

A Rich Souffle.

Orange Souffle.—Peel and slice six oranges and put in a glass dish alternate layers of oranges and sugar and let stand two hours. Make a custard of yolks of two eggs, a pint of milk and sugar to taste, with a grating of orange peel for flavor, and pour over the oranges when cool enough. Beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth, sweeten and flavor to taste and pour over the top. Serve cold.

Peach Souffle.—Peel and then rub through a sieve eight canned peaches. Stir in with them one cupful of powdered sugar and the beaten yolks of three eggs. Whisk steadily for eight minutes, then fold in the whites of six eggs that have been whipped to a stiff froth. Turn into a souffle dish, sprinkle with sugar and bake in a steady, rather cool oven for ten minutes.

Made With Pastry.

Banana Souffle.—Take one cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of butter, one-half cupful of milk, one egg, two tablespoonfuls of sugar and three bananas. Sift the flour, salt, baking powder and sugar together, add the milk and well beaten egg and mix well. Brush the pan with the melted butter and pour in the mixture. Skin and scrape the bananas, cut into four pieces and press into the dough. Sprinkle with the sugar and bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven. Serve warm with whipped cream.

In a Cake Border.

Apple Souffle.—Take one pint of apple puree, one lemon, three eggs, one ounce of butter, one round of sponge-cake, sugar, apricot jam, a few pistachio nuts and one glass of sherry. Cut the apples in quarters and, without peeling or coring them, stew them till soft with the pared lemon rind and enough water to keep them from burning. When soft rub all through a fine wire sieve. Stir in the raw yolks of two eggs only and put the whites aside. Add the butter and sugar to taste. Cook this mixture for a minute or two over the fire, but do not let it boil. Take the cake and carefully hollow out the center, so as to leave a case. Sprinkle it over inside with the wine and after slightly warming the jam spread it thinly over the outside and sprinkle with chopped pistachio nuts. Beat the three whites to a stiff froth and add them lightly to the apple mixture. Put this into the cake border and place in a quick oven till well puffed up. Dust with sugar and serve immediately.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

How the Rabbit Learned To Run.

"TELL you a story, children? Well, let me see" Daddy meditated a long time, for he was very tired after a hard day's work. Suddenly he said:

"Suppose I tell you about Topsy?"

"Oh, yes!" cried both the children.

"Topsy was a beautiful little girl with long auburn curls, large, soft gray eyes and wonderful pink and white skin. No one had ever known just where she came from, for she said that she had just dropped from the clouds.

"Anyway, Topsy was beautiful, and she didn't care if her nose was freckled, for she dropped on the earth just in time to visit all the animals behind the tall dark pines where they lived. Any other little girl would have been frightened to death behind the pines with the animals. But Topsy? No, indeed! She was perfectly at home. And they all just loved her.

"They played blind man's buff, hide and seek, Miss Sindy Sue and all kinds of games together.

"One day Reddy Fox felt very jealous of Br'er Rabbit because Topsy seemed to enjoy playing with him more than any other animal. So Reddy Fox decided he'd get rid of him. He told Br'er Rabbit that he'd walk with him to the end of the rainbow, where he'd heard there were just lots of beautiful little girls like Topsy, and all they lived upon was milk and honey.

"Reddy Fox was very tricky, and he knew how to get Br'er Rabbit, for, of course, behind the dark pines they never have anything like milk and honey, and Reddy Fox knew how Br'er Rabbit loved milk and honey. So off they started, leaving Topsy heartbroken, for she loved Brier Rabbit.

"Br'er Rabbit went on ahead of Reddy Fox, who carried a long stick in his hand. On they walked and walked until Br'er Rabbit's feet were so sore he could hardly put one foot before the other. Each had a bag on his shoulder with some things to eat in it. So they sat down and ate and drank.

"When they'd finished eating they started on again, Reddy Fox always very careful to linger behind long enough to let Br'er Rabbit get in front. On and on they went until it had grown very dark. Reddy Fox stopped every few minutes to rest. Finally he decided he had gone far enough. He felt sure Br'er Rabbit would now be lost, so he yelled out to Br'er Rabbit to run as hard as he could, as he heard dogs.

"Off tore Br'er Rabbit as fast as his legs would carry him, while Reddy Fox sat down and laughed as though his sides would split.

"Children, Br'er Rabbit hasn't stopped running from that day to this. It was Reddy Fox that taught the rabbit how to run."

CHAPTER XV.

Woe in Number Seven.

HIS rage blazed forth. So they had "got to him" after all. Who? He thought of the smooth, crafty mountain of a man who had detained him a moment ago. Who but Cargan and Max, of course? They had found his childish hiding place, and the money had come home to their eager hands. No doubt they were laughing slyly at him now.

Well, he would show them yet. He got up and walked the floor. Once he had held them up in the snow and spoiled their little game. He would do it again. How? When? He did not know. His soul cried for action of some sort, but he was up against a blind alley, and he knew it.

He unlocked the door of No. 7. To go downstairs, to meet the sweet eagerness of the girl who depended on him, to confess himself tricked—it took all the courage he had. Why had it all happened anyhow? Confound it! Had he not come up here to be alone with his thoughts? But, brighter side, it had given him her, or it would give him her before the last card was played. He shut his teeth tightly and went down the stairs.

Mr. Bland had added himself to the group about the fire. Quickly the eyes of Miss Norton met Magee's. She was trembling with excitement. Cargan, huge, red, cheery, got in Magee's path once more.

"I'll annihilate this man," thought Magee.

"I've been figuring," said the mayor, "that was one thing he didn't have to contend with. No, sir, there wasn't any bright young men hunting up old Napoleon and knocking him in the monthly magazines. They didn't go down to Sardinia and pump it out of the neighbors that he started business on borrowed money and that his father drank more than was good for him. They didn't run illustrated articles about the diamonds he wore and moving pictures of him eating soup."

"No, I guess not," replied Magee abstractedly.

"I reckon there was a lot in his record wasn't meant for the newspapers," continued Cargan reflectively. "And it didn't get there. Nap was lucky. He had it on the reformers there. They couldn't squash him with the power of the press."

Mr. Magee broke away from the mayor's rehashed history and hurried to Miss Norton.

"You promised yesterday," he reminded her, "to show me the pictures of the admiral."

"So I did," she replied, rising quickly. "To think you have spent all this time in Baldpate inn and not paid homage to its own particular cock of the walk."

She led him to a portrait hanging beside the desk.

"Behold," she said, "the admiral on a sunny day in July. Note the starchy grandeur of him, even with the thermometer up in the clouds. That's one of the things the rocking chair fleet adores in him. Can you imagine the flurry at the approach of all that superiority? Theodore Roosevelt, William Faversham and Richard Harding Davis all arriving together couldn't overshadow the admiral for a minute.

Mr. Magee gazed at the picture of a pompous little man whose fierce mustache seemed anxious to make up for the lack of hair on his head.

"A bald hero at a summer resort," he commented, "it seems incredible."

"Oh, they think he lost his hair fighting for the flag," she laughed.

"Is is possible to see the room where the admiral plays his famous game?"

"Step softly," she answered. "In here. There stands the very table."

They went into the small card room at the right of the entrance to the office, and Mr. Magee quietly closed the door behind them. The time had come. He felt his heart sink.

"Well?" said the girl, with an eagerness she could not conceal.

Mr. Magee groped for words and found—his old friends of the mountain.

"I love you," he cried desperately. "You must believe I want to help you. It looks rather the other way now, I'll admit. I want you to have that money. I don't know who you are nor what this all means, but I want you to have it. I went upstairs determined to give it to you"—

"Really." The word was at least 50 degrees below the temperature of the cardroom.

"Yes, really. I won't ask you to believe, but I'm telling the truth. I went to the place where I had fatuously hid the money—under a brick of my fireplace. It was gone."

"How terribly unfortunate."

"Yes, isn't it?" Mr. Magee rejoiced that she took so calm a view of it. "They searched the room, of course, and they found the money. They're on top now, but I'm going"—

He stopped, for he had seen her face. She—taking a calm view of it? No, indeed. Billy Magee saw that she was furiously, wildly angry. He remembered always having written it down that beautiful women were even more beautiful in anger. How, he wondered, had he fallen into that error?

"Please do not bore me," she said through her teeth, "with any further recital of what you are going to do. You seem to have a fatal facility in that line. Your record of accomplishment is pathetically weak. And oh, what a fool I've been! I believed. Even after last night, I believed."

"I know," he said helplessly, "you're terribly disappointed, and I don't blame you. But you will find out that you've done me an injustice. I'm going"—

"One thing," said she, smiling a smile that could have cut glass, "you are going to do. I know that you won't fail this time, because I shall personally see you through with it. You're going to stop making a fool of me."

"Tell me," pleaded Billy Magee, "tell me who you are—what this is all about. Can't you see I'm working in the dark? You must"

She threw open the card room door.

"An English officer," she remarked loudly, stepping out into the other room, "taught the admiral the game—at least, so he said. It added so much romance to it in the eyes of the rocking chair fleet. Can't you see India—the hot sun—the Kipling local color—a silent, tanned, handsome man eternally playing solitaire on the porch of the barracks? Has the barracks a porch?"

"We shall see what we shall see," he muttered.

"Why rush in the middle into a bromide?" she asked.

Mr. Magee joined the group by the fire. Never before in his life had he been so determined on anything as he was now that the package of money should return to his keeping. But how? How from [illegible] this maze of humans the present holder of the precious bundle of material? He looked at Mr. Max, sneering his best on colored sneer at the mayor's side; at the mayor himself, nonchalant as the admiral being photographed at Bland, author of the Arabella fiction, sprawling at ease before the fire; at the tawdry Mrs. Norton and at Myra Thornhill, who had by her pleading the night before made him ridiculous. Who of these had the money now? Who but Cargan and Max, their faces serene, their eyes coyly on the preparations for lunch, their plans for leaving Baldpate Inn no doubt already made?

And then Mr. Magee saw coming down the stairs another figure one he had forgot, Professor Thaddeus Bolton, he of the insidious dialogue by the annex door. On the professor's forehead was a surprising red scratch, and his eyes, no longer hidden by the double convex lenses, stood revealed a washed out gray in the light of noon.

"A most unfortunate accident," explained the old man. "Most distressing. I have broken my glasses. I am almost blind without them."

"How'd it happen, Doc?" asked Mr. Cargan easily.

"I came into unhappy juxtaposition with an open door," returned Professor Bolton. "Stupid of me, but I'm always doing it. Really, the agility displayed by doors in getting in my path is surprising."

"You and Mr. Max can sympathize with each other," said Magee. "I thought for a moment your injuries might have been received in the same cause."

"Don't worry, Doc," Mr. Bland soothed him, "we'll all keep a weather eye out for reporters that want to connect you up with the peroxide blonds."

The professor turned his ineffectual gaze on the haberdasher, and there was a startlingly ironic smile on his face.

"I know, Mr. Bland," he said, "that my safety is your dearest wish."

It was past 3 o'clock. The early twilight crept up the mountain, and the shadows began to lengthen in the great bare office of Baldpate inn. In the red flicker of firelight Mr. Magee sat and pondered. The interval since luncheon had passed lazily. He was no nearer to guessing which of Baldpate inn's winter guests hugged to his the precious package. Exasperated, angry, he waited for he knew not what, restless all the while, to act, but having not the glimmer of an inspiration as to what his course ought to be.

He heard the rustle of skirts on the stair landing and looked up. Down the broad stairway, so well designed to serve as a show window for the sartorial triumphs of Baldpate's gay summer people, came the tall handsome girl who had the night before set all his plans awry.

Now, for the first time he looked upon her as a flesh and blood girl, noted the red in her olive cheeks, the fire in her dark eyes and realized that her interest in that package of money might be something more than another queer quirk in the tangle of events.

She smiled a friendly smile at Magee and took the chair he offered.

"Last night, Mr. Magee," she said, "I told you frankly why I had come to Baldpate inn. You were good enough to say that you would help me if you could. The time has come when you can, I think."

"Yes?" answered Magee. His heart sank. What now?

"I must confess that I spied this morning," she went on. "It was rude of me, perhaps. But I think almost anything is excusable under the circumstances, don't you? I witnessed a scene in the hall above—Mr. Magee, I know who has the $200,000!"

"You know?" cried Magee. His heart gave a great bound. At last! And then—he stopped. "I'm afraid I must ask you not to tell me," he added sadly.

The girl looked at him in wonder. She was of a type common in Magee's world—delicate, finely reared, sensitive. True, in her pride and haughtiness she suggested the snow capped heights of the eternal hills. But at sight of those feminine heights Billy Magee had always been one to seize his alpenstock in a more determined grip and climb. Witness his attentions to the superb Helen Faulkner. He had a moment of faltering. Here was a girl who at least did not doubt him, who ascribed to him the virtues of a gentleman, who was glad to trust in him. Should he transfer his allegiance? No, he could hardly do that now.

"You ask me not to tell you," repeated the girl slowly.

"That demands an explanation," replied Billy Magee. "I want you to understand—to be certain that I would delight to help you if I could. But the fact is that before you came I gave my word to secure the package you speak of for—another woman. I cannot break my promise to her."

"I see," she answered. Her tone was cool.

"I'm very sorry," Magee went on. "But as a matter of fact I seem to be of very little service to any one. Just now I would give a great deal to have the information you were about to give me. But since I could not use it helping you, you will readily see that I must not listen. I'm sorry."

"I'm sorry, too," replied the girl. "Thank you very much—for telling me. Now I must—go forward—alone." She smiled unhappily.

"I'm afraid you must," answered Billy Magee.

On the stairs appeared the slim figure of the other girl. Her great eyes were wistful, her face was pale. She came toward them through the red firelight. Mr. Magee saw what a fool he had been to waver in his allegiance even for a moment, for he loved her, wanted her, surely. The snow capped heights are inspiring, but far more companionable is the brook that sparkles in the valley.

"It's rather dull, isn't it?" asked Miss Norton of the Thornhill girl. By the side of the taller woman she seemed slight, almost childish. "Have you seen the pictures of the admiral, Miss Thornhill? Looking at them is our one diversion."

"I do not care to see them, thank you," Myra Thornhill replied, moving toward the stairs. "He is a very dear friend of my father." She passed up and out of sight.

Miss Norton turned away from the fire, and Mr. Magee rose hastily to follow. He stood close behind her, gazing down at her golden hair, shimmering in the dark.

"I've just been thinking," he said lightly, "what an absolutely ridiculous figure I must be in your eyes, buzzing round and round like a bee in a bottle and getting nowhere at all. Listen—no one has left the inn. While they stay there's hope. Am I not to have one more chance—a chance to prove to you how much I care?"

She turned, and even in the dusk he saw that her eyes were wet.

"Oh, I don't know, I don't know," she whispered. "I'm not angry any more. I'm just at sea. I don't know what to think—what to do. Why try any longer? I think I'll go away—and give up."

"You mustn't do that," urged Magee. They came back into the firelight. "Miss Thornhill has just informed me that she knows who has the package."

"Indeed," said the girl calmly, but her face had flushed.

"I didn't let her tell me, of course."

"Why not? Oh, how maddening women could be!

"Why not?" Magee's tone was hurt. "Because I couldn't use her information in getting the money for you."

"You are still going to get the money for me?"

The firelight fell on her hair, her eyes, and Mr. Magee knew that his selfish bachelorhood was at an end. He stooped to her.

"Give me, please," he said, "the benefit of the doubt." It was a poor speech compared to what was in his heart, but Billy Magee was rapidly learning that most of the pretty speeches went with puppets who could not feel.

Paterson Elks swept the boards here last night in an Elks' League bowling match and the triple victory enabled the Silk City pin-knights to become real factors for the championship. They are now but one game each way behind the New Brunswicks, who hold second place. In the opening game last night Paterson was there for a total of 1,005, Plainfield trailing far to the rear with 847. In the first game Captain Blatz split his finger and was forced to retire in favor of Cose, who was later replaced by Pope.

In the next encounter the visitors kept up the fast pace and a total of 954 gave theim another easy victory, Plainfield only accounting for 867. There was a real battle in the final encounter and the locals with 873, were only downed by twenty-one pins.

O'Gorman did some fine pinning for Paterson, having counts of 232 and 231 and an average of 214-2. Curtis was there for 208 and Romary had 207. Kiely rolled 212 for Plainfield and Stout tallied 202.

FIRST HOME BASKETBALL GAME IN FIVE LONG YEARS

The first home basketball game in five years will be staged in the Rutgers' College gymnasium Friday evening when the varsity team will meet the strong Muhlenberg College five. The Rutgers men have been working hard this week under the direction of Coach David Armstrong, of Rahway, and are in the best of shape for the contest. It is hoped that Todd and Twing, two of the regulars who are ineligible because of poor scholarship, will be able to remove some conditions and get in the game.

Ralph Seiler, of Elizabeth, will play one of the forwards. Seiler is recognized as one of the strongest players at Rutgers and leads the team in baskets made so far this season. The other forward will be Raymond Austin, of Rahway, who has not yet rounded into form but who is a crackerjack player when at his best. Robert Searls, of New Brunswick, will jump center, while James Coleman and Harry Rockafeller, of Asbury Park, are slated for the guard positions.

SHOOTING THE SHUTES.

North Plainfield received the biggest bump of the season yesterday afternoon in that title clash and those who thought the Plainfielders didn't have a look-in have now all taken to cover. Coach Collier assigns the cause of the boroughites' defeat to over-confidence and further states that a couple of his men had gone stale. This was plainly evident, for both Abrams and VanMater, usually two of the most reliable men on the team, practically went to pieces and with them went the team's chances of sewing up the 1914 pennant deal. Then, too, the wonderful exhibition of basketball the Plainfielders put up has to be considered in assigning a cause for defeat. Plainfield outplayed itself while North Plainfield underplayed itself.

QUEER GRATITUDE.

Turning out en masse in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium last Monday afternoon to root for the Leal School basketball team in its game with the Plainfield High School aspirants to the Interscholastic League title, the North Plainfield quintet and a number of followers lent enough enthusiasm to help the private school boys make a wonderful showing against their strong Queen City rivals and in return expected nothing. They certainly got what they expected all right yesterday afternoon when the Front street youths lined the sidelines of Saengerbund Hall and rooted their heads off for the Plainfielders. Leal School, of course, had a right to choose a favorite, but it would have looked a thousand times better to have seen them divide their efforts up and at least partially reciprocate for the good turn the boroughites voluntarily did them in the association "gym." In making this little comment we are not playing the part of lobbyists or even trying to win rooters for the North Plainfielders, for the Canadians have a good supply of loud "yellers" with the right spirit.

ENTHUSIASM CONSPICUOUS.

No other set of games played in this city during the basketball season evoke as much enthusiasm as do the North Plainfield and Plainfield clashes and the crowds that witness these games keep up a constant din from start to finish. The deciding game will be played at the Y. M. C. A. next Wednesday afternoon and the contest will probably draw a capacity crowd to the Association hall. Last year P. H. S. played the deciding game in Saengerbund Hall and this year the local boys won the toss for the third game and chose the Y. M. C. A. for a camping ground

Peacock and Rosenson must have made good use of that afternoon of practice in Saengerbund Hall. This duo certainly had an eye for the basket.

Those who were treated to an earthquake in Canada last week had their nerves shattered again yesterday when that Saengerbund gallery began to rock.

News Headline—"Fitzsimmons in clever form." It's only a false alarm, however, for the Fitz referred to is only the South Orange High School centre who bagged seventeen goals in one game. That's all.

Johnny Heron was on hand yesterday afternoon to defend his title—Johnny really anticipated another overtime game and was afraid someone would cop his laurels.. Such is life, Shrimp, old man.

Now's the time to get in those promised hockey games. Why not get busy, local managers, and give us some of the sport on the glassy surface?

Considering the calibre of men against which he competed, Ralph Runyon did wonderfully well in the pole vault event at Madison Square Garden, Wednesday night. A man who comes within two places of Gordon B. Dukes is no slouch.

All fools are not yet dead, as evidenced by the number that took part in that Brooklyn-Sea Gate marathon yesterday. A number of the runners collapsed on the icy road that extends along the twenty-six miles that separates the start from the finish. While several finished with an outer coating of ice.

News Headline—Jumping players to be blacklisted. Why nab them on the jump?

The annual pastime of kicking Charlie Murphy out of the National League has once more been ushered in and this time he states empathically that he is in the game to stay. We have a slight suspicion that it would take a pretty big boot to lift the Irishman out of baseball

News Item—McGraw sees big future in Japan. "Mugsy" can see further than most of the twentieth century diplomats.

OUT FOR THE TITLE.

The New York University Law School basketball team, which was twice defeated by the local Y. M. C. A. five in hard fought games on the local court, is out to capture the championship of the college. Tomorrow night the Law School five will meet the Medical College five and the winner will meet the New York University varsity five for the championship.

WORLD'S SEVEN BEST MIDDLE RUNNERS ENTER TITLE MEET

J. E. (Ted) Meredith, of the University of Pennsylvania, and the world's greatest middle distance runner, yesterday handed his entry to James E. Sullivan, chairman of the A. A. U. Championship Committee, for the 600-yard championship of America. This is one of the thirteen championship events to be decided at Madison Square Garden on Monday evening, March 2. Meredith and Tom Halpin, of Boston, are the first to enter. Abel R. Kiviat is the present champion of America at this distance and he will be called upon to defend his title at this event as well as in the 1000-yard championship. The other starters in this event in all probability will be "Mel" Sheppard, Homer Baker, Davenport of Chicago, and Brook of Canada. These are without doubt the seven best middle distance runners in the world today.

Dr. George W. Orton, coach at the University of Pennsylvania, in a letter to Chairman Sullivan recently, stated that he would enter eight of his best athletes in these championships. His team will probably be: Meredith, Lippincott, Patterson, Kelly, McCurdy, Maderia, Cross and Langner.

TENNIS SOLONS WILL TRY TO DEFINE TERM "AMATEUR"

New York, Feb. 13.—Amateurism in lawn tennis will be strictly defined at the annual meeting of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association being held at the Waldorf-Astoria today. For a long time there has been much controversy over this question, and at the last meeting of the national body a committee was appointed to draft a rule that would conform sufficiently with that of the International Federation of Europe so as to avoid the possibility of friction in the Davis Cup matches, which are to be played in the United States next summer.

The principal objection to the definition of an amateur has come from the promoters of invitation and hotel tournaments, in which it is alleged discrimination has been shown in favor of the leading players, and the adoption of a new rule will mean that these promoters will have to depend largely on local players in the future. While the opposition is expected to muster considerable force at today's meeting, it is thought among the leading officials that the rule will pass.

FEDS GET TWO MORE.

Two baseball players well known in the International circuit were in New York yesterday dickering with the Federal Leaguers. One of them was Jimmy Esmond, of the Montreal Club, and the other, Clyde Engle. It was reported later in the day that Engle and Esmond had signed

P. H. S. CLIMBS INTO A FIRST PLACE TIE BY BEATING N. P. H. S RIVALS

All basketballdom was treated to a rude jolt yesterday afternoon in Saengerbund Hall when the Plainfield High School basketers sprung the inevitable and trimmed the North Plainfield aspirants to the Interscholastic League championship by a score of 23 to 17. Scattering the dope of the "wise ones" to the four corners of the earth the Plainfield youths, playing a dogged, and aggressive game, rushed the boroughites completely off their feet and when the whistle blew at the mid station the score stood 16 to 3 with the red and blue on top.

Relying almost exclusively on the defensive game and making good on the few opportunities that presented themselves during the first session the visitors rang up an advantage that was valuable in the second period of play, a repetition of the first, with the North Plainfielders once more on the offense and the Queen Cityites constantly on the defense warding off numerous seemingly sure tallies at opportune moments when two points would have helped a whole lot toward yanking the flag from its moorings.

Both teams entered the battle trained to the minute and the nervous strain under which the ten players were laboring was visible on every countenance. It was some time before the Canadians "got going" and their nervousness was responsible for many costly fumbles in Plainfield territory during the initial period. Over-confidence also played a big part in the upsetting of what was conceded to be an easy victory for the boroughites and soon after the period opened it could be seen that the Plainfielders were to be reckoned with on this occasion if never before. Injected with a spirit of fight that sent them bounding after the illusive sphere whenever it rolled into hostile territory the locals kept their rivals constantly in the runner-up role and North Plainfield appeared overwhelmed and amazed beyond recall by the suddenness with which the tide of battle had shifted from one side of the brook to the other.

One team fighting for the flag and the other to get a firmer hold on a slipping grip, the contest was given an air of importance and keen rivalry which only interscholastic games possess and the mad crowd of some five hundred color-bearers, well nigh evenly distributed, kept up a constant din from one end of the game to the other. At no time were the cohorts of either school sure of victory or defeat and the enthusiasm prevailed until the timer's whistle chirped the final gong.

Although those who witnessed the contest anticipated a slow-up in the gruelling attack fostered by the Plainfielders in the first half the expected chance was not forthcoming for the boroughites and they never got another opportunity to take the helm. Leading the way and knocking down every chance the Canadians had during the final session the red and blue team put up a game which closely resembled the wonderful issue on the same court one year ago when North Plainfield was beaten by Johnny Heron's overtime goal for the title and medals. Yesterday's phenomenal showing gives the Plainfielders another chance at the pennant and the two forces will meet once more next Wednesday afternoon on the local Y. M. C. A. court.

Captain Burner sent in "Ronnie" Conroy to take Van Mater's place in the second half but this was the only change made throughout the forty minutes of play. Van Mater was plainly not playing his best game and Conroy injected a new life into the team which for a time looked like victory. Every man on the floor deserves credit for something and it would be impossible to single out a participant who so far outshined his teammates that his performance was worthy of particular mention. Those who did not break into the scoring did some wonderful defensive playing and their efforts to prevent goals were as valuable as those of their teammates in making goals. Point winning was left to Peacock, Dunning, Rosenson and Love and they amply upheld their end of the issue. North Plainfield displayed a woeful weakness at shooting fouls, a feature in which they have shone in other games, and could make good in but one of their numerous attempts. Peacock caged five fouls for Plainfield High and the locals made good on a majority of their chances from the penalty mark.

MAY PLAY CHAMPIONSHIP GAME IN THE EVENING

So keen is the interest displayed in the third and deciding match for the Interscholastic Basketball League championship which is scheduled to be played next Wednesday at the Y. M. C. A. that those interested in the contest started a movement this morning which may result in the game being played in the evening instead of the afternoon as previously announced. The playing of the second match on a holiday resulted in a capacity house being drawn at Saengerbund hall yesterday afternoon and many of those who witnessed the contest yesterday contemplate attending the third game if the time is made so that they will be conveniently enabled to be on hand.

The fact that the contest will be played in the Y. M. C. A. makes the issue an all the more interesting one as the association will not hold as many spectators as the borough rendezvous and those who want good seats will probably be on deck a couple of hours before the game. If the contest was staged in the afternoon the routine class work at the association would be seriously interferred with as the spectators would probably start to gather about noon. A meeting of the two teams' managers will be held some time this week and plans completed for the affair.

ADAM SCHOTT WILL COACH HOPE CHAPEL LEAGUE TEAM

George T. Leighs was elected manager of the Hope Chapel Sundayschool League baseball team to succeed himself at an opening meeting of the chapel team held last night for the purpose of discussing plans for the coming season. A motion was made to request Adam Schott to act as coach of the team during the 1914 race.

A large number of those interested in the baseball prospects of Hope Chapel attended the meeting and further action concerning the organization and practice dates was postponed until the league makes definite arrangements for this year's race.

Wool which never saw the back of a sheep is being largely used in Europe for making men's clothes. It is known by the name of limestone wool, and is made in an electric furnace. Powdered limestone mixed with a certain chemical is thrown into the furnace, and after passing under a furious blast of air is tossed out as fluffy white wool. After coming from the furnace the wool is dyed, and finally made into lengths of cloth.

LITTLE TALKS BY THE WANT AD MAN

Copyright, 1913, The Int. Syndicate, Baltimore.

No. 59.

"I AM FOR the daily newspapers strongly because I appreciate the wonderful vitality of their immense circulation," said President David L. Taylor, of the Taylor-Critchfield Advertising Company, at the banquet in his honor in Chicago. "The daily newspaper is a great and quick influence on the public mind. Being the carrier of everyday news, in which we are all interested, the advertising it contains naturally becomes a part of the news that it contains."

The Classified, or Want Ad. columns are as interesting in their way as are the news columns. I know folks who read the Want Ads. as regularly as they read what's going on in the City Hall or the details of the football game or the hundred and one news items of current interest.

That is because there is in the Want Ads. what psychologists term "human interest." And that high-sounding quality is nothing more nor less than a broad interest that appeals to Tom and Dick and Harry—to you and to me—because we are all human beings and are interested in other human beings.

In the Classified columns there are printed, each day, the little business stories of the man who wants to buy or the man who wants to sell—the woman who wants a domestic—the domestic who seeks employment—the man who has lost or found something—the people who are looking for situations—the employer who desire competent help—the man with a business chance to offer to his fellow-men—rooming and boarding accommodations—and so on through all of the many classifications that reflect the WANTS of the people.

"The daily newspaper is a great and quick influence on the public mind." And no section of a really good newspaper is quite so appealing in human interest to the great mass of readers as are the Classified columns, or WANT ADS.

By the way, have you read the Want Ads. in today's paper?

PRESENT SCENES OF KENTUCKY LIFE

GIVEN BY LOCAL TALENT

Large and Fashionable Audience Witness Clever Production for the Benefit of Pine Mountain Association.

Many of Plainfield's fashionable society set were present at last night's amateur performance of the play "The Scarborough Spoons," presented by members of The Plainfield Pine Mountain Association, at Hartridge Auditorium. As presented the play was an adaptation by Miss Margaret W. McCutchen, of North Plainfield, of the play of Lucy Furman. It was a well-portrayed presentation of life among the poor in the mountainous regions of Kentucky. The novelty of the affair, as well as the excellence of the production as a whole, together with the interesting setting of the two scenes, which showed the cabin of the Vance family in the Kentucky mountains, pleased the large audience, who gave evidence of their hearty approval by frequent applause. There were many handsomely gowned women and men in evening dress at last night's performance. It was a gala occasion for the members of the organization having the production in charge.

There were fourteen persons in the cast. Miss Elizabeth McGee took the part of Emily Scarborough, A.B., Ph. D.; Mrs. Allan Cowperthwait was Miss Loring, of the settlement school on Perilous Creek; Miss Helen Joy was Theodosia Vance, a mountain woman; Henry C. White was Edwin Vance, her husband; Miss Margaret Townsend was Nucky Mars; Miss Margaret McCutchen, Killis Blair; Miss Margaret Buttfield, Joab Atkins, and Miss Katherine Lee, Castoria Spence. Children of the Vance household were: Miss Louise Booth, as Cynthia; Miss Dorothy Lyon, as Polly Ana; Bruce Buttfield, as Guilford; Miss Eva Browne, as Emily; Miss Helen Harmon, as Charlie, and Miss Helen Burke, as Iry.

Investigation of the family history finally develops the fact that Theodosia Vance is really the descendant of the lost Guilford of Agincourt family. She is given twelve silver spoons, heirlooms owned by the English Earl of Guilford. The little drama was well conceived and executed with skill by those who participated in it. Some of the players, who trod the boards for the first time, displayed surprising facility in their lines and their acting entitled them to histrionic honors as amateurs in the opinion of many in the large audience.

While the Plainfield Pine Mountain Association is comparatively a young organization it is growing in membership and its promoters are sanguine that it will eventually develop into a strong, virile and permanent association. The history of the Kentucky mountain school, in which the local organization is vitally interester, will undoubtedly also be interesting to readers.

The ground for the first building of the Pine Mountain Settlement School was broken May 15, 1913, but its real beginning dates back thirty years, when William Creech first conceived the idea that there ought to be some day a school at the headwaters of Greasy Creek. Ten years before he had came across the Mountain from the headwaters of the Cumberland River to build him a home in the wilderness—for the country was then sparsely settled, wild game and deer were abundant, and the valleys and hillsides were so heavily timbered and dense with laurel- and rhododendron thickets that a man could scarcely hew out a clearing for a home. Working at his farm by day, and his blacksmith's forge by night, far away from the modern discussion of educational ends, alone he developed a great idea of education. He believed that farming should be taught, and the hand industries kept alive; that teachers should know more than book-learning. Year by year as he saw more young men turn from farming to such "public works" as logging and mining, he felt a great weakness in the new order of civilization and wanted a school that should arouse interest in the arts of the farm and home. Because of this remarkable conception of his, when two women came along who wanted to start a school where agriculture, forestry and kindred subjects should be taught, he received them with welcome, and had no suspicion of their purposes because they asked for at least two hundred acres of land, instead of a mere building spot for a schoolhouse.

The gift amounted to two hundred and thirty acres, and made possible a plan of rural education that should largely serve the community. Few schools could start with a richer na-

CLAIMED THAT BAD MAN MADE HIM CRY

Case Against Morris L. Abrams Dismissed After Lengthy Arguments.

As an aftermath of the exciting basketball game in the Interscholastic League race on the Saengerbund Hall court Thursday afternoon, Aaron Hirsh, son of Simon Hirsh, of Watchung avenue, appeared as complainant against Morris L. Abrams, in the city court this morning charging the latter with alleged atrocious assault. Young Hirsh, who is but seventeen years of age, claimed that Abrams struck him in the face and about the body in a Front street store yesterday afternoon with force enough to make him cry bitterly but presented no visible effects of the alleged beating in court this morning.

The trouble between Hirsh and Abrams originated during the basketball game in Saengerbund Hall Thursday when Morris Abrams, of West Front street, the donor of the trophy for which the teams were fighting, was struck in the face while standing on the sidelines and for a time thought that Hirsh had dealt the blow. The matter was adjusted satisfactorily to all concerned at that time but Hirsh claimed that the same matter was renewed when he went to the store to visit Hyman Abrams yesterday afternoon and that he was thrown out by Morris L. Abrams who is about three times as big as the complainant.

Testimony brought out, however, that young Hirsh was making a nuisance of himself at the Abrams store and that he was ejected by Abrams after the latter had warned the boy to mind his own business. Judge DeMeza dismissed the case against Abrams after a lengthy review of the charge in which he dwelt on the defendant's good reputation and the youngster's apparent liking for trouble of this nature. J. Henry Crane represented the defendant.

VALENTINE NOVELTY LUNCHEON GIVEN

Successful Affair Arranged for the Benefit of All Souls' Church.

The treasury of the Guild of All Saints' Unitarian church has been enriched through the proceeds of a pink valentine novelty luncheon which was given yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Frederick Sherwood, on Martine avenue. The luncheon was served from noon until 2 o'clock. The table decorations were in pink, cherry blossoms predominating. Large pink hearts, and streamers of hearts of that color were hung in every doorway. Cherry blossoms festooned the moulding in the dining room. Even the electric lights were pink shaded. The effect was very pretty and the entire decorative scheme, harmonious. Guests were served at eight small tables, four persons being seated at each.

Mrs. Fred W. Creesy was in charge of the waitresses. They were Mrs. Frederick Sherwood, Mrs. Richard Tull, Mrs. Joseph Vought, Mrs. Read-Holliday, Miss Emily Moore, Mrs. George Eberlee and Mrs. Emil Sckardt. These ladies wore butterfly hats and bijou heart-trimmed aprons tied with fancy ribbons. The service reached the pink of perfection.

Mrs. Charles W. Fernald superintended the culinary department, ably assisted by Miss Ethel Kyte.

BORO STUDENTS DANCE.

About forty members of the North Plainfield High School enjoyed an impromptu dance in Saengerbund Hall last evening. Despite the weather conditions there was a large crowd present and music was furnished by Miss Florence Walsh, of this city. Many of the new dances were mingled with the two step and waltz. The following ladies acted as chaperones: Miss Helenray, Mrs. W. O. Taylor, Mrs. Warren Townley and Mrs. Frank Rowley. The dance was in charge of Lester Chandler and Rusell Lee.

NO GAME FOR BORO GIRLS.

Because most of the members of the basketball team were to have gone to Jersey City today, Manager Lillian Spencer postponed the game with Millburn that was to be played in Saengerbund Hall this afternoon. The boys will meet the Cranford team this afternoon if it is possible for the boys from down the road to get here.

Recital at Congregational Church.

Miss Mary Heary, violinist; Mr. George Carre, tenor, Monday evening, February 16, at the Congregational church. Tickets one dollar, on sale at Armstrong's, Miller's, Hodge's, Randolph's. Proceeds to furnish the new parish house.—Adv. 2 14 2 ***

K. OF P. OBSERVE BIRTH OF ORDER

Perseverance Lodge Entertains its Friends Upon Anniversary Event.

ATTRACTIVE PROGRAM

Including Speeches by Grand Lodge Officers, Vocal and Instrumental Music—Banquet Served—History of the Organization.

Celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Knights of Pythias, the third largest of the great fraternal organizations in this country, was had last night at Odd Fellows' Hall, in the Babcock building, on West Front street, by the members of Perseverance Lodge, No 74, Knights of Pythias, of this city, their wives and families. The Plainfield Knights of Pythias, who are members of this lodge number 242. They are representative men of this community, identified with all lines of trade and number not a few professional men among them. One and all of the members present last night joined in celebration of the order's half century of progress and with their families made a jolly night of it.

Following a pleasing entertainment, given by Professor Hendrickson, of Brooklyn, who gave an excellent exhibition of sleight-of-hand tricks, and Miss Edith Beach, who sang several solos, playing her own accompaniments, and who also recited in a pleasing manner, there was speechmaking and later in the evening the guests of the lodge enjoyed a banquet which was served on a lower floor of the building.

Founded in the city of Washington, soon after the close of the Civil War, the order of Knights of Pythias has grown surprisingly. It was started with a total membership of thirteen. Of the original members two were residents of the State of New Jersey. They were Matthew H. Vanderveer, of Somrville, and his brother, Abram T. Vanderveer, the latter long an employe of the government at Washington. The order is now the third largest organization of its kind in the United States. Its membership greatly exceeds 70,000. Next Thursday, February 19, the fiftieth anniversary of the order is to be fittingly celebrated, with imposing ceremonials, in Washington, its birthplace. A number of Plainfield members of the order expect to attend the ceremonies on that occasion.

Justus H. Rathbone was the founder of the order. The first lodge, with its thirteen charter members, was instituted on February 19, 1864. It had its conception in the exemplifications of the life test of true friendship existing between two Pythagoreans, "Damon and Pythias," in the ancient city of Syracuse, in far off Sicily, 2,300 years ago. The foundation, or cardinal principles of this great fraternity, it was said at last night's celebration, are friendship, charity and benevolence. The order recognizes the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man and represents, as the several speakers declared last night, the ideals of patriotism, teaching loyalty to country, flag, government and good citizenship. Character is the basis of the order, the test being not what a man has, nor what he knows, but what he is. Broad and catholic in its scope, no form of religion or political faith or creed bars entry to the Knights of Pythias, to any candidate. He must, however, it was said, avow his sense of moral responsibility by expression of his belief in the existence of a Supreme Being.

The Knights of Pythias has a military branch, known as "The Army of the Lily," which was organized in 1878 and which has, it is said, been a source of great strength to the organization. It also has an insurance department. This is under the direction and management of the Supreme Lodge. The Knights of Pythias lodges in the State of New Jersey number 129, with a total membership of 14,255. Lodges of the order are to be found in every State and province of the United States and Canada; also in Mexico, Cuba, Panama, in the Philippines, in China, New Zealand, and in Hawaii. The Supreme Lodge, which has world-wide jurisdiction, is composed of representatives from the 55 Grand Lodges of the order. In one year, 1909, the lodges of this order in New Jersey paid the sum of $72,483.27 for the relief of members and for the burial of the dead.

Abraham Victorson, of Dunellen, is the chancellor commander and head of Perseverance Lodge. Given by Mrs. Charles Burnett Morse at Her Home Yesterday Afternoon.

Miss Alice Barlow was given a miscellaneous shower at the home of Mrs. Charles Burnett Morse on Watchung avenue, yesterday afternoon, twelve of her friends attending the affair, which was a complete surprise arranged by Mrs. Morse. The house was appropriately decorated for the affair with red hearts and othe novelties of the St. Valentine season and favors of a similar variety were distributed among the guests.

Mrs. M. C. Peddie, of New York, assisted Mrs. Morse in receiving and the "shower" was a thoroughly enjoyable affair, entertainment consisting of card games and music being provided for those present. Miss Barlow, whose marriage to Walter Swain will take place in the early spring, was the recipient of a number of handsome and useful gifts. Miss M. A. Tabor was awarded first honors in the card games played.

PLAINFIELDERS AT WILSON'S RECEPTION AT WHITE HOUSE

Mayor and Mrs. Percy H. Stewart Mr. and Mrs. John P. Stevens, Chas. H. Frost, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie R. Fort and Dr. William L. Saunders are among the local people who attended the reception given last night by the President and Mrs. Wilson and the Misses Wilson to their friends from New Jersey, their home State. It was probably the first time in the history of the executive mansion that a reception had been given there especially for the people of one State. There was no room to doubt that the Jerseyites appreciated the honor. In the absence of the President, Vice President Marshall received with Mrs. Wilson and her daughters.

Governor Fielder and half a dozen who aspire to be governor, together with the judiciary, the New Jersey delegation in Congress, the members of the Democratic State committee, the editors who work with pen and brain the year round to keep the Democratic party in fighting trim in New Jersey—all were there. Secretary Tumulty, himself a loyal New Jersey Democrat, acted as master of ceremonies. The Marine Band dispensed music and altogether it was a proud day for New Jersey.

The accident happened near the Hibernian mountains as Mr. Zeek was driving, with a friend, towards Plainfield, where he was coming to visit his sons. His hurts were pronounced fatal at the Morristown Hospital, his skull and ribs being fractured. He died at midnight Thursday. Besides the three sons who are in business in Plainfield, Mr. Zeek leaves two other sons, a wife and a daugater. He lived on a farm, in the vicinity of Dover, and was reputed to be wealthy. The funeral will be held tomorrow at his late home.

CHURCH MUST SEVER RELATION

Classis of Newark Gives Christ Reformed Church Until March 12 to Act.

EXERCISES AUTHORITY

Unless Deposed Minister Gets Out Further Recognition and Support of Church Will Be Withdrawn by Classis.

Unless Christ Reformed church, of Newark, dissolves its relationship with Rev. Percival H. Barker by March 12 next, the Classis of Newark, which has authority over all the churches of the denomination in the Classis, will withdraw its support from that church and have nothing further to do with the congregation. This was decided at a meeting of the Classis held in the North Reformed church, Newark, yesterday. Rev. J. Y. Broek, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, this city, who, with F. E. Smith, attended, presented the resolutions to the above effect and they were adopted.

Rev. Mr. Barker was formerly identified with the Presbytery of Kansas, but was deposed from the ministry by that church. He then accepted a call from Christ Reformed church, Newark. This was some time ago, and since then he has been trying to clear himself of charges brought against him by the Presbytery of Kansas. Recently the latter body met and sustained its previous action. Now the Classis of Newark, proposes that the relations shall be severed or it will withdraw is support and refuse to recognize it as a part of the Reformed Church in America. The resolutions adopted yesterday unanimously are as follows:

"The Classis of Newark expresses its deep regret that the Consistory of Christ Reformed church has failed to comply with a resolution unanimously adopted at a special meeting of the Classis held on December 13, 1913, and agreed to by the members of said Consistory present at that meeting, and which is as follows:

"'Resolved that Christ Reformed church be given until February 1, 1914, to clear itself in the matter of P. H. Barker, and if at that time he be not cleared and able to produce his credentials, that Christ Reformed church be advised to immediately dissolve the relationship existing between them and Mr. Barker.'

"The Classis hereby calls the attention of Christ Reformed church to Article II, Section 17, of the Constitution of the Reformed church in America which reads as follows: 'Consistories of vacant congregations shall not invite or permit ministers of other denominations, whose characters and standing are not known, to preach within their bounds, unless they exhibit satisfactory evidence in writing, of a recent date, of their regular authority for that purpose, and their good standing; and in all doubtful cases, such Consistories shall consult a standing committee of Classis, to be appointed for that purpose.'

"The meaning of this article is clear, and does not admit of argument. The Classis feels itself in duty bound to enforce the requirements of the Constitution. Therefore be it resolved:

"1. That we hereby formally notify the Consistory of Christ Reformed church that in retaining in their pulpit P. H. Barker, recently deposed from the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., they are openly violating the constitution of the Reformed Church in America, to which they have pledged their allegiance.

"2. That the Classis of Newark to whom the supervision of the churches under its care is intrusted, hereby demands that the Consistory of Christ Reformed church to comply with the Constitution of the Reformed Church in America by terminating the relationship now existing between said church and P. H. Barker, and close the pulpit against him on or before March 12, 1914, unless proper credentials are presented by said P. H. Barker on or before that date.

"3. That the Clasis of Newark call the attention of the Consistory of Christ Reformed church to the authority invested in said Classis over said Consistory as contained in Article VII, Section 2, of the Constitution of the Reformed Church in America.

"4. That when the Classis adjourns today, it adjourn to meet on Friday, March 13, 1914, at 2 p. m., in the North Reformed church, and that the Consistory of Christ Reformed church be hereby directed to report to the Classis at that time their action with reference to this demand on the part of the Classis.

"5. That the Stated Clerk of the Classis be directed to forward at once a copy of these resolutions to the Clerk of the Consistory of Christ Reformed church.

MISSING HEIR FOUND THROUGH NEWS ITEM

Edward Riley Will Establish Big Livery With Money He Expects to Get.

Reading an article published in The Daily Press of yesterday afternoon, Edward L. Riley called at this office this morning and announced that he was the missing heir sought by executors of the will. In yesterday's story reference was made to a missing Edward L. Riley, who was thought to be a resident of this city, but efforts to locate him were unavailing and the search was practically abandoned until this morning, when he put in appearance.

Riley claims that he has lived here for the past two months, being employed by the Central Livery Stables on East Second street, and that he will leave for Richmond, Va., tonight, to get the bequests. Upon returning Riley declares that he will live the "simple life" that he has been used to and will establish another livery stable in the Queen City.

The news of the "windfall" came as a big surprise to Riley and he was anxious to secure further information on the subject. According to a statement the heir said he left home six years ago and has not seen his father nor heard of the parents death during that time. He claims that he never "did get along with his father" and the "windfall" came as a big surprise for this reason.

Providing he can raise a chattel mortgage on his property before nightfall, Riley will be on his way to Richmond tonight and expects to return to Plainfield within the next ten days. He is the only heir of Thomas Riley, of Waterloo Va., and expects little trouble in establishing his claim. He will receive a farm worth $10,000 and $20,000 in cold cash.

PLAN FOR COUNTY SUFFRAGE MEETING

To Be Held in Elizabeth Under Auspices of New Jersey Men's League.

In spite of the severe storm there was a full attendance at the meeting of the New Jersey Men's League for Woman Suffrage held at the residence of Edgar A. Knapp in Elizabeth, last night, to prepare for a woman suffrage mass meeting to be held in Elizabeth on Monday, March 9. A letter from Mayor Mravlag was read read expressing his sympathy with the movement.

Among those present besides Mr. Knapp were Mayor Fish, of Roselle Park; former Mayor G. W. V. Moy, of Plainfield; Judge James C. Connolly, of Elizabeth; Julius F. Van-Riper, of Westfield; C. C. Wheeler and George T. Hughes, of Watchung, Champlain L. Riley, of North Plainfield, who was chairman of the meeting; Messrs. Calhoun, Huse, S. T Jones, and other prominent supporters of the cause in Elizabeth and other Union county towns.

In opening the meeting, Mr. Riley quoted Mrs. Sherman B. Joost, of Plainfield, who stated at the hearing on the suffrage resolution before the State Legislature recently that Union county is the centre of anti-suffrage activity—Plainfield and Elizabeth having organized clubs. It was therefore decided to hold a Union county mass meeting, which will be attended by suffragists from Elizabeth Westfield, Cranford, Rahway, Summit, Plainfield and elsewhere throughout the county.

Judge Connolly was unanimously chosen chairman of the special committee in charge. Among the vice chairmen are Mayor Mravlag, Edgar A. Knapp and Mr. Colhoun. The Elizabeth League, of which Miss Esther Ogden is president, has taken up active preparations for the meeting and other suffrage organizations throughout the county will be invited to co-operate. There will be a large delegation from Plainfield and vicinity.

The success which has attended the passage of the concurrent resolution through the Assembly has aroused suffragists all over the State to the fact that in only one year and a few months the voters of this State will be asked to decide whether New Jersey women shall vote. Every Union county man who believes that they should is expected to attend the approaching meeting. Special auto busses will be on hand to take those who wish to apply from Plainfield, Fanwood, Westfield, Cranford and Roselle, returning after the meeting. C. C. Wheeler of Watchung, has this matter in charge.

Rev. C. P. Tinker, of New York, will speak at Grace church parish house, Monday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock on "The Bright Side of Immigration."

SNOW FOLLOWS ZERO WEATHER

POOR FAMILIES SUFFER

Both City and Borough Officials Receive Many Applications for Aid—Charity Organization Society is Busy Looking After Needy Ones.

With the cessation of the intense cold weather that Plainfield has experienced for the past few days, has come snow, and lots of it. Streets and avenues, in this city, are coverer with a blanket of white. The storm Gods raged last night and throughout today. Traffic has been seriously interfered with on railroads and trolleys. Commuters who are used to making the daily trip between Plainfield and New York were, for the most part, late in arriving at their destinations this morning. The snow storm, which, owing to the wind that blew at times very hard last night, piled the snow in drifts, in some cases as high as three feet. Few pedestrians were abroad last night and those that were found walking extremely difficult and progress slow. It was a riotous, bitter night.

With the coming of the snow, arriving as it did, upon the heels of the most bitter weather that Plainfielders have experienced thus far this winter, there have been many calls for aid from those in dire circumstances. Overseer-of-the-Poor Garret T. Dunham said today that although he had aided the unfortunate, yet he had not received nearly as many appeals for help in a material form as he had expected owing to the rigorous weather. It is believed, however, that numerous poor families in this city will be obliged to ask for aid within the next few days as a result of the inclement weather. Provision has been made to assist such.

Twelve families have been supplied with coal and groceries by the local branch of the Charity Organization Society, of which Miss Mabelle Phillips is the agent. Snow shovels have also been given applicants today by the organization so that the men asking for them could secure work in clearing yards and sidewalks about the city.

Applicants for shelter at the Rescue Mission last night were so many that the place was ocercrowded. The Plainfield police station sheltered six needy individuals, all of them expressing themselves as being very glad at receiving permission to avail themselves of even the crude and uncomfortable lodgings provided by the municipality. It is only dire need that drives men to seek shelter in a police station.

Overseer-of-the-poor Fred. Becker, of North Plainfield, said today that he had not received more than the usual appeals for food and fuel from the poor residents of the borough although he was anticipating a number of such requests. All deserving persons will be aided. There were no applicants for aid at the North Plainfield police station. Chief Marshal George Weiss said today. Street Commissioner Uhrahahn had a gang of men out with four big snow plows early today clearing streets and avenues that were drifted high with snow.

Conditions on the local trolley lines were bad all day. Last night the service was deplorable and motormen and conductors shivered with the cold, the fast falling snowflakes at times obscuring the headlights on the cars and making traffic slow and dangerous because of slippery and ice covered rails. Hot coffee and sandwiches were served the employes of the trolley roads all night and also today.

All day traffic on the local lines has been very irregular. Only one car was run on the Netherwood line, one on Arlington avenue and one on Fourth street. Each car was run on what was said to be half hour schedule but the waits between cars were considerably longer. In all Plainfield only four trolley cars were operated throughout the day. Two snow plows and two sweepers were operated in an heroic effort to keep the lines clear but the task was almost superhuman. Cars on the Main Line were run on about an hour schedule. The snow blocked everything. In the vicinity of West End and Dunellen the trolley tracks were piled high with drifts that were impassable. Besides the snow plows and sweepers that were kept in action the Public Service Corporation had fully 100 men at work with shovels.

Travel on the line of the New Jersey Central was much interfered with by the heavy snowfall. Trains leaving Plainfield were nearly all late. In some cases trains were hours delayed. Information was received at the local office of the railroad company early today that the yards at Jersey City were completely blocked and it was found impossible to move

Talk No. 40

LET THE children chew MO-JOs as much as they want to! It will aid their digestion, and keep their teeth white.

Mothers know that when their child puts a MO-JO into its mouth, it is putting something there that is clean and wholesome.

The fact that MO-JOs are white and other gums are muddy brown shows the difference between them.

MO-JOs are made from crude gum that has been thoroughly cleaned by a special process.

That's why they are white—why they are dainty and different.

SCRAPS FROM EVERYWHERE

Jabez Wolfee, the Glasgow swimmer, famous through his efforts to swim the English Channel, is to make an attempt to swim from the Eddystone Rock to Plymouth, a distance of 14 miles. The swim has never been accomplished, and it is thought impossible of achievement, as it is across the tideways.

In a storm off the coast of Jutland a Danish vessel recently shipped a huge sea which swept one of the crew overboard. The vessel was brought round and life belts thrown out, one of which he caught. While arrangements were being made to lower a boat another wave carried the man back on deck, where he was grasped by his shipmates.

—To go straight to the right store, at the right time, in making a particular purchase, is not a matter of luck, or of general knowledge of the stores—but of keeping in touch with them advertising all the time.

IF KIDNEYS ACT BAD TAKE SALTS

Says Backache is Sign You Have Been Eating Too Much Meat.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink

REFORMATORY FOR TWO LOCAL YOUTHS

McCarthy and Mischell Sent to Jamesburg and Austin Given Another Chance.

Francis McCarthy, Joseph Mischell and Stephen Austin, the three Plainfield boys who were caught in Jersey City by Detectives Hines, Saturday night, after robbing three local stores and getting away with a lot of small loot, were arraigned before Judge James C. Connolly in the Juvenile Court yesterday, and McCarthy and Mischell, who are old offenders, were sent to Jamesburg and Austin was placed in the custody of his mother. Three weeks ago Mischell and McCarthy were arraigned before the court on a similar charge and were given another chance to make good

Austin, because of his previous good record, was dealt leniently with and he was brought back to Plainfield last night. The thefts committed by the trio of youths in this city last Saturday night were a set of the most daring ever recorded in this city. They visited the stores of Whithall, Olmsted and Zimmerman in this city, and at the latter place prepared a banquet which they disposed of and afterwards visited a motion picture show, returning to the Zimmerman store later in the evening and eating a second meal.

MUHLENBERG HOSPITAL ACTIVITIES INCREASING

Muhlenberg Hospital's activities indicate that the new Private Room Building was not opened any too soon, according to the recent demands. There are now thirteen private rooms occupied in the new building and six patients are being cared for in the semi-private rooms. There are thirty-five patients in the general service and one emergency case in the maternity building, making a total of fifty-five patients being cared for in the various buildings.

During the past week there were from twenty to twenty-five operations, and on Tuesday there were eight cases, involving fourteen operations. On Wednesday there were three operations and on Thursday, a holiday usually observed at the hospital, there were four cases involving five operations.

The Board of Governors in conjunction with the medical board and members of the auxiliary staff have been co-operating with a view to bringing the hospital up to the highest efficiency and the efforts are now bearing fruitful results. There was recently a case of a woman, previously a patient at Muhlenberg, who came from Long Island to this city, to avail herself of Muhlenberg service, speaking fell for treatment she received dudring her former illness.

EFFICIENCY SHOWN AT STATE GIRLS' HOME

Further evidence of the efficiency with which the State Home for Girls has been conducted is that not a single death has occurred in the institution since 1907, although there have been as many as 200 inmates in the home at a time, ranging from infants to girls of twenty-one years of age. The health conditions at the home are excellent according to recent reports. Sugestions have been made, which if carried through, will place the sanitation on an even higher plane of efficiency.

David T. Kenney, of the borough, is a member of the board of trustees of the school. He is much interested in and attended the investigation yesterday.

CRESCENT AVENUE PREACHERS

At the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church tomorrow morning, the Rev. Robert Mackenzie, D. D., LL.D., formerly of the Rutgers Presbyterian church, in New York city, will preach. At the afternoon service the pulpit will be occupied by the Rev. Dr. Philip B. Strong, pastor of the First Baptist church, of this city.

BIG MORTGAGE EXECUTED.

A $50,000,000 mortgage, executed by Swift & Company, a branch of which is located in this city, covering all of the company's property in fifteen States, was received at the register's office in Elizabeth yesterday. The issue matures in thirty years.

FUNERAL OF MISS PHILPOTT.

The funeral of Miss Cornelia Philpott, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Philpott, will be held at her late residence, 36 Norwood avenue, tomorrow evening, February 15, at 7 o'clock. Burial will be in Cypress Hills cemetery, in Brooklyn, at noon on Monday.

RECITAL POSTPONED.

On account of the inclement weather the St. Valentine's Day recital which was to have been given by the class pupils of Miss Karr, at her studio, in the Babcock building, on West Front street, has been postponed until next Saturday afternoon, February 21, at 3 o'clock.

BAPTIST WOMEN HOLD ANNUAL PRAYER SERVICE

Members of the foreign missionary societies of the Baptist churches in this city and Scotch Plains held their annual prayer service for forfrom 3 totmel odT,Mb'uinficmfwyp eign missions yesterday afternoon Avenue Baptist church. The churches represented at the gathering were the Park Avenue Baptist church, the First Baptist church, the Temple Baptist church, and the Scotch Plains Baptist church. Representatives of each of the churches mentioned were allotted a half hour in which to conduct part of the services. There will be a meeting of the Federation of Women's Missionary Societies held in this city next Thursday, when there will be an interesting discussion of home missions.

BASEBALL NOTES

Maine is back on the baseball map. Portland and Lewiston will have teams in the New England League this season.

It will be up to Bobby Byrne to fill Otto Knabe's place with the Phillies. Though heretofore he has played at third Bobby will now tackle the job at second base.

Terry Turner, of the Naps: Joe Bush, of the Athletics, and Grover Alexander, of the Phillies, were the first big leagures to reach Hot Springs for the annual tuning up.

Fred Glade, formerly a member of the St. Louis Browns' pitching staff, is now a baseball magnate. He is interested in the Grand Island club of the Nebraska State League.

Two more Redskins are to take a fling at the national pastime. Manager Zellar, of the Pittsfield Eastern Association team, has signed Big Six Jocks and Pine Tree Nelson, full-blood Iroquois.

What with keeping tab on the headquarters of the American League, the Federal League, the Chicago White Sox, the Chicago Cubs and the Chicago Feds, Chicago baseball scribes have nothing to do till tomorrow.

Columbia, S. C., and Augusta, Ga., have re-entered the South Atlantic League, making an eight-club circuit The other members of the league are Charleston, S. C.; Jacksonville, Fla., and Macon, Albany, Savvanh and Columbus, Ga.

According to Clyde Milan, the Senators' star outfielder, the jinks will surely tag any player who signs a contract before he arrives at the spring training camp. Clyde never signs up until he is on the ground ready for work.

"Whoa Bill" Phillips, former big league pitcher and now manager of the Indianapolis Federal League team, believes he can "come back." The fact that he has a son in the game will not deter Bill from doing a little pitching himself this season.

A MUSICALE.

It is expected that there will be a large attendance of music lovers at the concert to be given under the auspices of the Woman's Association and the Men's Club, of the Congregational church, on Monday evening, February 16. Miss Mary Henry, the talented and well-known Scottish violinist, who not long since charmed a fashionable Montclair audience by her exquisite playing, will be heard, as will George Carr, whose name on any musical program in Brooklyn, generally is sufficient to insure the success of the affair. The accompanist will be Miss May, of New York, who will also give solos.

PERSONAL.

George Griffin, Frank C. Krewson and Harry Acker, of the Griffin Hardware Company, have returned from Philadelphia, where they attended a convention of hardware men.

ADDRESSED MOTHERS' ASSN.

W. D. Murray addressed the members of the Plainfield Mothers Association at a meeting held in the Public Library rooms yesterday afternoon on "The Child," describing at length the peculiarities of a child at each stage of its growth. Mr. Murray dealt with the characteristics of the average youth and told of the various conditions that had been brought to his personal attention.

—Merchants realize that the housewives who appreciate "special sales" are critical buyers—and that mere price-lure is not enough. The goods must be RIGHT.

Backache Kidneys weak?

Distressed with urinary ills?

Want a reliable kidney remedy?

Don't have to look far. Use what Plainfield people recommend. Every street in Plainfield has its cases.

Here's one Plainfield man's experience.

Let C. L. Treat, painter and paperhanger, of 411 East Third street, tell it.

Says Mr. Treat "I suffered for a long time from kidney trouble and for years could not get relief. My back ached constantly and there was pain across my kidneys. My kidneys were in bad shape and I became all run down, in fact, was almost a physical wreck. Hearing of Doan's Kidney Pills, I got a supply and they made me feel like a different man. I got this remedy at Randolph's drug store and my experience was so satisfactory that I cannot make my endorsement of it too strong. I simply would not be without a supply of Doan's Kidney Pills on hand."

"GET THE COMMUNITY SPIRIT."

Plainfield is a good city; let's make it still better! We can help make it a better place by telling your friends the advantages of living and doing business here—ask them to locate in Plainfield.

From a business man's point of view, there are four things that make a town grow:

FIRST—The civic pride that impels its population to patronize local stores and home industries thus increasing local prosperity and help make a reputation.

SECOND—Attracting manufacturing interests so that the wage-earning population is increased.

THIRD—Attracting additional population by advertising.

FOURTH—Providing sanitary, health-giving surroundings—consequently a lower death rate than birth rate.

What does "town growth" mean? It means larger population and a greater amount of wealth in local circulation. It means more taxpayers—consequently, adequate funds for more school houses and public buildings, better roads, public parks, better sanitary conditions and recreation as well as civic centre work. It means increasing values in the property of those who have had faith in Plainfield, and have helped it grow.

But a town grows only as fast as its individual citizens help it forward by co-operating with each other.

Are you doing your share?

The town that boasts of the largest number of prosperous retail stores advertises itself as a prosperous community.

Plainfield has a large number of progressive, prosperous and reliable stores—they are successful and prosperous because they are reliable shops—owned and managed by reliable men, and as Emerson says: "A business or an institution is only the lengthened shadow of one man.

National advertising has today brought every metropolitan luxury before the dweller of the small town just as quickly as to the resident of the city. Today you can buy in our Plainfield stores the same high grades of merchandise that the metropolitan shopper can get in any of the department stores of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or anywhere else, and you get better service. When you make your purchases in the Plainfield stores you are developing local trade and contributing your share to the upbuilding of our beautiful city.

The truly American spirit of today is represented by the spirit of the dweller in the town toward his home industries and the progress of his community. The large city population is always shifting.

But the man who stays in a small town—owns property there—patronizes home industries, and local stores—builds the town.

He helps to attract new industries and make his city better known all over the country. It is the thousands of towns in the country which have been built up by such a "Community Spirit" that produce the best type of citizens and finest institutions.

You as a consumer can help develop local prosperity by patronizing home stores.

You as a taxpayer, can help attract new industries and make your own holdings more valuable by talking "Community Spirit" and encouraging your family and friends to do everything that makes for local development.

DO IT FOR PLAINFIELD.

SAMUEL ROTHBERG.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY LINES TO A COUNCILMAN.

No doubt you'll think our attitude is just a little bold,
In asking what there is about this office that you hold,
That makes it so attractive to the men of every sphere
They'll almost sell their birthright just to try it for a year.
But really, Mr. Councilman, we understand it not
So that is why we ask you for the "info"-you have got.
We know the city gives you not a single cent of pay
But yet expects you on the job throughout the livelong day.
Your presence is requested at a meeting twice a week
And every other evening at a caucus you must speak
You're called away from dinner just to argue o'er the phone
Why someone ought to plan a scheme to kill the Tyler zone,
The "more saloons" fanatics whisper pleadings in your ear
While those opposed keep asking, "Won't you close them all this year?"
When late at night you crawl in bed, all tired out and sore
A small fry politician comes a knocking at your door
He says he simply dropped around to have a friendly chat
Then incidentally mentions that you don't know where you're at.
The "dope" that some "boob" gave you on that fire captain's job
Is the kind that makes himself and friends emit a choking sob;
Upon a pad he scribbles off the man who should be named
And says that if you stand for him you'll never be ashamed.
Whene'er you make a move to rise, he quickly calls out "Stop,"
I'd like to recommend a friend who'd make a dandy cop.
"And if in your department you perchance should need a clerk,
"I know a party voter who'd be glad to get the work."
Before his visit's over you are most a mental wreck,
Just sane enough to wish that you could wring his cussed neck
He goes at last, and wearily, you make your way upstairs,
To roll and toss about all night because of civic cares.
Next morning, to yourself you say, while full of aches and pains,
"Just one more week of Council, then it's me for Morris Plains."
We know that every bit of this is absolutely true,
Accordingly, we'd like to hear what first attracted you
To running for this office, won't you tell us now, please do,
Because we've got a notion that we'd like to try it, too.

REFUSES TO SUBMIT TO COLD AIR TREATMENT

Thomas Lynch, until recently a patient at Bonnie Burn Sanatorium, is causing the health authorities of Summit, considerable trouble. Lynch who escaped from the sanatarium at Scotch Plains, because he disliked the out-of-door treatment given tubercular patients and who said he wanted to be allowed to "die in a warm place," refuses to try to get well in a cold one. The Summit authorities will, it is said, endeavor, if necessary, resort to legal measures to force Lynch's return to the hospital for treatment. He is now living with friends in Summit and says that he proposes to remain there.

RABBI SCHOENBRUN ON "CHEERFULNESS"

Those who ventured out in spite of the strom last night to hear the Rev. Rabbi Samuel Schoenbrun, at Temple Sholem, were well repaid. His sermon was on "Cheerfulness." The address was a spirited one and the speaker touched upon the shortness of one's span of life, the duty that one owed his neighbor and himself to be cheerful and indicated that cheerfulnees of heart and spirit was contagious and good for the social and religious spirit of any community.

Those who listened to Rabbi Schoenbrun left convinced, it is believed, that besides getting the "community spirit" they should also absorb and retain a cheerful appearance.

BARNUM AND BAILEY PLAN TO SHOW HERE NEXT MAY

The advance guard of Barnum & Bailey's circus arrived in town with the snowstorm today after an absence from this city since 1896 to make arrangements for the appearance of the big show here on May 15 next. Since the last appearance of the "biggest show on earth" in this city fiftten years ago the circus grounds have been divided up into building lots and houses now stand where the animals ran wild.

The agents called on Chief of Police Kiely this morning and secured information regarding the laws and restrictions pertaining to shows of this nature in Plainfield and a visit to the mayor followed. The circus agents appeared to think that the license rate in Plainfield was a trifle exorbitant and intimated that they would go outside of the city limits unless a more satisfactory agreement could be arrived at. It is not thought that the show managers will take the tents over the city lines as they would thus be deprived of police protection which is very essential in this work.

WEATHER KEEPS BOROUGH GIRLS FROM CONFERENCE

Twenty-eight girls of the North Plainfield High School were disappointed this morning because the weather conditions would not allow them to attend the annual conference of the Northern New Jersey and Yonkers High School girls' club that is being held at Jersey City today. The delegation that was to represent the borough school this year was the largest that has ever been sent to a convention. The girls represent the two high school clubs, the Sigma Gamma Kappa and the Camp Fire Girls and were to take the entire trip by automobile. They were to arrive in Jersey City in time to attend the annual opening luncheon and then attend all of the afternoon meetings.

Miss Eva Terry, guardian of the Sigma Gamma Kappa, was to have had charge of the local delegation and Miss Lucy Douglas, president, of that club, was to report to the meeting the work of the borough clubs during the past year. Four members of the Y. W. C. A. were also to accompany the schoolgirls on the trip. Those who were to attend the conference are the Misses Eva Terry, Lucy Douglas, Louise Seader, Bertha Martin, Marion Chandler, Ann Hull, Edith Dalley, Margaret Ewart, Bertha Keller, Marjorie Burtis, Laura Smith, Marion Wooley, Edna Green, Naomi Wisch, Lois Peck, Helen Yates, Helen Ryno, Katherine Giddings, Marion Avery, Carol Hughes, Lucy Hughes, Marielle Dunham, Margaret Vossler, Dorothy Martin from the borough school, and the Misses Gardner, Wetherall, Marjorie Penny and Mary Hawkins, of the Y. W. C. A.

No date has been set for the wedding.

trains on anything that resembled schedule time. A cattle train was stalled at Cottage place nearly all of last night and today an engine ran out of water stalling numerous cars filled with lowing cattle who, naturally, suffered considerably from exposure to the weather.

ure to the weather. Mrs. S. H. Van Doesen, local agent of the S. P. C. A., looked after the comfort of the cattle on the stalled trains and forced the railroad company to move the loads of beasts at the earliest possible moment.

Because of the snow the Plainfield Ice & Supply Company found it impossible to begin its harvest of ice at Watchung lake today. Tomorrow the snow will be drenched with water, and the surface of the lake scraped. Work at harvesting will be begun early Monday morning. Only 25 men reported for work today. The company needs at least 150 men. They will be paid good wages. The ice in Watchung lake is said to average 10 inches today.

The storm has interfered considerably with telephone service. Over 30,000 local calls were expected to be replied to by the local office today, according to Manager A. B. Wilson. Calls made were somewhat delayed notwithstanding the fact that a dozen extra operators were employed at the local telephone exchange. Automobiles were sent for extra operators early today when it was found that the storm was a serious one.

Few persons, except they were on business bent, ventured out today and there were postponements of luncheons, musicales and other society functions which had been scheduled, on account of the bad weather.

A big five-ton moving motor truck, belonging to William Willoughby, of Westfield, was stalled in a huge drift on Park avenue, opposite the Plainfield Trust Company's building, at 3 o'clock this morning. It was hours before the vehicle could be moved. A small automobile runabout was also caught in a drift on Park avenue, near the office of The Daily Press, its engine having frozen up.

Owing to the drifted and impassable conditions of the roads in this vicinity the funeral of Mrs. Annie Ashton, wife of William Ashton, of East Sixth street, this city, was not held this morning. No services were held at the family residence, nor at St. Mary's R. C. church. The date of the funeral will be announced later. Burial will be in St. Joseph's cemetery, Bound Brook.

PARLOR MEETING.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union will hold a parlor meeting Tuesday night at the home of Mrs. W. J. Hamilton, on East Seventh street ,especially for the teachers in the Plainfield High School. Mrs. Isabelle Demarest, of Closter, corresponding secretary of the State W. C. T. U., will be the special speaker.

FIRM DISSOLVES.

A notice appears in today's issue of The Daily Press of the dissolution of the firm of Terry Brothers, who have conducted a paper-hanging business in this city for some time past. Franklin Terry will hereafter conduct the business with offices at 171 Somerset street.

Rev. Gabriel Reid Maguire, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, will preach tomorrow morning on "Intercession," and in the evening on "The Struggle for Bread."

GREAT CHANGES AT PANAMA CANAL WITH COMING ADMINISTRATION

Zone Will Be Scene of Commercial Enterprises.

Uncle Sam Will Become a Big Storekeeper.

NOW that the Panama canal is about completed and a civil government is to be installed with Colonel Goethals as governor, on April 1, there will be a quick transformation scene. The diggers of the ditch disappear from the stage, and automatically, as it were, the great administrative organization representing the management of the enterprise dissolves. The canal commission ceases to exist, and the management of the strip passes to the hands of the governor, who is appointed by and responsible to the president of the United States.

The peace organization of the canal will be wholly commercial, but in case of war it will at once be handed over to the military. The dozen or so colliers employed ordinarily to fetch coal for sale will, under the circumstances, be available for use by the navy, and the dry dock and repair shops, which are to be built for the convenience of vessels of all nations, will be utilized exclusively for our own ships of war.

The next important question confronting the present management is what to do with some 30,000 work people whose services will not much longer be required. Undoubtedly a good many of them would prefer to remain, but without regular work to do they would become a source of trouble. Furthermore, it is not the government's wish that the zone shall be populated save for the military and the few thousands of employees whom for reasons presently to be explained it will be necessary to retain.

For some time past Uncle Sam has been buying up all the land in the ten mile strip which belonged to private owners. The government wishes to obtain exclusive proprietorship over the zone mainly because the safety of the canal will be insured thereby.

A LATE PICTURE OF GATUN LAKE.

There has been some discussion of the possibilities of the territory for agriculture, but no farming is to be allowed there.

Roughly speaking, about half the working force is employed under contracts which require that the employee shall be returned to his home, in the West Indies or elsewhere, at the end of a given term of service. In thousands of other instances the men will be sent back even though lacking any such guarantee, because it is necessary to get rid of them. As far as possible the canal commission is trying to get work for them elsewhere by advertising, labor recruiting agents being invited to apply to the chief quartermaster at Culebra.

Most people do not realize that the Panama canal, apart from the performance of its function as an interoceanic highway, is destined to be a great and highly profitable commercial enterprise. For one thing, it will deal in coal, selling, it is expected, at least 1,000,000 tons yearly. It is reckoned that on an average every ship passing through the ditch will need 500 tons of coal or an equivalent in other fuel. There are no coaling stations nearer than Newport News, on the Atlantic side, or San Francisco, on the Pacific, and the price of fuel at South American ports is very high. Accordingly preparations for handling coal are now being made on a large scale, and great tanks are being built to hold fuel oil for oil-burning vessels.

This, however, is only one feature of the contemplated business. The government is going to furnish ships with food and many other kinds of supplies. There will be a demand for fresh meats, groceries, vegetables, canned goods and particularly ice. In order to furnish these things the great commissary plant at Cristobal will be made a permanent affair, with its immense storehouses, its bakery, which has been turning out over 5,000,000 loaves of bread a year, and its ice making plant and cold storage outfit, the latter one of the largest and most admirably equipped in the world. This cold storage plant will keep in stock great quantities of fresh vegetables, fresh fruits, fresh eggs and even fresh cream and milk, brought from the States.

Business firms have eagerly sought to obtain concessions permitting them to establish supply houses in the zone, but the government has refused, partly because Uncle Sam thinks he might as well turn all the profit into his own pocket, expecting it to be very great in the aggregate, and partly for the reason that, so long as he holds the monopoly, he will be in a position to control prices. It is not intended that these shall be unreasonable or extortionate.

WORKMEN'S HOUSES AT COLON.

There is nothing in the way of supplies that ships will not be able to obtain on their way through the canal. The plant at Cristobal is not only a converies of storehouses, but also an immense food factory.

Associated with this commissary department is a huge department store, which keeps everything imaginable in stock, from dry goods and notions to boots and shoes and ready made clothing, furniture and household crockery, hardware, tobacco and cigars, candy and tooth powder.

One thing that people who travel through the canal will want more than almost anything else is clean linen. To supply this demand a laundry, by far the largest and best equipped in the world, will be in operation throughout the year. It will wash and iron the collars, shirts, shirt waists and petticoats of all nations. All of its processes will be performed by electricity, even to the heating of the flatirons; and incidentally it will do a large business in pressing and cleaning clothes.

One should remember that it will take a ship something like forty-eight hours to go through the canal from one end to the other. Meanwhile the passengers will want to disembark for the time being and go sightseeing. For their accommodation and comfort several large hotels will be run by the government, caravansaries of the summer resort type, surrounded by parks screened to keep off the mosquitoes. The distance across the isthmus is thirty-eight miles, so that the visitor when ready to depart, can take a train over the Panama railroad and get aboard ship again at a few hours notice.

All of this commercial business, of course, will require a big force of employees. A considerable army is to be kept permanently in the zone, and the military, together with the people needed for managing and repairing the canal, will largely augment the demand for service of one kind or another. In addition, there will be the employees of the Panama railroad.

Obviously, then, even after the canal has been finished and is in operation, there must be in the zone several thousand civilian employees, all of whom, it may be presumed, will be Americans.

tural endowment. The two hundred and thirty acres are heavily timbered; there is an abundance of fistrate building stone; the coal veins on the land will supply the school for many years; and a splendid limestone branch, coming down from the heart of Pine Mountain will furnish water for a large reservoir. The neighborhood knows nothing of the timber famine; this spring a man burned 75,000 feet of magnificent lynn and poplar timber in clearing some new land for corn.

But the richest asset of the community is the children! Within a radius of seven miles are eight hundred children who have never known the influence of a good school. People sometimes think the mountains are already over-supplied with schools. They do not realize that the 13,000 square miles of mountain land in Kentucky would more than cover the whole of Massachusetts and Connecticut—and that to object to a school at Pine Mountain because there is already an excellent one at Hindman is like denying a school to Philadelphia because there are educational opportunities in New York. Shut off behind Pine Mountain these children have no chance unless a school comes to their midst.

Money has been given to begin the work and carry it on for a year and the Settlement is now putting up a seven-room log house for the first residence.

enjoyed at the banquet last night were Mrs. Thomas Caleen, Mrs. Frederick Douglass, Mrs. Ephraim Compton, Mrs. John G. Bicknell and daughters, Miss Adriane Bicknell, Miss Mary Bicknell, Miss Viola Bicknell, and last, but by no means least, the charming Miss Mildred Caleen, the daughter of Thomas Caleen, chairman of the good and welfare committee of the local lodge. Mr. Caleen, with John G. Bicknell and Benjamin Thomas, fellow members of that committee, had full charge of the banquet adrangements.

The officers of Perseverance Lodge No. 74, Knights of Pythias, are: Chancellor commander, Abraham Victorson; vice chancellor, Walter Baker; master at arms, Jeremiah Moore; master of work, Charles Barfelder; keeper of records and seals, Frederick Douglass; master of exchequer, John G. Bicknell; master of finance, J. B. Higgins; inner guard, Peter Lund; outside guard, Peter Strem; prelate, Benjamin Thomas.

Credit is due James Horton of the local lodge, for his culinary skill displayed in the great assistance given the members of the good and welfare committee, and their women assistants in preparing for the banquet.

The celebration, take it all in all, as some of the members said after the lights were out early this morning, was one of the most pleasing as well as one of the most successful affairs that Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, Knights of Pythias of Plainfield, has ever arranged and held.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS

Margaret Anglin is advocating a traveling company exclusively for Canadian towns.

From the box office viewpoint David Warfield's recent engagement in Chicago was one of the most successful ever played in that city.

There is soon to be a revival of "The Girl from Katy's," with Sam Bernard appearing in the leading role.

Ethel Levy is soon to return to the regular stage in London, playing with Gerald du Maurier in a comedy by Hubert Davies.

"Billy Black" is the title of a play in which H. B. Warner is soon to appear. Charles Bradley is the author of the piece.

Blanche Walsh is appearing in vaudeville in a one-act drama of Russian diplomatic life, "The Countess Nadine," by Joseph A. Golden.

James K. Hackett has presented to the Players' Club in New York the trowel with which his father, the late James H. Hackett, laid the cornerstone of the old Booth Theatre.

Henry Miller has started rehearsals for "Daddy Long-legs," which is to have its first presentation this month. The comedy is said to be as quaint as its title.

Henry Savage purposes to try "Along Came Ruth," a pretty sentimental play from the French stage, in New England within the next few weeks.

A new one-act play by Charles Bradley, entitled "Mimi," has been accepted for early production in London. Miss Annie Hughes, an English actress, will play the name part.

May Irwin is said to be considering a dramatization of one of Charles Dickens' stories, in which one of his humorous woman characters will be adapted for the stage.

It is said a musical version of one of America's most widely read stories, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," has been completed by Arthur Pryor, a well-known Chicago bandmaster.

Harry Grey Fiske has signed contracts for a new play in which Mrs. Fiske will be seen next autumn. It is an eighteenth century costume comedy by John Luther Long and Frank Staunton.

William A. Brady has entered the moving picture field as a film producer. Among his plays which will be seen in the "movies" are "Way Down East," "Bought and Paid For," "Trilby," "The Man of the Hour," "Little Women" and "The Pit."

Word has been received in New York from Haddon Chambers that he has arranged for the immediate production of "The Tyranny of Tears" at the Comedy Theatre, London, with Ethel Irving, Evelyn Daleroy, Robert Loraine and Alfred Bishop in the cast.

Edgar Selwyn, the author of "The Country Boy" and a number of other pieces that have been more than ordinarily successful, has written a new play called "Rolling Stones." It depicts the adventures of two wanderers living by their wits.

JACK MARTIN TO HAVE NEW BOSS

Johnny Evers Signed Last Night to Captain Boston Braves for Four Years.

RUDE JOLT FOR "FEDS"

Second Baseman Snatched by Gaffney—New Brooklyn Club Will Be Named After Tip-Top Bread—Faltz Issues Statement.

Jack Martin, the local ball player will have a new boss this year, according to an announcement made public late last night, when Johnny Evers, the deposed Chicago Cubs manager, accompanied by Joseph Bean, his attorney, went into Garr, Hermann's room at the Waldorf to glance over the contract offered him by the Boston National League club. Johnny affixed his John Hancock to a contract for the 1914 season. Before going into the conference in the Waldorf, Evers said that he had called up President Tener, of the National League, on the telephone and that the Governor had agreed to all of the details of the contract with the Red Sox.

Evers then went into conference with President John Gaffney and discussed the terms of the four-year contract offered him by the Boston club for $10,000 a year and a bonus of $10,000. It was reported that the National league agreed to reimburse Gaffney for the $10,000 bonus provided President Murphy, of the Cubs, takes the matter to the courts and Gaffney is forced to turn the little second baseman and manager over to the Chicago club.

President Fultz, of the Baseball Players' Fraternity, announced last night that the Fraternity would remain neutral to the Federal League and that ball players who signed an outlaw contract would be dropped immediately.

President Gilmore's expected statement on big doings in the Federal League circles was issued last night by him and dealt mainly with the proposition to put a club in Greater New York. The new team, which will play in Brooklyn, at the old National League grounds, will be called the "Tip-Tops." The club has secured a lease for ten years on the grounds with the privilege of buying. Orders have already been given out for the erection of a concrete and steel stadium with a seating capacity of 18,000 people. The nick-name of the club was named after the Tip-Top bread made by the company of which the Wards are officers. The Ward brothers are also directors in the new baseball league.

SCOTCH PLAINS GAME.

The Scotch Plains Parish House basketball team will play the Elizabethport Bank Clerks tonight. Last week the Bank Clerks gave the Plains boys a good run for a victory and inasmuch as the Elizabethport crew conquered the strong Hope Chapel five a good game is looked forward to.

SOME MORE PRACTICE.

North Plainfield High School basketball players are entertaining the Cranford High School players on the Saengerbund Hall court this afternoon. The contest will probably be an easy one for the Canadians and nothing more than a little practice tilt for the boroughites.

Y. M. C. A. IDLE.

The Summit Y. M. C. A. basketball team which was scheduled to play the local Association quintet here tonight cancelled its engagement and as a result there will be no contest for the locals tonight. Plainfield High School will play in the Y. M. C. A. gym instead.

"Sportdom Tips"

JUST A LITTLE TIP.

In view of the fact that one of the largest crowds that ever packed the Y. M. C. A. will be on hand to witness the third and deciding game in the Interscholastic Basketball League next Wednesday it might be well for those two managers to get together and issue some reserve seat pasteboards. The ninety chairs in the Y. M. C. A. gallery would no doubt sell at a premium and the High School teams would reap a harvest and at the same time assure the followers of the two teams a chance to lay claim to a seat. As matters now stand there will probably be a line in waiting two hours before the contest begins and the facilities for handling a crowd in the Y. M. C. A. are not nearly as adequate as those in Saengerbund Hall. It goes without saying that someone will have to be barred from the Y. M. C. A. door as the association "gym" could never accommodate a crowd such as witnessed the third game in Saengerbund Hall last year. It behooves the managers to get busy and provide for their rooters in a way that will bring satisfaction.

WE HAND IT TO HIM.

A baseball student figures out that the Federal League, if it goes through the season, is sure to lose $400,000. He puts each club's payroll at $75,000 and averages the attendance at each club's games at 200,000 paid admissions, or a total of $1,600,000. With a fifty and seventy-five cent tariff in vogue he figures the gross receipts at $800,000. Cost of grounds coupled with their expenses will swell each club's liabilities to $150,000, or a total of $1,200,000. Hence the $400,000 deficit at the end of the playing. These statistics look pretty good on print but we have yet to be convinced of a failure in the Federal League ranks. In our estimation it is giving the ball player a new life and starting on the identical basis that brought success to the American League it will no doubt survive even at the expense of the disruption of one of the senior organizations.

A NEW POLICY.

Sweeping changes are to be made in Princeton's football policy and the new football advisory committee headed by Snake Ames. One coach will be utilized and he will work directly under the committee's direction. An open style of play will be inaugurated to the exclusion of all else and the forward pass will be worked to the limit of its possibilities. Secret practice will be eliminated except possibly for a day or two before big games. Real football work will start in a few weeks, not the usual perfunctory spring drills in fundamentals, but actual scrimmages. Players in all games will wear numbers, a move advocated by all who saw the experiment last fall.

We note that Bill Samuels, our Dunellen baseball pal, has taken to the footlights. It might be well for a host of other Central Leaguers to do this as a spring training stunt. It would save many a boot in July or August. Performing on the footboards does a whole lot for those afflicted with stage-fright.

Those who were chasing around after that athletic meet a few days ago have evidently become absorbed in the basketball situation and forgotten about that proposed meet entirely. Wait a little while and you can stage the event on Parker Field. When the spring thaws come there will be a miniature swimming pool at the recreation field and aquatic events may be added.

Now that the Interscholastic Basketball League is buzzing, why not stir up things in the feminine league as an appetizer for the big event?

Westfield High School girls and the feminine players from Battin High School are now tied for first place in the race for Central New Jersey honors. Each team has won a game and the tied contest will be pulled off some time next week.

Seven pinners were battered by those Silk City Elks on the local alleys Thursday night. The Patersonland certainly take kindly to our new chutes.

Overwork is beginning to tell on Captain Blatz of the Elks who besides leading the antlered tribe holds down the top rung in the Knights of Columbus League during off hours. Blatz split his finger in the holiday game and will be laid up for a while as a result.

What happened to the result of that Holy Cross-Arrow Five basketball game? We hear the announcement and that's all, in many cases.

Both the North Plainfield and Plainfield High School teams are limbering up on lowly rivals today. It is a safe bet that some of the local's will get into the minor games between now and Wednesday.

P. H. S. CLASS LEAGUE.

The senior class basketball team of the Plainfield High School Interclass Basketball League will meet the Freshman Class five in the P. H. S. gym Monday afternoon, according to schedule.

TINKER'S GREAT CAREER AS A BASEBALL PLAYER

When Joe Tinker affixed his "John Hancock" to a Federal League contract he fired the first effective shot in what promises to be the hottest baseball war since the memorable conflict between the American and National Leagues a dozen years ago. Joe didn't start the muss between the Federals and organized baseball. But he is largely responsible for the fact that the war has reached its present proportions. He was the first big league star to jump. If Tinker is jumped it is a pretty safe bet that the majority of regulars now on the Federal roster would have taken the jump.

At the National League meeting in New York last December the Cincinnati club sold Tinker, its former manager, to Brooklyn for the sum of $25,000. According to the agreement reported at the time Tinker was to receive $10,000 of the purchase money if he agreed to play in Brooklyn. Right here is where Sid Peppe got busy. He demanded the $10,000 bonus and a salary of $7,000 a year to play with the Suburbs.

Charles H. Ebbets, president of the Brooklyn club, claims he sent Tinker a contract for three years calling for $7,500 a year. But a hitch occurred when the directors of the Cincinnati club refused to separate themselves from any parts of the 25,000 bucks.

Tinker thereupon did a speedy flop that landed him in the Federal League yard. He has been appointed manager of the Chicago Federals and is to receive $36,000 for three years' work, or $12 a year.

Joe's contract with Cincinnati for 1913 contained the customary clause which reserved him for that club in 1914. Brooklyn purchased the contract and if any legal action is taken by the Brooklyn club it will be up to Tinker and the Federals to show Hi Honor that the reserve clause in a player's contract is a flivver. The organized ranks, including all the major and minor leagues, contend that the reserve clause is binding. They rely largely on the decision handed down by the Pennsylvania courts several years ago in the famous Lajoie case.

In the Lajoie case the courts held that the reserve clause was a part of the regular contract. Larry Lajoie, long known as the star second sacker of the Cleveland Naps, was a member of the Philadelphia Nationals when the American League was organized. He jumped to the Philadelphia Americans but the court decision already referred to restrained him from appearing with that club and he was returned to Cleveland.

Joe Tinker, who promises to be more in the limelight than any other player during the season about to begin, is a big, husky, conspicuous figure on the diamond. He is a native of Kansas and is close to his thirty-fifth year.

At the age of 17 Joe broke into the national game with a Kansas City semi-professional team. He showed he could do almost anything except play ball, so the manager of the team was glad to sell him to a rival club for $150. One hundred and fifty cents for a player who in later years was to be sold for $25,000.

In 1898, after his rather discouraging experience in Kansas City, Tinker caught on with a club in Coffeyville, Kas., where he earned $35 a month and his board. The next season he was sold to Great Falls, Mont., which club in turn disposed of him to the Helena club.

Tinker was with Denver in 1900, but it was not until a year later that he showed real class on the ball field. In 1901 he played third base for the Portland team in the Northwest League. His excellent work for Portland attracted the attention of the late Frank Selee, who at the time was manager of the Chicago Cubs. Selee brought Joe to Chicago and started him on his career as a big league shortstop.

Joe remained with the Cubs until last season, when he was signed as manager of the Cincinnati club. Now he is going to pilot an outfit in opposition to his old team in Chicago in order that there may be no doubt as to the sincerity of his intentions he declares that he will stick to the Federal League "one or series," as the case may be.

SCOTCH PLAINS SECONDS TAKE MARATHON'S MEASURE

The Marathon A. C. basketball team, an independent borough organization composed of members of the Leal School class teams, went to Scotch Plains last night and met defeat at the hands of the Parish House second team of that place. The final score was 33 to 28. The home team was the leader throughout the game, and after the first five minutes of play they had a comfortable lead. This was maintained for the rest of the game. Krausse scored the most of the points for the visitors, he being the star of the game. All the Scotch Plains men did well and they had a hard time calling. The team work and familiarity of the court was the stand of the home team and they passed in excellent form during the entire contest. The first half ended 17 to 10.

Scotch Plains got off to a fine lead and the first half when the game started and ran up the score to 10 points. Southard was high scorer of the game, making ten field goals while Marston was close second with six. For the visitors Krausse and Hummell were the leaders in the shooting line, while Adams played a good game at guard.

NEWS OF INTEREST IN THE PLAINFIELD BUILDING WORLD

THE DAY OF CHEAP LUMBER IS PASSING SAYS TIMBER EXPERT

An interesting as well as educational item of news, which should be of value to all contractors and builders throughout the United States is the article recently published in the Financial Review magazine, of last month, entitled "Fortunes From the Forests." F. R. Meier, a consulting forester and timber expert, compiled the reports and wrote the article which should interest not only those who are using every day material obtained from the vast forest resources of the country, but also those who try to keep posted on current items of interest to the entire country.

In his article, Mr. Meier dwells upon the resources, the expenditures and wastes of the lumbering trades, particularly of this country, and compares the output of other countries with that of the United States. From the article the idea of the great amount of building materials used in a year and the slowly expending source of supply is impressed on the mind of the reader. As history shows countries with abundant natural resources and sparse population no thought of the future is entertained and all the energy of the population is directed to the exploitation and often reckless use of what nature has so abundantly provided. As the population increases, the industry grows, the demand for raw materials of all kinds increases and then a gradual awakening of public opinion to the need of more careful husbanding of the resources are felt.

Practically all nations have travelled the same road and have arrived at the conclusion, some countries being older than others having reached the hypothesis sooner than the younger ones. Although the United States with is vast natural resources is thought to be one of the best educated countries for the husbanding of its forest areas, the true facts show that it is unfortunately backward in realizing the true situation of the approaching exhaustion of its timber supplies.

There are about 550 million acres of forest lands in the United States with a total of about 2,800 billion board feet of standing timber. Of this amount the Northern forest areas contain 90 million acres, the Southern forests 150 million acres, the Central forests 130 million acres, the Rocky Mountain forests 100 million acres and the Pacific forests about 80 million acres. Of this amount of standing timber 2,200 billion feet is privately owned, about 539 billion board feet, in the national forest areas, and about 90 million board feet is on the unreserved public lands, national parks, State lands and indian reservations.

Our forests which grow very slowly, due to lack of knowledge in forestry, is without a doubt the fault of those who own the timber lands. In comparison with Germany the forests of this country take about twice as long to grow, to be of value as timber across the ocean. We have twenty different kinds of trees which produce valuable lumber material and saw timbers. Under the present methods of replanting cut off acres the time involved in growing trees of serviceable size is so great that before trees that have been growing for the past ten years will be large enough to have a marketable value the present areas of lumber lands will all be cut off and in many sections occupied by the ever increasing growth of population.

Of our forest areas of 550 million acres we find 200 million acres of mature forests, in which the annual growth is balanced by decay; 250 million acres partly cut over or burned over, but restocking naturally with the young growth to produce a merchantable crop; and 100 million acres cut-over and burned over, upon which young growth is either wholly lacking or too scanty to make merchantable timber.

The yearly growth of wood in our forest averages twelve cubic feet per acre. This gives a total yearly growth of less than seven billion cubic feet.

We take from our forests yearly 50 billion feet. We use in a normal year 90 million cords of firewood, 118 million hewn ties, 1,500 billion staves, over 133 million sets of headings, nearly 500 million barrel hoops, three million cords of native pulpwood, 165 million cubic feet of round mine timber, and 1,250,000 cords of wood for distillation. Softwoods furnish 77 per cent of our total yearly lumber while the other 23 per cent is made up by the turning out of hard woods. The different forest sections percentages of the total supplies are: Northern, 26; Southern, 34; the Rocky Mountain and Pacific forests, 22; and the hardwood forests in the Northern section 18 per cent. The average waste in the woods is 1,000 board feet to every 4,000 board feet logged. This waste is due to a number of various causes, the chief of which are: Plans for logging made and poorly made and poorly carried out, leaving of merchantable timbers in the woods either actually cut or in dead trees, trees partly unsound or trees of less valuable kinds; the waste of timber in high stumps and long tops and in the failure to cut logs to such lengths that the tree is most profitably used; breakage in felling, loss in lodged trees, and in driving; and the use of good timber for temporary construction in logging, for which inferior timber would serve equally well.

The present annual cut from our forests greatly exceeds the annual growth. The average amount of timber cut in this country at the present time for a year is about forty-two cubic feet per acre, while the average annual growth is about 12 cubic feet per acre. In other words the amount cut from each acre annually is more than three times the annual growth. Notwithstanding the enormous increases in the uses of iron, steel and concrete in construction work, the demand for lumber increases about five per cent per year.

The amount of imported materials received in this country from other countries is very small compared to the export trade carried on. Europe imports more wood than she exported. In comparing the excess of imports over exports for all wood-importing countries of Europe, with a total excess of imports over exports of all wood exporting countries we find there is a deficit for Europe of 141 million cubic feet per year, which is met at present by imports from North America, Sweden, Norway and Austria-Hungary have already touched the highest point in their exports. Russia and Siberia could probably increase to some extent their exports from the North, where there are still large areas of virgin forests, but a growing home consumption and the scarcity of timber in other parts of the empire make it very unlikely that larger supplies of timber for export will be available. From Canada we get about 900,000 cords of pulpwood each year. Canada has more spruce pulp wood than we have, but her standing saw timber is only about one-third of ours. Canada is still able to increase her exports, but a drain upon the Canadian forest is growing every year, and they will be the only source of supply to satisfy the urgent needs of the rest of the world for coniferous timber, after Austria-Hungary and Russia cease to be exporting countries. Under such conditions there will be many bidders for the Canadian timber, and the United States will have no exclusive claim. Canada will eventually require all the lumber which her forests can grow. Africa and India import structural lumber and can in return export only expensive hard woods. The other countries of the world are importing more materials than they can export and the excess of the demand supplies is being furnished by the United States and Canada.

With a total amount of standing timber figured at 2,800 billion board feet and a present annual drain upon the supply of saw timber of fifty billion feet, discarding allowance for the decay and growth, the timber now standing would not last fifty-five years.

Owing to the realization of the coming scarceness of the better quality saw timber and lumber the prices on forestry areas have increased from double to quadrupple the value that they sold for ten years ago. In some cases the increase in the prices of areas is as great as that thirteen times the original cost. A table of the increase of timber lands with the original prices paid for them twenty years ago and the prices asked for the same lands today are: $5 per acre to $30.00 per acre; $7 per acre to $40.00 per acre; $20 per acre to $150.00 per acre; $1 per acre to $13.00 per acre; $4 per acre to $140.00 per acre; $1 per acre to $50.00 per acre.

With these increases in timber property the day of cheap lumber is passing and soon will be gone, and the men who make the money will be those who own timber and can hold it until the supply in some parts of the country is gone, then they can ask and get their own prices.

FINE DWELLING AT DUNELLEN

J. Newton Apgar Completes $6,000 House for Investment Company.

MODERN THROUGHOUT

Structure Has a Frontage of Thirty-four Feet and Depth of Thirty-eight and is Located in Restricted Section of the Borough.

A two and a half story single family frame dwelling has just been completed for the Watchung Investment Company, on their property on Penfield avenue, Dunellen. The type of building is that which is known in this section as a restricted dwelling. It has a frontage of about thirty-four feet, and a depth of thirty-eight feet. The cost of the structure is estimated at about $6,000.

The exterior walls below the belting is faced with weatherboards painted a light yellow, while above this section shingles have been used. The shingles have been stained a velvet brown. The four gables of the house have been finished with an exposed surface of light gray cement stucco, while the roof has been covered with dark green creosoted shingles. The exposed surfaces of the foundation walls above the grade level and the exposed surfaces of the chimney have also been finished with a coat of gray stucco.

Across the front and at the side of the building an eight feet wide veranda has been built. The floor of the porch is supported by cement hollow block piers, which have been faced with velvet brown stained shingles. These piers have been built to the level of the handrail. The top of the piers have been capped with square slabs of gray limestone, which have been used as the base for the twelve inch square columns which support the porch roof. The porch roof is of the Colonial type with arches over both the front and side entrances. A miniature bay window has been built in the northeast side of the building which opens in the reception hall. The triple sashes that have been placed in the window are used to support artistical leaded windows.

The cellar of the house has been finished with a furnace room, two coal storage rooms and two store closets. A reception hall, living room dining room, butler's pantry, kitchen, and entry have been built on the first floor and four bedrooms, a bathroom and a large linen closet on the second floor. In entering the house a person passes through a large swinging door, which is bordered on either side by leaded glass panels, into the reception hall. The hall has been finished with white walls and ceilings, mission type trimmings of chestnut material, which have been stained a fumed oak, and white oak floor. At the rear of the hall an open stairway has been built to the second story. The stairway has been built with chestnut treads and risers, which have been stained similar to the trimmings of the hall. A paneled wall has been built at the base of the stairs in which a coat-rack and a full length plate glass mirror has been placed.

To the right of and separated from the hall, by a pedestal columned opening, is the living room. A room which has two measurements of about eighteen feet long and fifteen feet wide. This room, like the hall, has been finished with oak floors, chestnut trimmings, finished like fumed oak, and in addition to the other trimmings has a Harvard red pressed brick open fireplace in the centre of the southwest wall of the room. This fireplace, which has a dark red tile hearth has been connected with piping so that a gas log can be placed in the recess. At the side of the fireplace a hinged top seat has been built. At the rear of the living room is the dining room. This room, unlike any other on this floor, has been finished with false supporting props around the side wall, which run from the floor to the plate rack, which has been placed on the four walls about seven feet above the floor level.

The material used in both the supporting props and plate rack is chestnut and has been finished like fumed oak. Parquet flooring adds to the trim of this room. At the rear of the dining room and connecting the kitchen is the butlers pantry, which has been equipped with two dressers, a linen closet, a cupboard and a tier of shelves for the purpose of storing dishes on. The woodwork in this room, as in the kitchen, is of chestnut, which has been finished natural. The kitchen, which is at the western corner of the building, is equipped with a coal and gas range, white enameled sink and a small pot and pan closet. Both the butler's pantry and kitchen have been finished with white maple floors. From the kitchen to half way to the second floor, connecting at the return platform of the stairs, a rear entrance to the second story has been built.

Four bedrooms, a bathroom, and a linen closet comprise the space of the second story. All the rooms on this floor have been finished with whitewood trimmings, which have been enameled white, white walls and ceilings, hardwood floors, and birch doors finished in light mahogany. The bathroom is equipped with white enameled fixtures of the most up-to-date styles and a large medicine cabinet of white wood, white enameled with mahogany finish door, with plate glass mirror in the centre. The lower portion of the walls have been marked off so as to represent tile.

The top floor will be used as a storage attic, but has been left so that any person who may purchase the building can have one or two rooms partitioned off at little expense.

Each room will be equipped with combination gas and electric lighting fixtures and the entire house will in cold weather be heated by a hot air system. An electric bell system has been installed in the rooms of the second floor and are all connected with an announciator in the kitchen.

J. Newton Apgar had the general contract for the erection of the building and supervised the carpenter and interior decorative work. Firman H. Gise did the mason and plastering work; George F. Giles, the plumbing, tinning, gutter and leader work, piping for gas and installing the hot air system of heating. Fred Kirchner did the exterior painting and interior finishing of the decorative work. Albert N. Randolph wired the house for electric lights and the placing of all the lighting fixtures. The Dunellen Lumber and Stone Company supplied all the lumber and mason materials; Smalley Brothers all the hardware and R. H. McCullough's mills, of Plainfield, all the millwork and interior trimming materials.

The house, which was completed last week, has been placed on the market by its owners and is for sale. Although this building was erected for speculative purposes the material and workmanship used in the erection of it was the best obtainable.

JOHN P. FENNER BUILDING DUNELLEN HOUSE TO SELL

A two and a half story frame dwelling is being erected on Washington avenue, Dunellen, for John P. Fenner, of that town. It will have a frontage of 26 feet and a depth of 34 feet and will cost not less than $3,350. The exterior will be finished and faced below the belting with cedar weather boards, painted gray. About this section the walls will be of shingles stained velvet brown. The roof of shingles will be left natural. Across the front a veranda will be built, the floor being supported on four square brick piers. Four square columns will support the roof of the porch.

In the cellar will be a furnace room, coal bins, and two preserve closets.

On the space on the first floor will be a reception hall, living room, dining room, kitchen and butlers' pantry. With the exception of the butlers' pantry and kitchen all the rooms will be finished with double floors, the top one of oak, and will be trimmed with a cabinet style chestnut trimming, stained a fumed oak. The butlers' pantry will have a white maple floor and be equipped with two dressers, a linen cabinet and two china closets. All the exterior surface in this room will be of chestnut. In the kitchen a comb grained pine floor will be laid, the walls and ceiling will be painted a light buff color, and the trimmings will be of chestnut finished natural. At the rear of the kitchen a small lobby has been built containing a set of laundry trays.

Four bedrooms and a bathroom are on the second floor. All will be finished with North Carolina comb-grained pine floors, finished natural, white wood trimmings of the cabinet style, enameled white and birch doors, stained light mahogany. An open stairway of chestnut will be built from the reception hall to the second floor. This will be finished similar to the trim of the lower floor, which is fumed oak. Electric wires will be run and there will be a hot-air system of heating. All the plumbing will be of up to date type, and there will be a medicine cabinet built in the side wall of the bathroom.

J. Newton Apgar has the contract for the work, and is supervising the carpenter work. Firman H. Gise is doing the masonry and plastering; Fred Kirchner, the painting and interior finishing; George F. Giles, the plumbing, tinning, heating and all gutter and leader work, and A. N. Randolph the wiring and placing of the fixtures. The Dunellen Lumber & Stone Company supplied all material, and Smalley Brothers the hardware. R. H. McCullough's Mills, of North Plainfield, furnished the millwork and all the trim. The house will be completed about April 1 and will then be placed on the market for sale.

TRADES ARE AFFECTED BY THE COLD SNAP

Outside Building Operations Are at a Stand Still at the Present Time.

Owing to the extreme cold snap in this section during the week practically all building operations have been dispensed with. This week, like one in January has the distinction of being one in which the local building inspector has not issued a permit. Not only are the prospects for the coming two months poor for the trades but, it is also bad for all construction work that has been commenced by contractors. Although there are a number of excavations for new buildings the extreme cold temperature has made it inadevisable to do any mason work on foundation walls.

Not only have the building trades suffered from the cold weather, but a number of carpenters, masons and others who work at various trades connected with the erection of houses have suffered considerably. Men who have been working all summer and far into the winter were well prepared for the cold snap and welcomed it as a sort of a vacation, but, others who have had trouble and who possibly have been unable to obtain work for several months during the busy season are the main ones to feel the enforced suspension.

A prominent contractor said the other day that as far as he was concerned, and as far as his men were concerned the temperature of the weather would not interfere with several houses which have progressed enough towards completion to keep all the men that he employs busy for from eight to ten weeks on nothing but interior trimming and decorative work. A man who has such prospects ahead of him is without a doubt considered fortunate by a number of those that are in the same line of business. This contractor who has several houses in Plainfield, employs not less than eighteen men at any time of the year and to be able to keep them all busy through the long winter months is a problem that few can solve. When asked why he planned his work that way, he said that owing to inclement weather any one building was bound to be held up and the employes of a builder lose enough time during the busy seasons of the year and so he tried to plan work far enough ahead so that he could keep his entire force busy during the winter months finishing the interior of buildings that have been already completed.

Although the carpenters, masons tinners slaters, lathers and several other branches of building trades departments are complaining about the cold snap and the slackness of work, the plumbers and heater experts are rushed to death with work. The plumbers are being called out day and night to repair burst pipes caused by the freezing and the improper methods of thawing, and the heater experts are continually being called upon to patch up and repair steam, hot water and hot-air heaters which refuse to perform their proper functions.

In spite of the bad outlook for the building trades until the spring months roll around, the architects and contractors appear with a smile on their faces and claim that the present conditions cannot continue forever and they are looking forward to a very busy and prosperous building trades season starting not later than April 1

ANOTHER $5,000 HOUSE BUILT IN DUNELLEN

Building Boom Continues in Town to the West of Plainfield.

J. Newton Apgar, of Dunellen, is having a two and a half story frame dwelling erected on Washington avenue, Dunellen, with a frontage of 30 feet and a depth of 38 feet. It is estimated that the building will cost about $5,000.

The exterior walls below the belting will be finished with weather boards, stained a straw color with white trimmings, and above that with shingles, stained a velvet brown. The roof shingles will be dark green. On the center of the northwest side of the building an exposed chimney to be stucco coated is being built. The foundation is of hollow cement brick, made to represent rough cut stone. From the front the building has bungalow appearance, and from the rear that of an American cottage type. Across the front an eight feet wide veranda will be built. From the grade level to balustrade the facing of the porch will be finished with shingles, stained velvet brown. The roof of the porch will be supported by four twelve-inch square columns, painted white. The color contrast will be brought out by dark green shutters.

The cellar will contain a boiler room, coal bins and closets. On the first floor will be three rooms, a butlers' pantry, a reception hall and an entry. The living room across the entire front, will be twenty-one feet long and fifteen feet deep. At the left of the living room will be the reception hall, in which an open stairway leading to the second story will be built.

In the living room will be a Harvard red pressed brick faced open fireplace, lined with white mortar. The trimming on the first floor is of special design, new to this section of the country. It is six inches wide and about three-quarters of an inch thick.

The living room and dining room will be finished with false ceiling beams faced with chestnut. The side walls of the dining room to a heighth of six feet will be panelled and finished in mission style. With the exception of the kitchen and butlers pantry all the rooms will be trimmed with chestnut stained dull weathered oak. The butlers' pantry will be equipped with the usual dressers and closets, with woodwork of chestnut, finished natural. The kitchen will be finished with buff colored panel walls and ceiling, with white maple floor, and trimmed with chestnut. All the other finished floors will be of quartered white oak. A laundry will be fitted up in the rear entry.

The open stairway to the second story will be finished with oak treads and chestnut raisers, stained similar to the trim of the first floor. At the side of the stairs in the reception from. The building will be completed hall there will be panelled walls, in which a coat rack and a full length mirror will be placed. The mission style trimming will be carried out in the building of the stairway. On the second floor four bedrooms, a bathroom and a linen closet will be built, all finished with a mission type trim of whitewood, enameled white, birch doors finished in light mahogany and hardwood floors. The lower section of the walls in the bathroom will be finished to represent tile. All the plumbing throughout will be finished with white enameled fixtures, including a white enameled medicine cabinet in the bathroom with a plate glass mirror in the door.

In the trim the owner has done away with curved type trimmings whenever possible with the idea that within a few years nothing but the straight line or mission type trim will be popular. There will be a hot water system of heating, gas piping and wiring for electric lights, combination gas and electric lighting fixtures, and an electric bell system from the second story to the kitchen.

Mr. Apgar is supervising the carpenter work. Walter Clawson, the masonry and plastering; Fred Kirchner, the painting and interior decorative work. George F. Giles, the plumbing and gutter work, and A. N. Randolph the electric wiring and placing of the fixtures. The contracts for the plumbing and heating have not been awarded.

The Dunellen Lumber and Stone Company and Th. J. D. Loizeaux Lumber Company supplied the masonry and carpenter materials. R. H. McCullough's Mills, of North Plainfield, supplied the millwork and the building will be completed about May 1.

NEEDLEWORK

By MARGARET LAWRENCE

A SOFA PILLOW FOR THE LIVING-ROOM

This attractive pillow might be embroidered in unpadded solid work on pongee, moire, poplin or linen, in a darker shade of the color of the material. In a room in which browns predominate this would be very attractive of dark brown pongee or linen embroidered in orange and yellow or soft old blues. One likes to have several pillows covered with washable covers to rest one's head on, and if this were of white or natural colored linen embroidered in three shades of blue, yellow or old rose, it would be useful.

The size of the design is 11¾ by 15½ inches. Pattern, 14632, can be supplied to readers on receipt of price, 15 cents.

Some Cookery Suggestions

SHOULDER OF VEAL.

SHOULDER of veal is most often stuffed, roasted or braised. Sometimes it is boiled. The knuckle is to be cut off and saved to enrich gravy or stew.

Boiled Shoulder of Veal.—Cut the knuckle and draw out the bone. Rub the under part with a piece of lemon and sprinkle with pepper, salt and chopped parsley. Roll up the meat and fasten with skewers. Put into a stewpan and cover with water. Let it simmer until cooked. Serve with onion sauce.

Boiled With Vegetables.

Boiled Stuffed Shoulder of Veal.—Take the bone out of the shoulder of veal and fill the cavity left by it with veal stuffing, then roll up the veal neatly and tie round firmly with a string. Place in a stewpan, with just enough water to cover. Allow to simmer slowly for four hours. Prepare two carrots, two onions and some herbs and stew with the joint. To serve take out the veal, remove the strings, strain the gravy, thicken with flour and pour over the whole. Chop the vegetables finely for a garnish

Roast Stuffed Shoulder of Veal.—Cut off the knuckle and have all bone removed. Fill the space with highly seasoned forcemeat made of breadcrumbs, thyme, marjoram, lemon peel and juice, chopped ham or boiled bacon, salt, pepper and nutmeg mixed to a stiff paste with beaten egg. Sew up the opening and press into good shape and roast it. Baste frequently and let the meat be thoroughly cooked. Serve with thickened brown gravy; garnish with lemon (sliced) and rashers.

An Italian Viand.

Shoulder of Veal With Macaroni.—Prepare a shoulder of veal by removing the bones, skewer the meat and bind it into a round. Season with salt and pepper, sprinkle with sifted flour, place upon a rack in a pan and set in the oven to roast. Break some macaroni into short lengths and boil till tender. When the veal is within half an hour of being done cleanse and trim some mushrooms. Cut them into small pieces, sprinkle with salt and place in the dripping pan with the macaroni. Baste them as well as the meat with the drippings in the pan. After taking up the meat lay the cooked macaroni around it as a garnish and sprinkle with the mushrooms. Have ready a little white sauce and pour it into the pan. Mix it with the drippings and then strain over the meat. If there is much gravy in the pan no sauce need be used at all.

Mr. and Mrs. Seagull Flew Off With Bluey.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

The Seagulls Move to Bluey Cove.

"MR. AND MRS. SEAGULL didn't really know what to do," said daddy. "They loved their home, which was in a big harbor, for they enjoyed seeing the boats pass and hearing the different whistles. All kinds of boats passed—ferryboats, sailboats, old fishing boats, great big boats that went across the ocean and little tugboats.

"The seagulls would fly overhead, and then they'd land on top of the water, but they never could stay there long, as the boats would come along, and they would have to fly off. Of late Mr. and Mrs. Seagull, although they were still as fond of their home as ever, became rather worried, for the little seagulls didn't seem to be able to get out of the way of the boats as quickly as the old seagulls could. Mr. and Mrs. Seagull were afraid that one of them might get hurt by a boat.

"Of course the little seagulls were quite certain that nothing like that would ever happen, but one day it did.

"They were playing tag on the surface of the water and so interested in their game that they didn't notice until too late that a great huge boat was coming along. The captain of the boat had blown the whistle to scare the seagulls away. They hadn't heard it at all so busy were they playing, and it hit poor little Bluey Seagull. One of the others called out:

"'Oh, fly up quickly, Bluey!' He was not badly hit, for the pilot of the boat had seen the seagulls and made the boat slow down.

"Bluey was frightened almost out of his wits, but with the encouragement of the other seagulls he managed to fly off.

"When Mr. and Mrs. Seagull saw what had happened to Bluey they were horrified and quickly flew off with him, all the other little seagulls following.

"They flew as far from the boats as they could, for, now that Bluey had been hit, they didn't think life in the harbor where the boats passed was so attractive. In fact, they decided they would never go back there again.

"They flew so far that they reached a little cove at the basin of the harbor, and when Mr. Seagull saw it he said:

"'This will be our new home.'

"Mrs. Seagull said:

"'We will never leave this home until all little seagulls are grown up, for then they will always be safe and can play all they want to without being afraid of getting hit by the big boats.'

"So it was decided, and the cove was named Bluey cove because it had been on Bluey's account that they had moved there. And of all the seagulls he was the happiest and most relieved."

TRY A PRESS WANT AD

ANTI-SUFFRAGE

Conducted by Plainfield Branch New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage.

Since the Anti speakers and writers have been (during the last few months) emphasizing and giving wide publicity to the welding of the Suffrage and Socialist parties, Suffragists have gone to great trouble to deny that such a connection could ever exist.

"1,000,000 SOCIALISTS WORK and VOTE for WOMAN SUFFRAGE."

Denial of the above would be futile, the banner having been photographed with that section of the parade.

In a night parade on Fifth avenue, November, 1912, following the yellow, came a detachment in red—sashes, banners, hat-bands, dresses—playing the Marseillaise, their red banner displaying the inscription, "EVERY SOCIALIST IS A WOMAN SUFFRAGIST."

Daniel De Leon, one of the most prominent American Socialists, says: "All the facts, all the reasoning, focus into one conclusion. WOMAN SUFFRAGE must take its place as AN INTEGRAL SPLINTER in the torch that lights the path of the SOCIAL REVOLUTION."

The Plainfield Daily Press under date of July 12, 1913, published the following (referring to the "votes for women" movement): "The Progressive party, which polled 145,410 votes in New Jersey last fall, is going to formally endorse it, and the rapidly growing Socialist party is for it of course. The combined Progressive and Socialist vote of the State, which may be considered as a unit on the matter of suffrage, is something over 161,000."

The last quotation proves the absurdity of the contention appearing recently in local papers, that Suffragists look for no support from Socialists, since the latter despise and are opposed to Woman Suffrage.

In one of these was a declaration to the effect that Anti-Suffragists read false meanings into the doctrines of PRESENT-DAY feminism.

Let the following quotations answers this accusation.

Some of the teachings of this present-day Feminism AS FOUND IN THE Feminist literature published, advertised and sold by National American Woman Suffrage Association, 505 Fifth avenue, New York city, is unsuitable for the publicity of this article, but can be procured from there by mail.

The following show the foundation ideas:

"Women, women's intelligence, and women's judgments have always been regarded with more or less secret contempt, and when woman now speaks of 'equality' all the natural contempt which a higher order feels for a lower when it presumes bursts out into the open. This contempt rests upon quite honest and sound instinct, so honest, indeed, that it must provide all the charm of an unaccustomed sensation for fine gentlemen like the Curzons and Cromers and Asquiths to feel anything quite so instinctive and primitive. With the women opponents it is another matter. These latter apart, however, it is for would-be Freewomen to realize that for them this contempt is the healthiest thing in the world, and that those who express it honestly feel it; that these opponents have argued quite soundly that women have allowed themselves to be used, ever since there has been any record of them and that if women had had higher uses of their own they would not have foregone them. They have never known women formulate imperious wants, this in itself implying lack of wants, and this in turn implying lack of ideals. Women as a whole have shown nothing save 'servant' attributes. All those activities which presuppose the master qualities, the standard-making, the law-giving, the moral-framing, belong to men. Religions, philosophies, legal codes, standards in morals, canons in art have all issued from men, while woman have been the 'followers,' 'believers,' the 'law-abiding,' the 'moral,' the conventionally admiring. They have been the administrators, the servants, living by borrowed precept, receiving orders, doing handmen's work. For note, though some men must be servants, all women are servants, and all the masters are men. That is the difference and distinction. The servile condition is common to all women." ("Bondwomen," Dora Marsden.).

The November Century prints a long article called, "The Militant Woman—and Women," in which the writer, an ardent Feminist, says: "It was St. Paul who laid down the Christian ideal for women; nothing invented of man has ever had a more stultifying effect upon the character and morals of women and of men."

In a recent article in Harper's Weekly by Winifred Harper Cooley, in which she comments with amusement on the dismay of the middle-aged Suffragists at the radical utterances of the younger women in their ranks. She says these older women have not kept up with the times—that to them the vote is a fetish, which they want merely to prove their equality with man and to "demonstrate democracy"—but that the younger women consider the vote the merest tool, a means to an end,—that end being a complete social revolution.

The older women are frightened, she says, lest the old unjust terms of opprobrium, "free love," "destruction of the family," etc., will injure the cause of Suffrage, but she asks us to remember that the radicalism of today is the conservatism of tomorrow, and proceeds to set forth the beliefs of the younger suffragists.

In conclusion, I would say that not only the older, but many of the younger Suffragists would feel horror of the full propaganda of the N. A. Woman's Suf. Ass'n as set forth in the Feminist literature issued by it, as these closing sentences from "Bondwomen" will prove:

"We are convinced that, at the present time, our interpretation of the doctrine has merely to be stated clearly to be frankly rejected by, at least, three women in every four.

"Probably these replies will raise more objections than those they were put forward to meet, but if such is the case it will be not merely what was expected, but what is hoped."

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

Rich and elaborate materials are not favored for small frocks and suits. Taffetas are occasionally introduced for a coat or dress, and crepe de Chine is used a great deal for more dressy wear, but as a rule wash materials are considered better form than anything else. It is pleasing and new to belt in the long-waisted frock of white or colored voile, pique or crepe, with black velvet; colored sashes are also seen.

No. 7758 is a long-waisted design, closing on the left side, with a low-shaped belt and with a three piece skirt attached to a separate underwaist. This little dress could be developed successfully in linen, pique or serge. If a dark serge is used, an effective way of introducing a bit of color is in the buttons, which may be of red or varicolored bone.

The pattern is cut in 4 sizes: 8 to 14.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, passing the tape around the widest part of the breast well up under the arms.

It may be obtained by filling out the coupon and enclosing 15 cents in stamps or coin to the Pattern Department of this paper.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

CHAPTER XVI.

The Exquisite Mr. Hayden.

BLAND and Max came in from a brisk walk on the veranda. The mayor of Reuton, who had been dozing near the desk, stirred.

Miss Norton rose and ascended the stairs. Still the protesting Magee was at her heels. At the head of the stairs she turned.

"You shall have your final chance," she said. "The mayor, Max and Bland are alone in the office. I don't approve of eavesdropping at Baldpate in the summer. It has spoiled a lot of perfectly adorable engagements. But in winter it's different. Whether you really want to help me or not, I'm sure I don't know, but if you do the conversation below now might prove of interest."

"I'm sure it would," Magee agreed.

"Well, I have a scheme. Listen. Baldpate inn is located in a temperance county. That doesn't mean that people don't drink here. It simply means that there's a lot of mystery and romance connected with the drinking. Sometimes those who follow the god of chance in the card room late at night grow thirsty. Now, it happens that there is a trapdoor in the floor of the card room, up which drinks are frequently passed from the cellar. Isn't that exciting? A hotel clerk who became human once in my presence told me all about it. If you went into the cellar and hunted about you might find that door and climb up into the card room."

"A bully idea," agreed Mr. Magee. "I'll hurry down there this minute. I'm more grateful than you can guess for this chance. And this time—but you'll see."

Magee hurried to the cellar and with the aid of a box of matches found a ladder leading to a door cut in the floor above. He climbed through dust and cobwebs, unfastened the catch and pushed cautiously upward. In another minute he was standing in the chill little card room. Softly he opened the card room door about half an inch and put his ear to it.

The three men were grouped very close at hand, and he heard Mr. Bland speaking in low tones:

"I'm talking to you boys as a friend. The show is over. There ain't no use hanging around for the concert—there won't be none. Go home and get some clean collars and a square meal."

"If you think I'm going to be shook off by any fairy story like that," said the mayor of Reuton, "you're a child with all a child's touching faith."

"All right," replied Mr. Bland. "I thought I'd pass you the tip, that's all. It ain't nothing to me what you do. But it's all over, and you've lost out. I'm sorry you have, but I take Hayden's orders."

"Dash Hayden!" snarled the mayor. "It was his idea to make a three act play out of this thing. He's responsible for this silly trip to Baldpate. This audience we've been acting for—he let us in for them."

"I know," said Bland. "But you can't deny that Baldpate inn looked like the ideal spot at first—secluded, off the beaten path, you know, and all that."

"Yes," sneered the mayor, "as secluded as a Sunday school the Sunday before Christmas."

"Well, who could have guessed it?" went on Mr. Bland. "As I say, I don't care what you do. I just passed you the tip. I've got that nice little package of the long green. I've got it where you'll never find it."

"How did you get hold of it?" inquired Mr. Lou Max.

"I had my eye on this little professor person," explained Mr. Bland. "This morning when Magee went up the mountain I trailed the highbrow to Magee's room. When I busted in, unannounced by the butler, he was making his getaway. I don't like to talk about what followed. He's an old man, and I sure didn't mean to break his glasses nor scratch his dome of thought. There's ideas in that dome go back to the time of Anthony J. Chaucer. But—he's always talking about that literature chair of his—why couldn't he stay at home and sit in it? Anyhow, I got the bundle all right, all right. I wonder what the little fossil wants with it."

"The Doc's glasses was broke," said Max, evidently to the mayor of Reuton.

"Um-m," came Cargan's voice. "Bland, how much do you make working for this nice, kind gentleman, Mr. Hayden?"

"Oh, about $2,000 a year, with pickings," replied Bland.

"Yes?" went on Mr. Cargan. "I ain't no Charles Dana Gibson with words. My talk's a little rough and sketchy, I guess. But here's the outline, plain as I can make it. Two thousand a year from Hayden. Twenty thousand in two seconds if you hand that package to me."

"No," objected Bland. "I've been honest—after a fashion. I can't quite stand for that. I'm working for Hayden."

"Don't be a fool," sneered Max.

"Of course," said the mayor. "I appreciate your scruples, having had a few in my day myself, though you'd never think so to read the Sun. But look at it sensible. The money belongs to me. If you was to hand it over you'd be just doing plain justice. What right has Hayden on his side? I did what was agreed. Do I get my pay?"

"No," said Bland, but his tone was less firm. "I can't go back on Hayden. No—it wouldn't."

"Twenty thousand," repeated Cargan. "Ten years' salary the way you are going ahead at present. What's Hayden ever done for you? He'll throw you down some day, the way he's thrown me."

"I—I—don't know," stuttered Bland.

"You get the package," suggested the mayor; "take $20,000 out and slip the rest to me. No questions asked."

"Well"— began Bland. He was lost. Suddenly the quiet of Baldpate mountain was assailed by a loud pounding at the inn door and a voice crying, "Bland—let me in."

"There's Hayden now!" cried Mr. Bland.

"It ain't too late," came the mayor's voice. "You can do it yet. It ain't too late."

"Do what?" cried Bland in a firm tone. "You can't bribe me, Cargan." He raised his voice. "Go round to the east door, Mr. Hayden." Then he added to Cargan: "That's my answer. I'm going to let him in."

"Let him in," bellowed the mayor. "Let the hound in. I guess I've got something to say to Mr. Hayden."

There came to Magee's ears the sound of opening doors and of returning footsteps.

"How do you do, Cargan?" said a voice new to Baldpate.

"Cut the society howdy-does," replied the mayor hotly. "There's a little score to be settled between me and you, Hayden. I ain't quite wise to your orchid in the buttonhole ways. I don't understand your system. When I give my word I keep it. Has that gone out of style up on the avenue where you live?"

"There are conditions," began Hayden.

"The h— there are!" roared Cargan. "A man's word's his word, and he keeps it to me or I know the reason why. You can't come down to the city hall with any new deal like this. I was to have two hundred thousand. Why didn't I get it?"

"Because," replied Hayden smoothly, "the—er—little favor you were to grant me in return is to be made useless by the courts."

"Can I help that?" the mayor demanded. "Was there anything about that in the agreement? I did my work. I want my pay. I'll have it, Mr. Hayden."

Hayden's voice was cool and even as he spoke to Bland.

"Got the money, Joe?"

"Yes," Bland answered.

"Where?"

"Well, we'd better wait, hadn't we?" Bland's voice was shaky.

"No. We'll take it and get out," answered Hayden.

"I want to see you do it!" cried Cargan. "If you think I've come up here on a pleasure trip I got a chart and a pointer all ready for your next lesson. And let me put you wise. This nobby little idea of yours about Baldpate inn is the worst ever. The place is as full of people as if the regular summer rates was being charged."

"The devil it is!" cried Hayden. His voice betrayed a startled annoyance.

"It hasn't worried me none," went on the mayor. "They can't touch me. I own the prosecutor, and you know it. But it ain't going to do you any good on the avenue if you're seen here with me, is it, Mr. Hayden?"

"The more reason," replied Hayden, "for getting the money and leaving at once. I'm not afraid of you, Cargan. I'm armed."

"I ain't," sneered the mayor. "But no exquisite from your set with his little air gun ever scared me. You try to get away from here with that bundle and you'll find yourself all tangled up in the worst scrap that ever happened."

"Where's the money, Joe?" asked Hayden.

"You won't wait?" Bland begged.

"Wait to get my own money? I guess not! Show me where it is."

"Remember," put in Cargan, "that money's mine. And don't have any pipe dreams about the law. The law ain't called into things of this sort, as a rule. I guess you'd be the last to call it. You'll never get away from here with my money."

Mr. Magee opened the card room door farther and saw the figure of the stranger, Hayden, confronting the mayor. Mr. Cargan's title of exquisite best described him. The newcomer was tall, fair, fastidious in dress and manner. A revolver gleamed in his hand.

"Joe," he said firmly, "take me to that money at once."

"It's out here," replied Bland. He and Hayden disappeared through the dining room door into the darkness. Cargan and Max followed close behind.

Hot with excitement, Mr. Magee slipped from his place of concealment. A battle fit for the gods was in the air. He must be in the midst of it. Perhaps again in a three cornered fight it would be the third party that would emerge victorious.

In the darkness of the dining room he bumped into a limp, clinging figure. It proved to be the hermit of Baldpate mountain.

"I got to talk to you, Mr. Magee," he whispered in a frightened monotone. "I got to have a word with you this minute."

"Not now!" cried Magee, pushing him aside. "Later."

The hermit wildly seized his arm.

"No, now," he said. "There's strange goings on here, Mr. Magee. I got something to tell you—about a package of money I found in the kitchen."

Mr. Magee stood very still. Beside him in the darkness he heard the hermit's excited breathing.

Undecided, Mr. Magee looked toward the kitchen door, from behind which came the sound of men's voices. The hermit of Baldpate fairly trembled with news.

"Since I broke in on you yesterday morning," he said in a low tone, "one thing has followed another so fast that I'm a little dazed."

"You have nothing on me there, Peters," Magee answered.

"Well," went on the hermit, "as I say, through all this downpour of people, including women, I've hung on to one idea. I'm working for you. That's why I feel I ought to give what information I got to you."

Mr. Magee agreed impatiently.

"Where you find women," Peters continued, "there you find things beyond understanding. History"—

"Get to the point."

"Well, yes. This afternoon I was hunting around in the big refrigerator with a candle, thinking maybe some little token of food had been left over from last summer's rush—something in a can that time cannot wither nor custom stale, as the poet says—and away up on the top shelf, in the darkest corner, I found a little package.

"There was money in that package—lots of it; enough to found a university or buy a woman's gowns for a year. I was examining it careful-like when a shadow came in the doorway. I looked up"—

"Who?" asked Magee breathlessly.

"That little, blinky eyed, Professor Bolton was standing there, most owlish and interested. He came into the refrigerator. 'That package you have in your hand, Peters,' he says, 'belongs to me. I put it in cold storage so it would keep. I'll take it now.' Well, Mr. Magee, I'm a peaceful man. I could have battered that professor into a learned sort of jelly if I'd wanted to, but I'm a great admirer of Mr. Carnegie on account of the library, and I go in for peace. I knew it wasn't exactly the thing, but"—

"You gave him the package?"

"That's hardly the way I would put it, Mr. Magee. I made no outcry or resistance when he took it. 'I'm just a cook,' I says, 'in this house. I ain't the trusted old family retainer that retains its fortunes like a safety deposit vault.' So I let go the bundle. It was weak of me, I know, but I sort of got the habit of giving up money, being married so many years."

"Peters," said Mr. Magee, "I'm sorry your grip was so insecure, but I'm mighty glad you came to me with this matter."

"He told me I wasn't to mention it to anybody," replied the hermit, "but as I say, I sort of look on it that we were here first, and if our guests get to chasing untold wealth up and down the place, we ought to let each other in on it."

"Correct," answered Magee. "You are a valuable man, Peters. I want you to know that I appreciate the way you have acted in this affair." Four shadowy figures tramped in through the dining room door.

LITTLE TALKS BY THE WANT AD MAN

Copyright, 1913, The Int. Syndicate, Baltimore.

No. 60.

LET'S see now: What is a Want Ad? I'm not much on definitions, but how will this do: "An announcement of something desired or something for sale, printed in the Classified columns of a newspaper.

Not a very lengthy or involved definition, that. But doesn't it really define? Doesn't it about cover the object of all Want Ad. advertising.

That is all there is to Want Ad. advertising—an announcement of something desired or something for sale. I imagine I can hear you say "How about an ad. for a cook? How about it when I advertise the loss of an article, or when I advertise for typewriting to do at home?"

Well, when you insert an ad. for a cook, you want the services of a competent culinary attendant. Something desired. When you advertise the loss of an article, it is in the hope that the finder will see your ad. and restore the article. Something desired. When you advertise for typewriting work, you are offering your services. Something for sale.

There is no mystery about it. Advertising isn't hypnotism, or undue influence or black art. You write out what you want or what you have for sale—you put it in a good newspaper—the newspaper carries your message broadcast, into the homes and hearts of thousands of readers—some of those readers respond to your printed word—you sell or you acquire—and ADVERTISING has done its work.

Next time you want something or have something for sale, try a little Want Ad. The cost is trivial—the results more than worth while.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray. Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

HUMOR IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE

Does Not Imply Simply Uproarious Laughter, Says Rev. Dr. P. H. Strong.

NOT LACKING IN BIBLE

Preacher Describes the Difference Between Humor and Wit—Says it is a Fine Weapon Against Higher Criticism and Ethical Culture.

"The Place and Power of Humor in the Christian Life," was the subject of Rev. Philip B. Strong's sermon at the First Presbyterian church, yesterday morning. "Humor," said the speaker, "does not imply simply that which provokes uproarious laughter. The truest humor is delicate and exquisite and in keeping with occasions of the utmost dignity. A contrast may well be made between wit and humor, the first being purely of the intellect; the latter of the heart. Wit laughs at, while humor laughs with another. Humor is wit sweetened with love. Wit may be stinging and cruel, humor always kindly.

"Humor is not lacking even in the Bible. Many illustrations might be cited of highly humorous nature from both Old and New Testaments. For instance, the incident of Elisha and the gods of Baal in 1 Kings 18. Even God Himself has been ascribed the humorous instinct by David in the second Psalm, where after picturing the profoundly absurd idea of mere earthly potentates setting themselves up in challenge against the Creator of the Universe, he says, 'He that sitteth in the Heavens shall laugh!' And it is from the Maker of all that is joyous and wholesome and innocently delightful, that we get that most delicate and pleasure-making instinct of a sense of humor.

"Humor" links us with all humanity. Humor is humanity in a certain sense. The world is full of humorous things and situations and happy is he who can see and appreciate them. The capacity to see the funny side will take one over very hard experiences much more easily, and will win one many friends. The profoundest philosophers have been masters of wit also. How much less we should love Lincoln, but for his fund of humor, and how much greater some others would have been had they but had this sense.

"Humor and pathos are very closely akin. The one easily moved to laughter is also easily moved to tears as a rule. And not only this, but humor and religion have a very close connection. He who is highly endowed spiritually, is very apt to have love for true humor. Theologically, a sense of humor is the finest weapon to use against modern higher criticism and so-called ethical culture, or any form of religion which consists of lifting ones' self by ones' own boot-straps. Just as one may prove anything in this world by some forms of logic, so may one quickly dissolve these absurdities by being able to see the ridiculous side of things."

MISS GLADYS SHERWOOD GIVEN A VALENTINE SURPRISE

Friends of Miss Gladys Sherwood gave her a pleasant valentine surprise party on Saturday evening, at her home, on East Second street. The guests enjoyed dancing, played games and later in the evening partook of a fine supper which had been prepared by Mrs. Sherwood and Mrs. A. Kenneth. In the centre of the dining table was a huge bowl filled with scarlet carnations. Half-hidden among the flowers was a large "Kewpie" doll driving, with scarlet reins, other "Kewpies," which formed a circle about the flower bowl.

Other decorations were hearts and cupid darts. Place cards for each guest were held by tiny cupids, in scarlet. The favors for the men were golden hearts. Each young woman guest received as a favor a white statue of a cupid, kneeling upon a heart with upraised bow and with arrow aimed.

SUDDEN DEATH OF MRS. JOSEPH HOWATT

Former Well-known Plainfielder Passes Away at Her Home in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Amelia Howatt, wife of Joseph Howatt, formerly of this city, died suddenly last night at her home, 260 Clinton avenue, Brooklyn, from neuritis. She had been ill for a few weeks, but was convalescing, when she suffered an acute attack of neuritis, passing away within a few minutes.

Mrs. Howatt was before her marriage, Miss Amelia Runyon and during the early days of her residence here the family lived at West Front street and Elmwood place. Mr. Howatt is also well-known here, where he conducted a stationery business for several years. Mr. and Mrs. Howatt lived at Ashville, N. C., for sometime, from which place they removed to Brooklyn.

There survives beside a husband, a daughter, Miss Florine Howatt; also two sisters, Mrs. James VanWinkle, of New Brunswick, and Mrs. Fanny Everett, of Staten Island. Announcement of the funeral will be made later.

COMPARISON OF TELEPHONE RATES

Manager Wilson Quotes Figures to Show Unfairness of Postal Telegraph Co.

The Postal Telegraph Company has recently made a comparison of telephone rates and a circular has been distributed amongst the merchants and business houses of Plainfield, purporting to show the rates for service here, as compared with other cities of a similar size.

Plainfield, credited with 20,550 population, is classed with Decatur, Illinois, having 31,140 inhabitants, and a rate of $30 for service in the latter city is set up against $156 rate in Painfield.

When interviewed today, Alfred B. Wilson, local commercial manager of the New York Telephone Company, made the following statement: "On October 1, 1913, Decatur, Illinois, had 5,447 Bell stations and 2,801 independent telephone stations. On the same date, Plainfield had 4,006, which, on January, 1, 1914, had increased to 4,055. There are 259 individual lines, message rate, business stations, in Plainfield.

"Decatur, Illinois, has the two telephone systems, each of which quotes a rate of $36 for individual line, flat rate, business service. The Independent Company also quotes a two party service at $30.

"The comparison is between the top rate of the individual line, business schedule for Plainfield, and the two party, flat rate for the independent company in Decatur, Illinois. It is obvious that such a comparison is unfair, as the grade of service furnished in each case is not of equal value, but assuming that the individual line rate of $36 in Decatur were used, this would be a fair comparison only in the case of every individual line, business subscribed in Plainfield using 5,700 local messages. As a matter of fact, only three subscribers use this number of messages or more, which is only 1.2% of the total individual line business subscribers The average rate paid by Plainfield individual line, business subscribers is $61.09. The actual rates range all the way from $42 to $156. Further, it should be noted that the independent company in Decatur has also 2,801 stations, as compared to 4,006 in the Plainfield local area. Thirty percent. of the 2,801 stations of the independent company duplicate Bell stations in Decatur, and these subscribers are paying a double rate.

FIFTH ANNUAL BANQUET.

The fifth annual banquet of the Dutch Arms of Trinity Reformed church will be held Thursday night. There will be music by Mosher's orchestra and the speakers will be Judge Robert E. Carey, Rev. Dr. I. W. Gowen, of Weehawken, and Rev. Dr. W. P. Bruce, of Yonkers, N. Y.

ONE DAY'S REST IS A NECESSITY

That Which Compells Seven Days' Labor is Wrong, Says Rev. Dr. Herring.

A PUNISHABLE OFFENSE

From a Physical Point of View Man Is Unable to Work Continuously, Declares Preacher, and It Is Against the Law of God.

"Laborers Demand One Rest Day in Seven," was the theme of Rev. Dr. C. E. Herring's discourse at the First Presbyterian church, last night his purpose being to show that those who work seven days a week are going contrary to the law of nature, the law of God and the law of humanity. Dr. Herring said in part:

"John Mitchell, at a meeting of the Republican Club of New York, said, 'What we need is a law which shall make it an offense punishable with fine and imprisonment to require a working man to work more than six days a week.' That was not only his thought but the thought of the other representatives of labor at that meeting. Certainly this is in harmony with that ancient divine command which says 'Six days shalt thou labor and the seventh day thou shalt rest.'

"From a physical point of view, to work seven days a week and 365 days a year is radically wrong.

"Modern civilization says that it is impossible for every man to have his Sunday off, but nature demands that he should have one day off in every week, and the recent law of New York State providing one day of rest for certain kinds of labor is a step in the right direction. It needs to be wider in its application. It needs, too, to be a law for every state.

"There is just as much warrant for the State to interfere in matters of this kind as for the State to compel your boy to go to school because his ignorance is dangerous to the well being of the State. A man who works seven days in every week cannot appreciate the spirit of liberty and justice on which this Government is founded. Six days he is compelled to say: 'I am under the boss and must do what he says.' The seventh day he says: 'I am independent.'

"The laws of this natural world which are the laws of God point out certain great rest periods. Night is one. If men turn night into day, then day must be turned into night for rest. It has been proved over and over again that not only men but animate and inanimate things need greater periods of rest. A farmer knows that if he is to get the best results out of his ground he must let it lie fallow for a season. For man, his servants and his cattle, the demand is for one-seventh of the time as a rest period. That is the law of God and the proved law of nature.

"It should be an important part of our religion to labor in whatever way we can to see that the men who are working overtime get a fair deal and to reveal to managers that certain things considered impossible are not only possible but profitable and humane. Sabbath rest does not reduce the earnings of a corporation. Large corporations realize that an eight-hour day is not only more humane but more economical in the long run.

"There are 35,000 firemen and stationery engineers in New York who work 365 days a year, 12 hours a day and some days 24 hours straight. These conditions which are inhuman could be changed by having three shifts a day instead of two. Mr. Healy said, 'I have no sympathy with the I. W. W., but some of the arguments of the I. W. W. are perfectly correct.'

"There are some grocery men, druggists, restaurant men, and railroad men who work seven days a week, holidays included, which is contrary to the law of nature, the law of God, and the law of humanity."

VIOLIN AND TENOR RECITAL.

The violin and tenor recital to be given at the Congregational church, this evening by Miss Mary Henry and George C. Carre, with Miss May as pianist, promises to be one of the musical events of the winter season. This will be the first entertainment of this character in the new parish house. There has been a demand for tickets and it is expected that the affair will be enjoyed by a large audience. The proceeds will be devoted to the furnishing fund.

CENTRAL LODGE SMOKER.

Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., will give a "smoker" on Thursday night, February 26, to be followed by an informal program of entertainment. It is expected that there will be initiation the same night.

WIFE-BEATER GIVEN CHANCE TO "MAKE-UP"

Complainant Relents After Having Him Arraigned and He Promises to Behave.

Archibold Reeves, a mechanic, living at 539 West Fifth street, was arraigned before Judge DeMeza in the city court this morning charged with abusing his wife and family, while under the influence of liquor Saturday night. On the stand Mrs. Reeve's alleged that her husband had treated her in a like manner on various occasions during the past two years and displayed many scars and bruises which she said had been inflicted by him.

Being unable to endure the treatment any longer Mrs. Reeves called the police late Saturday night when her husband came home under the influence of liquor and threatened to set the family's blood running through the cracks in the floor with a large butcher knife which he swung menacingly over their heads. Reeves is the father of three small children between the ages of six and ten years and the youngsters were witnesses of the offender's arrest and subsequent arraignment in court this morning.

The Reeves family came to this city last June from Panama and their domestic life had been one of constant turmoil during the last two years and the climax came Saturday night when the husband entered the home in a drunken rage. After relating their marital troubles to the court Mr. and Mrs. Reeves patched matters up in a way satisfactory to all concerned and the case against the husband was suspended.

NEARLY PERISHED IN MOUNTAIN DRIFTS

Miss Bertha Botts, of Hoboken, Rescued While Trying to Reach Relatives.

Wandering aimlessly in the storm of Saturday night, having lost her way when she alighted from a Lackawanna train at the station at Gillette, Miss Bertha Botts, 22 years old, who lives in Hoboken, almost froze to death, and suffered greatly from her long exposure, before she was rescued from her plight and finally taken to the house where she was bound.

The girl was to visit at the home of William Holstein, an uncle, whose house is about two miles distant from Gillette. Floundering through the great drifts of snow, her clothing frozen to her body, she was finally discovered at Union Village, and taken to the home of J. F. Schwab in that place. There she was rubbed with snow, her clothing dried, and she was fed and otherwise cared for Word was sent to her uncle and he went to the home of Baptist Tischeim, where the girl had been removed, and took her to his home. Had the young woman remained out of doors much longer on Saturday night, chilled as she was, it is believed that she would have died.

HEAVY SNOW FALL COSTLY

LARGE FORCE ENGAGED

Street Commssioner A. J. Gavett Has Forty Carts and Teams Employed in the City—Good Work Being Done in the Borough.

For every day that men and teams are worked in the herculean effort to remove the snow from the city streets it will cost the taxpayers of Plainfield, it was estimated today, at least $350. Add to this amount the cost of snow removal in the borough and the figures covering the daily cost of snow removal mount to a surprisingly large figure.

All Saturday, Sunday and today laborers and teams have been kept busy at work in Plainfield and in the borough. The usual day for laborers here is but eight hours long. On Sunday the men put in nine hours work. It was a cold job and one that scores of men engaged in the work made but little headway and masses of snow remained.

Street Commissioner Andrew J. Gavett is a busy man these days. Forty wagons are engaged today in hauling snow from Front street and Watchung avenue. These streets are traversed by the trolley lines and the railway company defrays one-half of the cost of snow removal. Park avenue, between Second and Front streets, is piled high with snow. As yet no attempt has been made to remove the drifts. Traffic through this section of Park avenue is seriously impeded and today automobiles and wagons were frequently stalled in front of the Queen City Hotel. The thoroughfare is very narrow at this point and it is difficult for vehicles to pass each other on account of the high banks of snow. By tomorrow Street Commissioner Gavett hopes, he said, to have his men attack the snow on Park and Madison avenues, and on West Fourth street. He said today that he thought the most important points of attack at first were those streets which trolley cars traversed.

The street cleaning authorities both here and in the borough estimated that a foot of snow had fallen on the level during the recent storm. The owners of wagons that are being used to haul the snow away are being paid $5 a day and all laborors receive compensation at the rate of $1.75 a day. There are plenty of laborers available, it is said, and so far there has been no difficulty in securing carts and wagons.

Five gangs are being kept at work cleaning sidewalks about the city which owners have thus far neglected to have cleaned. For the most part Mr. Gavett said today property owners occupying dwellings all over the city have had their walks cleared of snow. Under the law the municipal authorities of Plainfield must allow a householder twelve hours of daylight in which to clean their walks before sending men to do the work. The penalty for failure to have the sidewalks cleared is a fine. Early on Saturday, and while the storm still raged, workmen employed by the city were put to work cleaning crosswalks all over town.

It was said to have been the worst snowstorm that Plainfield has experienced in some years. There have been worse storms, but this one came so suddenly and without warning as to catch the local authorities, in a way, unprepared to cope with the heavy fall, immediately. Good work has been done, however, both in this city and in the borough. Street Commissioner Uhrhahn has a score of men and many carts working in North Plainfield. They have accomplished good work in removing snow on Somerset street, which is the mainly travelled thoroughfare of that borough.

Owing to the cold and the heavy snowfall which made walking bad, no classes of the grades from the first to the sixth, inclusive, were held in Somerset School today. Announcement that there would be no school gladdened the heart of Plainfield school children when the fire whistle was blown once at 8:15 o'clock this morning.

Men employed by the Plainfield Ice & Supply Company were at work as early as 1 o'clock this morning scraping the ice on Watchung lake. Two score of laborers are working at this big task today. More men are wanted by the company which has jobs for many more unemployed men. It was said at the company's office, at 222 Madison avenue, this afternoon.

It is expected that the real work of cutting and harvesting the ice will be begun on Wednesday morning. The new icehouse which the company has built, to take the place of the one that was destroyed by fire last year, will, it is said, house 16,000 tons of ice.

TRINITY COMMANDERY PLANS CELEBRATION

Twenty-fifth Anniversary of Masonic Body to Be Observed on May 14.

Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., at its conclave this month, decided to hold an anniversary field day, similar to the one of last summer, and Eminent Commander Charles H. Russell appointed a committee comprising Sir Knights R. F. R. Huntsman, Charles A. Lee, A. D. Honeyman and Eminent Sir B. Frank Coriell as a committee of arrangements. It is proposed that this celebration shall be the most important event ever held under the auspices of the commandery.

Trinity Commandery was formed on May 14, 1889, and that date this year will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary. For that reason special efforts will be made to arrange a field day event of unsual interest. It is expected that all of the grand commandery members will be here, and many other distinguished visitors. The details of the affair will be announced later.

NEW JEWISH SOCIETY TO AID THE NEEDY

Several Local Charitable Organizations United at Meeting Held Yesterday.

With a view or broadening its scope, and of strengthening the organization through amalgamation of other Jewish societies, and for making adequate provision for the finding of employment for the unemployed, the Hebrew Sheltering and Wayfarers' Association of Plainfield has effected a reorganization on an entirely new basis.

Delegates from various local Hebrew societies met yesterday afternoon in the New street synagogue and discussed plans and ways and means for the amalgamation of the Hebrew societies of this city for the relief of deserving applicants who may hereafter apply for aid and work.

Present at yesterday's meeting were representatives from the congregation of Children of Israel, Jehudah-Halevi Camp, No. 57, Order of Sons of Zion, Plainfield Camp, No. 607, I. O. B. A., the Workmen's Circle, the Ladies' Benevolent Association and the Young Men's Hebrew Association.

It is the aim of the Hebrew Sheltering and Wayfarers' Association to secure the co-operation of every Jewish organization in Plainfield. The individual memberships and subscriptions have consequently been abandoned.

Officers elected at yesterday's meeting were: Louis Schiff, president; Abraham Baum, vice-president; Samuel Saidel, secretary; Kalman Rothberg, treasurer. Members appointed to serve on the Distributing Committee were Abraham Neumark and Samuel Klein. The executive committeemen are Henry Rosenbaum, Kalman Rothberg and I. Goldberg.

The original society has been in existence in Plainfield for the past ten years. It has accomplished a great deal of good work and has been of material aid to unfortunate Hebrews who have reached this city and have been without the means to provide themselves with food or shelter. To all applicants the association gives a night's lodging, a free breakfast and sufficient money to carry them to their destinations.

Under the wider plans of the organization needy ones will hereafter, if it be possible to do so, be placed in touch with manufacturers and other employers of labor hereabouts. The association asks that all persons needing help keep in touch with the organization which will endeavor, so far as possible, to supply their needs. From 50 to 100 calls for help are received monthly. Last month 75 indigent Hebrews, all of whom were strangers in this city, were aided by the society.

MAYOR STEWART FOR SENATOR

Democratic Party Leaders Believe He Would Make a Strong Candidate

DOBBINS IN THE RACE

General Collins Would Support Plainfield Man, It Is Said—Political Pot Beginning to Boil in Union County.

While Assemblyman Francis V. Dobbins is being talked of as a likely Democratic aspirant for State Senator, Democratic party leaders are discussing Mayor Percy H. Stewart, of this city, as one of the strong possibilities for that office. Mr. Stewart was at the head of the Fielder League of Union county during the last campaign, is now chairman of the county Democratic committee and is acknowledged to be close to State Committeman Dennis F. Collins. He was lined up in the latter's fight for the Democratic State committee last September and gave the latter strong support in Plainfield.

It has been known for some time that Mr. Stewart was likely to enter the Senatorial contest, the leaders believing that he would make one of the strongest candidates in this district. He undoubtedly would have the support of Gen Collins and his friends, while he is said to have a host of friends in other parts of the county as well as his home city.

The Democracy of Union county will not lack candidates for county offices this fall. Instead of the steering committee having to go over the ground with a fine tooth comb to find a man who might be persuaded to run, as has been the case many, many times in previous campaigns, the chief task of the committee this fall will probably be to find a way to eliminate the superabundance of aspirants so as to get a ticket that will not be "All Elizabeth" and consequently topheavy. It is because the outlook for success is rosy that the fields appear to be filled with budding office-holders. There are some lucrative offices to be filled, including country clerk, registrar and sheriff.

Every week a Democratic boom for a county office is launched. The sheriff job looks good to Excise Commissioner Michael P. Devine, Councilman Jeremiah P. McNamara, Assemblyman William A. Leonard, and one or two others who are coddling their booms at present. Freeholder J. Logan Fay, who was defeated by the present incumbent, William Wright, may try again. McNamara has formally announced his candidacy, and Devine has declared that he would not hesitate to make a run for the job. Frank Pfaff and James Brennan may try for the berth now held by County Registrar Frank Smith. Because of his popularity among the Democrats of the county and the prospects of his receiving a big Democratic vote, the same as he did in his two former campaigns, it appears that Democrats are not so anxious to pit a man against County Clerk Calvert. Of course he will have an opponent, but it is figured that Calvert is a hard man to beat, and there are not so many anxious to make the run against him. On the other hand he is likely to have opposition in his own party. Sheriff Wright has already announced his candidacy for the nomination.

Freeholder Thomas J. Pierson is regarded as a Congressional aspirant, and if the present sentiment among Elizabeth Democrats is any criterion many of them will support him against Representative William E. Tuttle, Jr. The latter, it would appear, has come into disfavor among certain Democratic forces in the county. There is no special reason advanced for the opposition to Tuttle, and the feeling against him may be dissipated before next September. He is admittedly the strongest candidate at present.

POLICE ALLEGE LINKE DRIVER VIOLATED LIQUOR ORDINANCE

Mrs. Hannah Linke, a liquor dealer with a store on West Front street, will be arraigned in the city court, tomorrow morning, before City Judge William G. DeMeza to answer charges that have been preferred against her for alleged violation of the excise laws in selling intoxicants from a wagon. The case grew out of one in the city court this morning, when a defendant, arraigned for beating his wife, made certain revelations that resulted in a complaint being sworn out for Mrs. Linke.

Archibold Reeves, the defendant in the abuse case, claimed that he had purchased liquor from one of Mrs. Linke's drivers in a manner, which the police claim is a violation of the law. Notice was served on Mrs Linke this morning and Assistant Corporation Counsel Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., will prosecute the case in behalf of the city.

WILL CONTINUE ART SHOW EVERY AFTERNOON THIS WEEK

Owing to the heavy fall of snow it has been found to be impracticable to remove the costly works of art now on exhibition in the art gallery of the Plainfield Public Library. Because of this fact those having the loan exhibit in charge have determined to keep the exhibition open tomorrow afternoon and every afternoon for the remainder of the week, including Saturday afternoon. The exhibit will not be on view evenings, however. It will be on view afternoons from 2 until 5 o'clock. Over 800 persons have already seen the fine display and it is expected that many others who have thus far neglected the opportunity will take advantage of it some afternoon this week.

FUNERAL OF MISS C. B. PHILPOTT IS HELD

The funeral of the late Miss Cornelia B. Philpott, a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Philpott, of this city, was held last evening, at the residence, 36 Norwood avenue. The Rev. C. H. Mallery, rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, officiated at the service. Three of the late Miss Philpott's favorite hymns were sung by the rector. There was a profusion of flowers sent by relatives and friends of the deceased. Miss Philpott was a lover of flowers. Clasped in her hands was a long spray of fern which she had nurtured and raised with much care, together with roses.

Rev. Mr. Mallery spoke impressively of the many fine traits of character of the deceased, saying that in these times of selfishness it was good to find one whose life had been largely spent in doing good to other and less fortunate people. He referred to the fact that Miss Philpott had destroyed her own health through her efforts to care for the health of others. Miss Philpott is survived by two sisters.

The burial was in Cypress Hills cemetery, in Brooklyn, N. Y., this morning. Miss Philpott was a member of the congregation of the Holy Cross church.

SNOW FALL COSTLY

hereabouts have had difficulty in getting about since the heavy fall of snow. Some roads are still completely blocked with drifts. Mail carriers on the rural free delivery routes have had their own troubles. In all cases the mails have been late. The carrier who delivers mail direct to Warrenville, from Plainfield had his automobile stalled in a huge drift on Sunday. Today he changed to a sleigh and found his progress was more rapid. The Warren Township Committee had men out clearing the roads today and Sunday so as to allow the mails to pass. Conditions on R. F. D. No. 3 were said to be particularly bad.

MAN INJURED WHEN TRAIN JUMPS TRACK

Slippery rails caused a near fatality at the Prospect avenue crossing of the New Jersey Central in Dunellen at 7 o'clock yesterday morning, when a drill engine backed a train off the snow coverd rails into the tower house on the east bound side of the track. Sitting in the tower at the time of the accident were Andrew Frey, a track-walker, and Bartley Kelly, a flagman, and it was thought for a time that both were seriously, if not fatally injured, so sudden and severe was the crash.

The train running wild over the snow-covered ground smashed into the small frame tower and while Kelly escaped by jumping, Frey was hit by some flying splinters of wood and attended by Dr. H. W. Longbothum, who dressed a number of painful contusions about his head and body. The train running wild over the rails cut a large chunk out of a telegraph pole near the scene of the accident and this stopped the force of the engine before it hit the small shed.

A wrecking crew was sent to the scene of the derailment soon after it happened and the debris was cleared away in three hours, east bound trains being tied up for that period of time. The engine and train separated in the crash but the former remained on the tracks. The mishap occurred during the hours of the morning when traffic is light on the eastbound track and the train service was not seriously effected by the delay necessitated in lifting the big car back on the track.

Early yesterday morning it was reported here that several passenger trains had jumped the track and that several people were in a serious condition in Muhlenberg Hospital and this rumor attracted curious persons to the Dunellen crossing.

NABBED A RUNAWAY.

Patrolmen Birmingham and Muir, of the local police department, joined forces this morning in catching a runaway horse on East Second street and turned the animal over to the Central Livery Stables. Later in the morning the horse was called for by Cormack Caulfield, the owner.

The Men's Club of the Seventh-Day Baptist church will give a turkey dinner at the church next Sunday evening, February 22.

HEROIC RESCUES MADE AT SEA

Women and Babes Saved From Sinking Boat.

VESSEL LOST IN A STORM

Had Drifted Forty Miles In a Blinding Blizzard—Dory Was Launched In the Raging Seas and Frightened Occupants Taken Off by Life Savers.

Greenport, N. Y., Feb. 16.—A little group of men and women, eleven in all, with two children sleeping in their mother's arms, sat close around a big fire in the home of B. D. Latham at Orient Point, the northernmost point of Long Island, and told of their drift across Long Island sound in a sinking barge.

In fifteen hours they went through the following experiences:

Roused from sleep on board four barges which had parted from a tug, near New London, in the midst of a blizzard.

All taken off the barge in a small dory.

Returned on board one of the barges, which seemed to have a chance to outride the gale.

Drift all day before a howling storm till they are sighted by the Orient Point life savers across the sound.

Rescued and taken ashore, where they watched their barge hurled on the rocks and dashed to pieces.

In spite of all their adventures, the survivors are in excellent health and have escaped practically without a scratch. The women of the party, who are the wives of the four barge captains, give the credit for the rescue to the quiet heroism of their husbands, whose courage and presence of mind never faltered in the face of the most desperate odds against them.

Four of the men were captains of the four coal barges the Frederick Willembrock, the Elizabeth, the Katie Woods and the Rose Marie Feeney The barges were in tow of the tug Pliny Fisk, and had left Newtown Creek last Tuesday, bound for New Haven, New London and Providence

At the height of the blizzard, when all on board the barges were asleep, the cable connecting the second and third barges suddenly parted, leaving the last four of the string at the mercy of the gale.

Captain's Story.

William Johnson, captain of the Katie Woods, said:

"We were all asleep when the pounding of the waves on the boat made us realize that something was wrong. I ran to the deck and saw that four of us had broken away from the other two, and I soon saw that our barge—the Katie Woods—was sinking. Well, we wallowed around there for some time, and we soon drew pretty close together, so that we were able to yell at each other from the different boats and try to decide what we'd better do.

"Of course the first thing we did was to cut the cables which tied us together. Then I yanked out a dory that was on board my barge, and I managed to get the wife and child into her and went in along with them. They only had their nightclothes on, but we got a blanket and some old coats around ourselves, so we were all right.

"So I pulled alongside the Elizabeth, and we got Captain Sherhorn, his wife and Milligan off. We had to be pretty careful, I can tell you, for it was certainly blowing great guns, and I thought sure a dozen times we were going to be capsized.

"Then we took Captain Towne and his wife off the Frederick Willembrock and, finally, Captain Aikin and Mrs. Aikin off the Rose Marie Feeney. Of course we were down almost to the gunwales then, but we thought maybe we could manage to make the Connecticut shore.

"After drifting for hours we saw the Orient Point life saving station.

"They saw us, too, and made out we were in trouble, and then soon had a lifeboat alongside. They brought us here, and we've all been well cared for since.

"Soon after we left the gale drove the Rose Marie on the rocks."

HOTEL FIRE TAKES WOMAN AS VICTIM

STRUCTURE 100 YEARS OLD

Maid of Union House at Brielle Burns to Death Seeking Her Belongings. Proprietor Runs Half Mile In Bare Feet to Turn In an Alarm—Loss Is $100,000.

Brielle, N. J., Feb. 16.—The Union House, an old hotel which has stood for a hundred years, burned to the ground. Amanda Anderson, a maid, who was sleeping in a room adjoining that of Mrs. Addie V. Wainwright, the owner, got out, but went back to get her clothes and was burned to death.

The fire started near the room occupied by Stephen Wainwright and his wife and boy. It was licking at the door frame when they awoke, and Mrs. Wainwright took up the boy and ran out of doors. Mr. Wainwright went upstairs to awaken his mother and the servent and then ran half a mile in his bare feet through the snow to turn in an alarm.

The hotel was on the bank of the Manasquan river. Near it are many cottages, and for a time the fire, which lit up the surrounding country for miles, threatened to spread and destroy many houses.

The local department found itself unable to cope with the flames, and a call was sent to Manasquan for assistance. The chief there, William H. Ruf, refused to allow the apparatus to leave town, and when he later went to the scene of the fire the townspeople hissed him.

There were many bits of old furniture in the hotel which were highly valued by Mrs Wainwright. The loss is said to be more than $100,000.

The Wainwrights took refuge in the home of John H. Folk. All that Wainwright, who is the postmaster here, managed to save was the money box of the postoffice.

SNOW SHOVELING KILLS TWO

Aged Men Die From Overexertion In Jersey Town.

Boonton, N. J., Feb. 16.—Two men both over sixty, who were shoveling snow in front of their homes here, overexerted themselves too much and died.

Jacob Vreeland, sixty-five years of age, a retired butcher living in Myrtle avenue, thought shoveling snow would be good exercise. He had not more than half finished his task when he collapsed and fell into a pile of snow. He was dead when found there.

Benjamin Milners, sixty-one years of age, a clerk, of Brookiyn street, was shoveling snow during the early part of the afternoon shortly before dinner He grew weak and went into the house to rest. He went to bed and a physician was called in. When he arrived Milners was dead.

PREFERS TOBACCO TO PULPIT

But Preacher Who Wouldn't Quit Smoking May Get Both.

Mount Holly, N. J., Feb. 16.—When the First Baptist church here found itself without a pastor some time ago it invited the Rev. J. H. Perry, a student at Crozer Theological seminary, Chester, Pa., to deliver a trial sermon. He did and did it so well that the congregation decided he should be called

"But he smokes," declared a lady member of the conference at which the decision was reached, "and anybody who smokes creates a most pernicious example."

Forthwith a fervid argument was launched, finally resulting in a letter to the Rev. Perry asking him if he would stop smoking. He wrote back that he wouldn't.

POTTERY COMPANY TO CLOSE

Has Been In Operation Sixty Years and Employs 300 Hands.

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 16.—The Etruria pottery, which has been in operation sixty years and employs 300 hands will close within three weeks, according to a statement made by Charles H. Cook, head of the Cook Pottery company.

Because of conditions in the trade the company will abandon the manufacture of general ware. It will continue to make electric porcelain and specialties at the Prospect Hill plant, to which a part of the business now conducted at the Etruria will be transferred. The general pottery business has been slack since the first of the year.

BRIEF STATE ITEMS.

The Caldwell board of education has decided to submit the question of the establishment of a course in agriculture in the local high school to the voters.

Every-one-in-church day was celebrated in all of the Protestant churches of Newark. The congregations were unusually large. In all of the churches there were special services.

The Public Service corporation's snow sweepers threw the snow to each side of the trolley tracks in Passaic. It is piled at least three feet high outside the tracks, causing a congestion in traffic. The corporation has been ordered to remove this snow immediately.

THE CITY'S CONSCIENCE.

Every city has a community conscience. While some of them have been slow in making the discovery, the average community of today has secured a firm hold upon the realization of its duty to its citizens. It is simply in the degree that this community conscience has been discovered and developed that cities are progressive and successful. That rize is not all in the municipality is now generally admitted; that quality and goodness is paramount over quantity is acknowledged. Cities which cannot be the largest may succeed in the ambition of being the best, and Plainfield is in the latter class.

Mayor Baker, of Cleveland, has defined the city's conscience by declaring in an introduction to that city's Social Year Book that "the city of the future will not be allowed to happen." The future municipality must provide all that goes to make up the "fair chance for every child" in moral, mental and physical growth and the "equal chance for all both to contribute to the industrial and economic welfare of the race and to capture its rewards and satisfactions." Here then is the duty and opportunity resting upon every city's community conscience.

The municipal board of human welfare of Kansas City and several other cities is an example of this awakening of the city's conscience to its opportunities and its possibilities. Another example is to be found at Cleveland and it is possible with greater ease and almost as much efficiency. In the Ohio city, fifty-five citizen societies interested in various phases of welfare, charity and philanthropic work and embracing all sects, religions and types of welfare aid from baby dispensaries to homes for aged colored folks, are gathered under one great organization, the Cleveland Federation of Charity and Philanthropy which has just celebrated the completion of its first year's work by the publication of a year book which embraces the work done, plans for future work and resources at hand and to be obtained to make such work possible.

As in Cleveland, the community conscience can best be promoted by organized co-operation, not of charity bodies only, but of all the various detached agencies for welfare betterment. Municipal cooperation is also essential. Here in Plainfield, the range of activity which may be credited to community conscience is great. There is the Charity Organization Society with its work, the day nursery, children's home, the camparatively new civic centre work, including the public forum, under the auspices of the recreation committee; the anti-tuberculosis league, the playground commission, with the splendid work it is doing; the Parent-Teacher Associations; the penny lunches for school children, civic organizations in various parts of the city; the community Christmas and Fourth of July movements, and numerous other minor activities which demonstrate that the people of the city are fully alive to its needs. It may safely be said that Plainfield is in the forefront of the cities of the country making use of its resources and giving all an equal chance to enjoy the fruits of centralized humanity at work and in the home.

IN REPLY TO "ST. VALENTINE'S LINES TO A COUNCILMAN."

You ask me why a man will strive a Councilman to be
When no inducement is held forth by way of salary,
While on the other hand there seems a fund of work to do
Which takes him out three nights a week in order to get through?
I'll tell you, for I think I've learned the truth that puzzles you;
I'm not a Councilman myself but friendly am with two.
Now take Bill Smith to illustrate, his name is talked about
As candidate for Councilman, some honor without doubt;
He has no thought of salary or duties, none at all,
He merely sees the honor that attends the people's call;
So Bill just smiles and sees no harm to be a nominee
And then the chance of getting it is not so strong you see;
But opposition rises now, another candidate,
Which stirs the fighting blood in Bill and causes him to make
His strongest efforts just to see if he can't win the fight,
And when the primaries have brought his victory in sight
He jumps into the large campaign determined now to win,
Neglects his business, health and home and works with mighty vim.
He hears the plaudits of the mob, his presence greatly sought,
His chest expands, his brow grows stern with dignity and thought.
He wins the fight, the place is his; his honor satisfied,
And then he settles down to work to pay for all his pride.
You see, my friend, the reason's plain why men will strive for glory,

Reports come from Elizabeth that there will be plenty of candidates among the Democrats for the county offices which become vacant this fall, and that "the chief task of the Democratic steering committee will probably be to find a way to eliminate the superabundance of aspirants so as to get a ticket that will not be 'All Elizabeth,' and consequently topheavy." Then are enumerated a list of men who are seeking the various offices which become vacant, and aside from the State Senatorship every man mentioned comes from the county seat. That is usually the way. All of the Elizabeth office seekers feel that the ticket should be so balanced as to give other parts of the county a chance, just so long as each particular aspirant from Elizabeth is given his own little opportunity to serve the county. There are plenty of men who are willing to have other parts of the county represented so long as their own ambitions do not have to be curtailed, in order to care for the other sections. It's the same old story, and some day the voters of the county are going to rise up in their might, and hand the Elizabeth statesmen a terrific jolt.

"Remember the Maine!" Millions of the people of this country recall when that famous battleship was blown up in Havana harbor, but how few there are today who can mention the date upon which that great disaster befell the nation. Pause a moment, before reading further and search back in your memory, and see whether you really know when that explosion, which was heard round the world, took place. Today is the sixteenth anniversary of the destruction of the battleship, and at the Arlington National Cemetery it is being fittingly commemorated. The American people never forget national calamities, but very few remember the dates upon which they occur. We can think of no more fitting tribute than the launching of the flower boat, as was done today on the Potomac river, from which young women scattered flowers on the waves to the memory of the "unforgotten dead of the Maine."

President Wilson's reception to his New Jersey friends proved to be a delightful affair, even if the Chief Magistrate was not present. It afforded an opportunity for meeting the big men of the nation, and for inspecting the White House, which seldom falls to the lot of the citizens, and established a custom which might well be made an annual one. Usually the White House receptions are formal affairs, with anywhere from 2,000 to 3,000 people present, but there was an entire absence of such an atmosphere on Friday night, which made the occasion a delightful one for all who attended.

THE FORUM.

Editors, Plainfield Daily Press:

Some weeks ago I saw a freight car that had been shunted over at the freight house in the East End of our city, and with white chalk someone had written on it in large letters: "Read the Menace" and get wise to the priests. Until the advent of L. Cruikshank I had supposed that it was the work of some super-socialist with mental aberration.

Now I must ask why should anyone read the "Menace" and what is there about the priests to (get wise to) that we cannot read in the regular daily journals.

If a priest falls from his high estate the thud is heard all over Christendom, and the sound reverberates along valley and crag for many an hour because the fall will have been a mighty one.

Such an event is a calamity, and when it happens, why is it that the barbed shaft of slander is directed at the church? when it should receive the sympathy that is generally accorded the innocent mother who unconsciously nourishes a serpent to her breast.

Because an apple tree which is heavily laden with good fruit should happen to produce one imperfect apple, do we chop down the tree because of it? No!

When a mother has a family of four good children and there arrives a fifth, who through some strange combination of childish association and a penchant for wrongly registering impressions on its mentality, and thereby becoming a criminal, do we fly at the mother's throat with tense, gripping fingers, or wait in the darkness with an unsheathed knife to distrop the rest of the family? Decidedly No!

Mr. Cruikshank disregards the ethical rules of argument when he goes back a thousand years to pick up a club with which to belabor his opponent.

If we want to have an argument on ancient history, why then I wonder how the rest of the human race would compare with the Christians about the time that Paul was giving chatauquas in the back yards of Rome. We are told that Nero was quite a cut up. Paul was champion of a constructive policy. All of the disciples may not have been Saints but range them, one for one, alongside the Court of Nero, (Idol of Iniquity), and you have, to say the least, a novel comparison.

We are told that to be fifty-one per cent right is to be on the desirable side of the Styx.

The Catholic Church can boast more than fifty-one per cent. Also if she wishes she can plead the statute of limitations, but she does not do it.

What history has handed down is accepted on its face value, and if the world of the flesh could boast as good a record, and as steady a progress despite the burden of the double cross, as the Catholic Church, there would be no one to edit and no one to champion such papers as the "Menace."

The policy of the "Menace" is not constructive, and whatever is not constructive is destructive, and whatever is destructive is a menace. "Menace" is the right word. Only I can never more use it without thinking of snakes.

What the serpent was in the Garden of Eden, the "Menace" is in the garden of life.

What "Gyp the Blood" and "Lefty Louis" are to the physical aspect of life, the "Menace" is to the moral.

What the jemson-weed, murdock and skunk-cabbage are to vegetation the "Menace" is to the growth of righteousness.

Emerson said: "A weed is a plant whose virtues have not yet been discovered." Since Emerson I can boast of discovering the virtue of one weed—the "Menace."

The "Menace" has a virtue.

It is an excellent example of what people should not read.

However, the mind of man possesses a morbid curiosity, and people read the "Menace" with the same feeling that they look at the reptiles in Bronx Park. Once the novelty has worn off the public will vomit the vile dose and amongst the sea-sick victims will be Mr. L. Cruikshank.

For one thing, I think Mr. Cruikshank is a joker. Of course he is intelligent. He might even admit it. I would not be surprised to learn that he is a very clever ad. man, who is soon going to offer us for sale some patent medicine, a cure for mal de mer perhaps, and is taking this novel method of introducing himself to the Plainfield public.

GERMAN BENEFICIAL SOCIETY CELEBRATES

Announcement that there was a surplus of $1,500 in the treasury was made by August Wolffe, who acted as toastmaster, at the supper given on Saturday night, in Sangerbund Hall, the borough, in celebration of the eighteenth anniversary of the Germania Beneficial Society. Handsome souvenirs, some of them cut glass articles, were distributed among the guests. There are about 30 members in the Germania Beneficial Society.

Speeches were made at the supper by President Rudolph Wuergler and Secretary Vincent Wisniewski. Miss Sophia Vogel, of Dewey Park, played the piano, and Charles Geibler the accordion. The supper was served by Steward Leopold Kuntz. The society's officers are: Rudolph Wuergler, president; G. Hermann, vice-president; Vincent Wisniewski, secretary; August Wolffe, financial secretary; and J. Wicenid, treasurer. The annual election of officers will be held early in April.

FASHION INTRUDES UPON THE SLENDER SILHOUETTE

AFTER a struggle to attain a sylph-like figure at any cost, even of dieting and exercising, in addition to studied corseting, fashionable woman throws down the gauntlet before styles that subvert her cherished ideals of yesterday as regards dress. The slender silhouette in effect, is no more. We are told that we need not mind adding draperies and puffs about the hips, and Paris bears out the edict by sending garments with flutes and even godets below the waistline, while the antiquated bustle has intruded so subtly in modern guise as to be tolerated to some extent. The fact of the matter is that only slight figures are rejoicing in the prospect of added girth. The stouter women must needs carefully select modifications of the extreme novelties, which happily can be found.

While French couturiers are wondering what innovation to exploit for Spring and Summer, various examples of styles recently launched are interesting and suggestive. A group of them is illustrated on this page.

Still the Far East is the source of color and also fabric inspiration, with Frenchmen to interpret it in terms of modern art. The city shops which have featured the new goods very early have found eager buyers.

The intrusion of drapery is simultaneous with combinations of two or more materials, for one dress. Everything must be soft and supple, though taffetas, which is very strong at the moment, would seem to depart from that statement. The chiffon finish, however, is used, and it is practical as well as adaptable to a variety of the latest models. For instance, it is perfectly suited to the gown in the centre of the page (8116) combining plain black taffetas with plaid. The two-piece foundation skirt measures one and three-eighths yards at the foot, has a short-pointed tunic of the plaid, with a ruffled tunic of plaid beneath it. The finish of the points is hemstitching, which is very new. It looks almost like a picot edge. The blouse is fastened into a slightly raised belt and has a guimpe. The large trimming buttons, which are red, are also a style feature of importance at the moment. This type of dress is one that will hold good for very dressy gowns, or for simple wash frocks, according to the material chosen.

Jet has been revived both for costumes and for millinery. Fringe of it outlines the diagonal drapery and bodice of the rich chiffon velvet reception gown at the right (7860). White chaquelé lace forms the graceful upper bodice, with flowing sleeves, and hung over flesh-colored chiffon.

SMALL hats mark the transition from Winter to Spring millinery, with turban and narrow sailor shapes most noticeable. Except for the hat which is fashioned on a frame, the trimming is simple, consisting only of a fancy, or loops of silk, or a pair of pompons, which are very smart.

Black and violet tulle hats are fascinating, and accord with the delicate beauty of filmy gowns and dressy blouses. Crowns of violets with a straw brim displayed among the early models for town and the Southern resorts. Facings of taffetas on the outside of brims are a dressy feature of fine Panama hats having a bow of ribbon and a cluster of exquisite flowers to give a Frenchy color scheme. There are many early hats of straw with silk or velvet crowns. All ribbon hats are a novelty. Many of them have high coronets of ribbon plaited or shirred at one side. Plaited black tulle ruffs stand high around boat-shaped turbans.

NOW, if ever, there is opportunity for the display of individuality in dress, with of course the proviso that we shall keep within the decree for drapery of some sort. The latest models which thus introduce variations from the skirts of straight breadths have set the pace for originality, and offered a wide choice of styles, as indicated in the types of dresses reproduced on this page. The débutante and her slender sisters are revelling in dancing frocks like the one above (8062) with two gathered flounces of lace, chiffon, or net, "topped" by a delicate filmy bodice, frills for the neck and sleeve-ends, and a crush girdle with a pump bow at the back. This is one of the most practical ways to make a new dress, or to remodel an old one, so that it will be the object of special admiration if it happens to be the first of its kind introduced in a coterie of fashion followers.

There is classic beauty in the graceful drapery of the gown on the left, with a flowing sleeve for one arm only. This idea is featured for dancing dresses, as the uplifted arm displays the soft folds of the fabric. The model shown is of satin charmeuse, with the overdress of chiffon cloth edged with jet. It can be reproduced in a variety of materials and combinations using pattern No. 8082, with or without a guimpe. Without the drapery there is a simple plain dress with a three-piece skirt, and slightly raised waistline, suitable for many of the new summer silks and wash materials.

No wardrobe is quite up-to-date, which does not include a brocade or flowered dress of some kind. One sees beautiful brocaded silk poplins combined with plain of the same ground or with chiffon, as pictured in model No. 8094. This has a plain four-gored skirt, coming in at the foot, and a loose blouse with a Gibson plait that is always becoming. The plaited tunic of chiffon extends only to the front, and does not intrude upon the length of the middle skirt which shorter women should have. The square collar pointing out on the shoulder is one of the newest shapes. This and every other pattern on the page is 15 cents each.

New Lingerie of Silk and Nainsook

FRENCH and domestic lingerie for the new season is a marvel of delicate beauty and a temptation to the pocketbook, though one questions the lasting quality of what she most admires. It is cut on the slender straight lines which have prevailed for a long time, for no matter how voluminous the outer garments become, there is no willingness to add bulk beneath them. The texture of crêpe de Chine as well as its wearing quality makes it more in demand for separate skirts, bodices and slips, which will be indispensable with lingerie dresses.

In cut, the underwear takes on the latest features of outer apparel. There is a new skirt divided in front, like a tango dancing frock. It has rows of lace insertion on either side of the front division and extending around the bottom.

A shirred vest of white shadow net is another new idea in a nightdress, also a surplice of tucked net. Batiste embroidery is being used in underwear, and is frequently combined with Cluny lace, Irish medallions and Valenciennes insertions.

Drawers have very narrow bottoms, and the fullness of each leg is daintily taken up in clusters of tiny vertical tucks near the edge. Flat finishes and embroidered scallops take the place of full ruffles, in order that the garment shall have no bulk. Combination pieces, consisting of corset cover and drawers, are in big demand; and these, too, have the narrow bottoms.

Mercerized cotton and lisle knickerbockers, with a silk finish and daintily trimmed with shirred ribbon bands and bows are taking well with women who cannot afford Italian silk underwear, or who are so practical as to realize the more lasting and better laundering qualities of the former.

14323-Border in Darning Stitch

WOOL and cotton ratine and other fabrics with loosely woven meshes, particularly ramie linens and crêpes brought out for the coming season, lend themselves to effective decoration of handiwork such as shown in the border design above (14323).

A double row of outline-stitch or embroidery floss, couched on, shapes the diamond, while the inside has vertical threads run in darning stitch. It is adaptable also to curtain borders and pillow tops of crash. The designs, one and three-quarter inches wide, come in a three-yard strip, ready for stamping. 10 cents.

ANNUAL sales of household and table linens of late in city shops have focused attention upon the variety and artistic beauty of the handwork which embellishes them. Fashion prescribes wondrous combinations of embroidery with Cluny, filet, Flanders and even Vénise laces.

The housewife who may only admire the latter is pretty certain to have her linen closet stocked with embroidered towels. The scalloped ends with a more or less elaborate design continue to be fashionable and fascinating for the woman who embroiders. Below is a group of three towel patterns which come in a set (14543) ready to stamp. They are for the guest towel size, eighteen inches across. Satin and eyelet embroidery are combined. It is only necessary to use the elaborate decoration on one end, a plain scallop being used on the other. A two-inch initial may be placed in the centre of each design. These three designs may also be used for pillow slips or adapted for pin cushions, baby pillows, glove and handkerchief cases of linen. For a fifteen-inch towel omit the scallops at either end of the pattern. The set is 15

Household Hints

ALUMINUM cooking utensils that become blackened can be cleaned with lemon juice, or with oxalic acid in weak solution. In case of the latter, extreme care must be used to wash off all traces of the cleanser. Aluminum is not apt to get black unless it has been heated so hot that food is scorched on it.

Easy Cheese Straws

When making pie crust, the left-over scraps may be utilized for delicious cheese straws to serve with salad or with tea. Roll out the crust and sprinkle on it grated English cheese to which a few grains of cayenne pepper and salt have been added. Work it in and then roll the crust up in straws about as large as one's little finger. Cut in desired lengths and bake on a greased pan.

Lobster Sandwiches

The innumerable variety of sandwiches has been increased by a very delicate and delicious combination of lobster and chopped celery spread with mayonnaise between thin slices of sandwich bread. The mixture may be placed on a leaf of tender lettuce. Cut the sandwiches diamond shape to distinguish them from others.

SET GOOD SCORES IN CLUB TOURNEY

George Taylor Won Knights of Columbus Event With Five Double Centuries.

F. M'INERNEY SECOND

Winner Polls 1135 and Runner-up Comes in Fifteen Pins in Back of This Mark—No Third Prize Has as Yet Been Decided.

Setting up five marks that comfortably passed the double century record, George Taylor easily captured the first award in the Knights of Columbus prize tournament held in connection with the fair that closed Saturday night and he will receive the first prize, having led a pack of competitors throughout the week and wound up in front with twenty pins to spare over his nearest rival Frank McInerney. Taylor's best score came the first night, when he knocked down 238 pins and he nearly equalled this high water record in the third game by smashing 232 of the wooden images in a tournament match.

McInerney's highest one night score was 234, established the second night, and he wound up the week with a grand total of 1,115, against Taylor's 1,135. Both of these men did some excellent pinning and the totals chalked up for the quintet of games are unusually creditable for a tournament of this nature, where individualism plays a prominent part. A number of those entered in the event were unable to complete their schedule of games prior to Saturday night and as a result the third place winner was not decided.

For his great showing Taylor will receive a pool cue and McInerney, the runner-up, will get a bowling ball. The third prize, one set of poker chips, is still in the hands of the committee in charge of the event. Although Jim Cullen scored three double centuries he failed to play the regular number of games and was declared out Saturday night, as were also Edward Taylor, Jack Wilson, Fred Connors, M. Moynihan, Miles S. Wilson, Richard Birmingham, George Howe and Harry Shannon. Their scores were as follows: Cullen (three games) 204, 208, 240; Taylor (four games), 199, 199, 220, 224; Wilson (two games), 198, 199; Connors (four games), 190, 210, 231, 233; Moynihan (one game), 214; Wilson (one game), 202; Birmingham (one game), 212; Howe (one game), 236, and H. Shannon (one game), 235.

Sterling silver, ruby-studded regulation die medals will be awarded the second men and bronze regulation medals to the third. Six classes will be contested, being at 108 pounds and under, 115 pounds and under, 125 pounds and under, 135 pounds and under and 158 pounds and under. This being a championship event, no overweight will be allowed, as the rules do not permit it.

Query—Will you tell a reader if the pews in the old Plymouth church were ever supplied with doors?—L. W.

Answer—It is claimed that there never were doors to the pews in the Plymouth church and the woodwork does not show signs of puncturing such as hinges would leave.

Sporting Editor:

Query—What is the meaning of "Increment Tax?"—L. A. T.

Answer—The term "Increment Tax" means that special value attaching directly to land by reason of its location and due solely to the increase of population, which value is to be termed by a mathematical comparison with all other surrounding land. The value of land advances not alone by the increase of population but by the standard of living of the population and the development of its resources. The vast power of Niagara Falls was wasted until some man (not the community) conceived the idea of harnessing it, developing the electric power, and using that power for the increased efficiency of production; individual thought and effort made that value available in exactly the same manner as land acquires value in a new community.

Answer—The Sullican Law was amended to permit householders to keep pistols in their houses for protection against burglars but everyone applying for a permit must appear before one of the police court judges with testimonials of good character in order to get it.

WILL LIMIT ATTENDANCE.

When the North Plainfield and Plainfield High School basketball teams meet to decide that interscholastic championship on the Y. M. C. A. court in a couple of days there will have to be some limit put on the number who are allowed to pass through the turnstiles before game time. The Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, including standing room and gallery, will accommodate 200 persons in a pinch and how the 400 who attended that second game in Saengerbund Hall last Thursday afternoon will get in to get a peep at the all-important affair is a mystery which will have to be solved before game time. It is safe to say, however, that the box office window will be slammed down after 200 admissions have been gathered and the old adage of "First come, first served" will prevail. Spectators will no doubt begin to gather a couple of long hours before the whistle blows and the managers of the contesting teams will have their hands full handling the crowd. In view of the fact that the second game drew some 400 spectators it may be concluded that double that number will clamor for admission on this occasion.

BASEBALL GETS A SET-BACK.

Since that Interscholastic Basketball League came into its own those two High School baseball captains have taken to cover. Haven't heard anything of either Smalley or Rosenson and don't expect to until after Thursday. We can account for Rosenson's lay-off by taking into consideration the fact that he is a member of the P. H. S. basketball quintet, but what has become of Smalley is a mystery. However, we admire their generosity in ducking out of the spotlight and giving the basketball deal full sway for the time being.

Despite the fact that the Yankees have flown South and Jack Martin is summering at Asbury Park, baseball news is as yet indiesgtible at breakfast time and we confine our reading to hockey and basketball exclusively. Even bowling is having a hard time to get on the sporting pages and interscholastic baseball is hidden in the remodest corners.

A POPULAR PASTIME.

A quartet of athletic coaches representing some of the biggest colleges in the country are occupying their time during the winter months angling for the services of Jimmy Nash and before next September blows around we expect to see our popular little star safely encased within the walls of some big institution where athletics come first, followed by studies. Nash is one of the best all around performers ever turned out of a local school and we have to hand it to Coach Wardlaw, of Leal's, for snatching him out of the Plainfield High School's grasp at the opportune moment of his career.

A FREAK MASCOT.

Many unusual mascots are employed by fighters but perhaps none has a more unusual one that Bob Fitzsimmons. When "Ruby Robert" goes into the roped arena he has a kangaroo's foot attached to his belt which means more to him than his famous punches and the boxing world well knows how the ex-champ can slug. Bob would refuse to enter the ring without his precious talisman and he always tucks it into his silk scarf with which he girds himself before going into battle. Before moving to Dunellen, Fitz always kept a big brown bear which he took walks with and ran also while in training for a scrap.

ADVICE TO THE WINDLORN.

Startling news item—"Coach Collier should be strict with his charges. A man cannot dance all day and then play a game of basketball the next day. Last Wednesday the Plainfield High School five went to bed early, while one of the borough players was down town at 1 a. m. and displayed no intention of going home." The shameful stay-out all-night. Where were you, Paul, when this awful thing happened and who is the scribe who saw to it that those Plainfield High School athletes were tucked away in their little beds with the chickens? Who was that brave lad who dared to show his face on the streets of the borough after the midnight hour? Think of a basketball player, or any other kind of a player running loose in Canada at that unearthly hour! I'm surprised and we'll have to give him the "once over" the next time we meet him after dark in North Plainfield.

In this case, however, Abraitis happened to be the bad little youth who breathed the midnight air of Canada. We have a faint recollection concerning that game last week, however, and if our memory serves us right little "Abole" was a shining light for those boroughites. It might be well for this scribe to breathe a little of the darkened atmosphere and pen his lines in a corner far remote from such distractions as basketball players prowling around in the wee small hours of the morning in quest of fresh air.

Old King Snow ruled the athletic program Saturday night. There's one consolation, however, and that comes in the fact that Plainfield and North Plainfield will not have to take trains via Elizabethport to reach the Y. M. C. A.

Bill Donovan comes across with the information that baseball players wire offers to themselves. Think of a veteran like Bill dispensing such stale information as this when even the office boy suspected as much.

Charlie Ebbets is credited with having made the remark that "The Federal League is in its infancy." The Federal Leaguers are apparently furnishing him with evidence of growth in the national pastime and it is a well known fact that Charlie is noted regarding the advance of the lusty infantile prodigy from the "cradle stage" to that of being a "big boy" with any particular enjoyment.

Rumor has it that those Leal School athletes are rehearsing a set of yells for that interscholastic match between the two High Schools. What better disposition could they make of their knowledge of basketball?

Hereafter Princeton football players will be barred by the college athletic board for violation of a rule which prohibits them from writing "expert accounts" of gridiron games for the newspapers. This is in line with the movement to stamp out all evidences of professionalism.

Why not a skiing contest while we have the white coating?

RUFUS C. FINCH RETURNS FROM SOUTHERN HUNTS

Rufus C. Finch, M. F. H., of the Watchung Hunt Club returned yesterday from "The Plains," Virginia, where he attended a joint meeting of three hunts, which proved a great success. While away he visited Piedmont and was a guest at Berlin Hall where he was able to secure many excellent suggestions for the local hunt club. Previous to the southern trip, Mr. Finch attended a meet held by the Rose Tree Hunt Club, of Pennsylvania; also one at Westchester, Pa., when the masters entertained the farmers at their clubhouse. There were speeches by the farmers and a general goo! time.

The Watchung Hunt Club will hold another social session on Saturday afternoon and evening, February 28. There will be a buffet luncheon and music will be provided for the members and friends both afternoon and evening. These affairs are intended to keep up the interest of the members during the off-hunting season.

SOME FEMININE RECORDS.

Berkeley, Cal., Feb. 16.—In the first women's field meet ever held at the University of California two records were established by representatives of the sophomore class on the Hearst Hall open court field. Miss Frances Jackling broke the former records for the eight-pound shot-put and the basketball throw for distance. Her marks were, respectively, 34 feet 1¼ inches and 82 feet 8 inches. The previous shot-put record was 33 feet 1 inch, made at Bryn Mawr College by Miss M. Young. Her mark for the basketball throw of 82 feet 8 inches was nearly five feet greater than the former record made by a Vassar girl.

WEATHER CONDITIONS DISRUPTED PROGRAMS

Many Athletic Events Called Off Saturday Night Because of Snow.

As the result of the snow many athletic contests were either postponed or cancelled here Saturday afternoon and evening, basketball and hockey programs being most seriously effected. The good ice of the middle part of last week inspired the hockey managers to get busy on a week-end schedule and as a result many minor contests were arranged for Saturday morning and afternoon but the sudden covering of snow put the kibosh on ice hockey for the time being at least. The Cedarcroft seven was carded to met its old rival, the Cranford Canoe Club team at the latter place and this was looked upon by both teams as the all important contest of the season. Inasmuch as the Cranfordites got away with the first contest by a score of 1 to 0 the Plainfielders were anxious to get another whack at the up-State clan and the snow was an unwelcome visitor coming the time it did.

Many basketball programs were shattered both in this city and in the suburbs and as a result there were mighty few attractions in this burg Saturday night. For the first time this season the Y. M. C. A. court was deserted as far as real basketball is concerned. Saturday night, the only contest being played between a pair of scrub teams to a full house of chairs. There was no game scheduled for the first team but the Plainfield High School performers expected to entertain the Somerville school boys on the local court but Somerville was snow-bound and the latter team cancelled the engagement.

Scotch Plains players were to have taken a trip to Elizabethport but the Bank Clerks' team of that place saw fit to push the issue ahead several weeks in order to assure an audience and the 'Plainers stayed at home. Cranford failed to reach North Plainfield and as a result there was no High School game at Saengerbund Hall Saturday afternoon.

This week promises to be an all-star one as far as basketball is concerned and the players will make up for the time they lost the latter part of last week by working overtime during the coming four or five days. The all important interscholastic title scrap comes this week and Leal School is playing Westfield at the latter place this afternoon.

The High Street Cadets, of Bloomfield, which were scheduled to play Hope Chapel in the Fourth street gym, were halted at the Broad street station in Newark and telephoned to the local manager just before game time that they would not be on hand at the appointed hour. The Netherwood A. C. quintet, which was scheduled to meet the Hope seconds, also failed to put in appearance. Busy Izzy is said to be the party responsible for the latter break.

LOCAL BOYS WILL ENTER PENN MEET

Relay Races Will Attract Local Interest for the First Time in Many Years.

For the first in a number of years there will be local interest in the annual relay races to be held under the auspices of the University of Pennsylvania Athletic Association next April, three local athletes having signified their intention of entering the biggest set of collegiate games of the year. James Nash, now a member of Temple University, will take part in the sprints and the shot put; Ralph Runyon, of the Plainfield High School track team, will enter the interscholastic pole vault in class eight, and Morris Mann will compete in the running broad jump, in the same class and under the same colors as Runyon.

Nash is planning to accompany the University of Pennsylvania team to Georgetown University next week and will compete under the colors of the Pennsylvania college track team in the sprints. He has been training with the Penn athletes and is being taken to Georgetown under the charge of the university trainer.

LOCAL SHARPSHOOTER OUT FOR CHAMPIONSHIP HONORS

Among the sharpshooters who are tuning up for the three indoor trapshooting tournaments, which will be held in Madison Square Garden in connection with the Sportsmen's Show next week, is Neaf Apgar, of this city, and the local expert expects to capture some of the championship honors that will be decided at that time. Other cracks who are training for the event are W. B. Darton, last year's champion; Jack Fanning, Tom Davis, H. S. Wells, Hant Stevens, Tom Kellar and J. A. R. Elliot.

With all of the old attractions intact and numerous new features added this perennial exhibition of the world of sport and wilderness will be opened to the public next Saturday afternoon and will remain at the Garden until the following Friday evening.

AWARDED THREE PRIZES.

"Tip Toes," a toy poodle, owned by Mrs. Fred S. Moore, of this city, was awarded three prizes by the judges at the second annual dog show held on Saturday, by the Newark Kennel Club of New Jersey. The Plainfield dog received first prize in the limited class, second prize in the open class competition and was awarded a prize in the reserved winner class. The dog already has 13 of 15 points for the championship of his class.

MANY OFFERS FOR PLAINFIELD BOY

MAY ENTER OBERLIN

Tempting Bait Offered by Numerous Institutions of Learning In Different Sections—Will Probably Remain at Temple Until Next Fall.

Plainfield's premier athletic product, James Nash, of West Front street, has suddenly become the target for sportmen and coaches in every section of the country and during the past month "Goat" has been the recipient of tempting offers from a score of different colleges, universities and athletic clubs throughout the United States. Although of an unassuming and almost retiring character, Nash has become known about the universe because of his remarkable athletic prowess and before September rolls around it is a safe bet that he will be incased within the walls of one of America's "Big Four."

Several weeks ago Nash was handed some tempting bait by the coach of Syracuse University and for a time thought seriously of casting his lot in that direction. The athletic work of that institution ranks on a high basis and the Queen City youth had almost made up his mind to enter the university when the subject matter was brought up and it was found that he could not get the educational course he was after at that particular institution.

He accordingly turned down that morsel and since his refusal he has received offers from Columbia, Harvard, Oberlin and various other minor educational institutions throughout the country. James J. Nash, of West Front street, the young athlete's father, has also been communicated with by various authorities who are trying to influence him to send the prodigy to one college or another. Included in the offers was a four page document from Dr. C. W. Savidge, of Oberlin University, and it now seems probable that Jim will cast his lot with the Ohio college and enter it next fall as a student in the sophomore class. The Harvard and Columbia offers are also being taken into consideration and he will probably not arrive at a definite decision before the fall term rolls around.

Oberlin offers the physical director's course which he is after and also ranks high with Western colleges in athletic endeavor of every kind. At present the Plainfield athlete is studying in Temple University, in Philadelphia, and while he is satisfied with the college and the courses it offers he has been prompted by numerous offers to seek a larger field of work. Besides being a leader in athletic competition while only a freshman Nash is getting along remarkably well along educational lines at Temple and is one of the honor men in the institution in several branches of study. Since entering the Sleeptown university he has taken an active part in field and track athletics as well as indoor pastimes and his injured leg has completely rounded into form once more. During the fall and spring months he is gathering pointers from Connie Mack and is a candidate for the backstop berth on the Temple baseball team this spring. He was out of football due to his injury but played guard on the basketball team this season.

TRINITY BALL NINE MAY ENTER LEAGUE

Churchboys Plan Diamond Organization for the Coming Season of Work.

Definite steps were completed yesterday afternoon for the organization of an athletic association to be conducted under the auspices of the Trinity Reformed church during the coming summer months and the following officers were elected to act during the initial year of work: President, Clarence Rittenhouse; vice president, Chauncey F. Colthar; secretary, Frederick M. Smith; treasurer, Charles Harvey. A committee to draw up a set of by-laws and constitution was appointed with the following members: Frederick E. Smith, chairman; Dr. John Y. Broek, Clarence Rittenhouse, Chauncey F. Colthar, Charles Harvey and Elmer French.

Plans were discussed for the organization of a baseball team for the coming season and Charles Harvey was elected to captain the nine and James A. Thompson handle the managerial reins. While no definite action has as yet been taken it is understood that the Trinity boys will make application for a franchise in the Sunday-school League during the coming season.

SPRINGFIELD GYM WILL APPEAR HERE

A Treat Promised for Lovers of Gymnastics Here Next Month.

Those interested in Y. M. C. A. work and others who relish a good program of gymnastic drills will be treated to an elaborate menu in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, Saturday night, March 14, when a squad of embryo instructors from the Springfield Y. M. C. A. training school will be the guests of the local association authorities and give an exhibition such as was staged here two years ago with such marked success. On the previous appearance of these gymnasts, Charles H. Line, of this city, was manager of the team and also took a prominent part in the program presented.

The exhibition to be given by the Springfield College athletes here will be similar to the one presented in the Newark Y. M. C. A., Saturday night, when a gymnasium full of spectators were treated to an excellent clean-cut demonstration of difficult moves and graceful turns. Their stunts comprise work on heavy apparatus and gymnastic work, Hungarian csardas, pyrotechnic club swinging and fancy wand drills.

Especially prominent on the program will be the building of several human parallel bar pyramids. A piano accompanist from the college will assist the team in its work.

WILL PLAY RETURN.

The local Y. M. H. A. basketball players will lineup against the New Brunswick Y. M. H. A. outfit in Saengerbund Hall next Thursday night, this being a return contest for the one Plainfield played in Brunswick during the early part of the season. The first game was won by Plainfield by a margin of one point and the visitors are coming here with their best lineup to get away with the second encounter.

ELIZABETH "POISON PEN" TRIAL SET FOR MARCH 4

Elizabeth, Feb. 16.—The trial of Mrs. Anna J. Pollard for mailing alleged slanderous letters to Mrs. Chas. F. Jones, wife of a local dentist, was set definitely Friday afternoon for March 4. Assistant Prosecutor Martin P. O'Connor and Judge James C. Connolly agreed on the date.

Mrs. Pollard is understood to have been indicted by the January grand jury. There had been rumors from time to time that she would not be brought to trial. The trial, if it takes place, will be the culmination of various incidents connected with the "poison pen" case, which led to Mrs. Pollard's arrest, May 31, 1913.

The trial of Louis Kloepfer and James Cunningham for alleged Sunday liquor selling was fixed for tomorrow. Henry J. Greger, of Newark, charged with conducting a disorderly house here, will be tried February 24.

PLAN TO MAKE WESTFIELD "DRY"

Mass Meeting Called for Tonight to Discuss the Excise Question.

Westfield, like Plainfield, is having trouble over the excise question. This evening there is to be a public mass meeting in the Methodist church at that place to protest against what is termed "the liquor traffic's new plan in Westfield." This is the latest development of a movement started sometime ago to free the town entirely of the liquor traffic and make it one of the few "dry" towns of the State.

For a long time there has not been unanimity of feeling regarding the liquor traffic there. Though there has been no dissension regarding the manner in which the traffic has been regulated, a large proportion of the citizens have urged doing away with the traffic altogether. Agitation of this movement became active a few months ago when a transfer of license was asked for a hotel on the outskirts of the town from Mrs. Theresa Borchereirg to John J. Riley, Mr. Riley having purchased the business. Upon petition by a number of citizens, the Town Council refused to transfer this license, and notified the holder that it would not be renewed upon expiration. This left but three hotels remaining in the town.

The "liquor traffic's new plan," above referred to, is the transfer of the license of the City Hotel on Broad street to a new building to be erected at the corner of Prospect street and North avenue. Those protesting do not object to the abandoning of the Broad street hotel, but they do object strenuously to granting a license to the new building. Their object is to revoke the Broad street license, leaving but two bars open in the town, these two bars to be done away with at the first fitting opportunity.

What complicates the question is that the man who owns the Prospect street and North avenue property and who contemplates putting up the new building is Robert F. Hohenstein, a member of the Town Council. It is his contention that the new building will be a civic betterment, as it will remove an old ramshackle building in the centre of the town, which stands near the public library, schools and churches, and substituting therefore a modern hotel with cafe and restaurant in the business section of the town.

The protesting citizens are banded about a self-constituted committee of fifteen. These fifteen men are leading citizens of the town. Thy are W. A. Bishop, Salter Storrs Clark, J. F. Cowperthwaite, J. W. Davis, W. A. Dempsey, M. B. Dutcher, Walter M. Irving, C. D. Losee, Charles McDougall, E. S. Malmar, H. C. Nicholas, Leigh M. Pearsall, W. Edgar Reeve, J. F. Van Riper, L. G. Venn.

The committee has circulated a petition which has been signed by hundreds of residents, and which will be presented to the town Council at their meeting tonight. The leading clause in the petition reads:

"That the extension of the liquor traffic in Westfield, either by the increase of licenses or by the increase of investment in property to be used for the sale of liquor, be emphatically discouraged."

Another clause calls for "the rejection of applications for the transfer of licenses to new locations, and, in general, the enforcement of such ordinances as shall, while the traffic continues, tend to the further restriction of the liquor business."

INDOOR FESTIVAL A GREAT SUCCESS

Knights of Columbus Affair Closed Saturday Night in a Blaze of Glory.

One of the most successful social events ever held under the auspices of the Watchung Council Knights of Columbus, closed Saturday night, it being the end of a seven days' indoor carnival. During the week the large auditorium of the Columbus Club on West Front street was transformed into a haven of gayety and each night new features were added to attract capacity crowds that greeted the affair at each opening.

A neat sum was realized by the Columbus Club members through their efforts and this will be turned over to the club treasury for the maintenance of the handsome clubhouse on West Front street. The indoor carnival was the first event of this nature conducted in the new and adequately equipped structure and the facilities offered were excellent for a gathering of this nature.

Throughout the week during which the affair lasted dancing furnished the chief amusement for the younger set and each night a full orchestra supplied terpsichorean music for the dancers. Various booths were erected in the hall and prize bowling, billiard playing and other games furnished entertainment for the rest of the crowd. The two floors of the building were given over to the features arranged by the committee and all of the departments were well patronized.

The Middlesex county authorities have put the roads through South Plainfield in shape but the county authorities have not put the roads through Mt. Bethel and Stirling in shape and until that time the runs will be discontinued.

Every part of it is hand made from especially selected leather and is beautified with elaborate silver trimmings. The monogram, "F. E. W.," is arranged in a most attractive design made by a New York firm of silversmiths and is displayed at points of advantage. The set is considered a work of art, and Mr. McCann has received congratulations.

GRIFFIN MEASURE STRONGLY OPPOSED

Mandatory Bill is Not Favored in Many Union County Towns.

Opposition to the Griffin mandatory small freeholder board measure appears to be growing rapidly throughout Union county. Action against this bill has been taken by the Plainfield, Westfield, Rahway and Cranford boards of trade, by the governing bodies of Linden borough and Linden township, Roselle, Springfield and Fanwood township and borough.

The county towns are not opposed to the small Board of Freeholders in so far as the small board carries out the idea of concentrating the power of control in supervisors who shall give practically all of their time to the duties of thir offices. They are opposed to the mandatory bill, because they know from past experience that the big places like Elizabeth and Plainfield will get practically all the representation. They argue that if the Griffin bill must be adopted it should have both a referendum and a districting clause. It is not fair, they hold, to force the small board upon Union county, simply because in 1911 Union county voted to adopt the small board plan.

A point which has been brought out against the Griffin bill, and which no doubt will carry some weight when the arguments against its adoption are presented in Trenton is that it does not apply to all second class counties, and under its provisions only Union, Camden and Bergen will be affected.

It is claimed that, with the exception of Union, Bergen and Camden, no other counties of the second class in the State come under the population proviso in the bill. Mercer county voted, as did Union, Bergen, Morris and other second class counties, for the small board plan.

When the small board election was held in Union in 1912 six Democrats—J. Logan Fay, Dennis F. Hennessy, Thomas J. Pierson and Joseph F. Greer, all of Elizabeth, and James J. McCann and Thomas Hughes, of Plainfield, were chosen. Mr. Greer moved to Lyons Farms a short time before election, but his business was in Elizabeth and he was generally considered as an Elizabeth man along with the other five. The seventh member of the board was George C. Otoo, Republican, of Elizabeth.

The act that the selection of candidates must be made at a primary and that Elizabeth has never failed to land a majority of its candidates in a primary contest has been responsible for the county towns going on record against the Griffin bill. A districting clause, it is claimed, would give the little places some chance of representation. Under the present system every municipality has its representative on the Board of Freeholders who looks after the needs of his home town. Many of these freeholders have served for ten and fifteen years and a few have served nearly two score.

SUSSEX AUTO CLUB MAY DEFEND MEMBERS IF SUED

Newton, Feb. 16.—How far the club will go to protect its members is the important question to be discussed Thursday evening by the Sussex County Automobile Club, which will hold its meeting here.

There are two membrs of the club who are threatened with litigation because of road accidents, and the club is to determine if it will establish a legal department to protect membrs who have accidents and run pedstrians down. Last summer in Sparta avenue, one of the members ran down a man alleged to be under the influence of liquor. Persons who saw the accident said that it was due to the man's negligence. Later the man died, but not, his physician says, from his injuries.

On a tour in Massachusetts last year another member ran into a farm wagon and demolished it. The owner has sued the autoist.

5,000 AT POET'S FUNERAL.

Stand In Snow to Pay Last Honors to Gerson Rosenzweig.

New York, Feb. 16.—Five thousand persons stood in the snowdrifts on Madison avenue at One Hundred and Sixteenth street to show their respect for the Jewish satirist and poet, Gerson Rosenzweig, whose funeral was held at his home, 1772 Madison avenue.

The funeral would have been held at the Educational alliance on East Broadway had not the streets been so nearly impassable. Probably 5,000 more who would have come to the funeral were deterred by the snow in Harlem.

Rabbi Masliansky, who preaches at the Educational alliance, conducted the services. There were several thousand present at the burial in Bayside cemetery.

London, Feb. 16.—Owing to the heavy seas the Cunard line steamship Carmania did not embark mails or fifty-one passengers at Queenstown, but proceeded to New York after a three hours' delay.

SCOPE OF "PEOPLE'S FORUM" OUTLINED

"Free Speech" to Be Subject of Dr. Thomas Hall's First Lecture Here.

When Dr. Thomas Hall makes his address on "Free Speech" before the "People's Forum" at the Washington School next Thursday evening, he will inaugurate a civic institution which has proved its worth in many cities and for which there is a special need in these days of far-reaching social and political problems.

When Abraham Lincoln made his first speech in New York it was before one of the most effective "People's Forum" that has ever been organized—Cooper Institute.

On February 9, 1860, Charles C. Nott in inviting Lincoln to speak wrote as follows: "Of the audience I should add that it is not that of an ordinary political meeting. These lectures have been contrived to call out our better, but busier citizens, who never attend political meetings. A large part of the audience will be ladies."

The Public Recreation Committee might have used this very language in inviting Dr. Hall, it is believed. The ideal of the "People's Forum" is educational, cultural, democratic. Among the friends and neighbors in Plainfield may be numbered those with special and technical knowledge of municipal government, taxation, minimum wage laws and similar topics. The interest in these meetings lies largely in the discussion through which all get the best thought of each. Dr. Hall's address will be upon "Free Speech," the keynote of the "People's Forum."

PERSONAL.

Miss Grace Wilcox, of Wachung avenue, who has been the guest of United States Senator and Mrs. James E. Martine, in Washington, will return home this week.

Mrs. Paul Symons, of East Third street, who has been ill for some time, shows little sign of improvement.

Stephen H. Voorhees, of Madison avenue, is in Porto Rico on a business trip.

Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, of Park avenue, who has been away from home for the past week or more, is expected to return this week.

Miss Helen Paul, of Newark, will give a bridge party on Friday afternoon in honor of Miss Margaret Leggett, of this city.

Judge and Mrs. William R. Codington, of Sandford avenue, who have been in the South, are expected to return home today.

WOMAN'S ASSOCIATION MEETING.

The Woman's Society of the Congregational church will hold its monthly meeting in the parish house tomorrow afternoon, when Mrs. F. St. John Fitch, president of the Federation of Women's Missionary Societies, will be the guest of honor and speak on the "Aims of the Federation." Miss Addie Eastman will also speak on "The Work of the Congregational Church In Turkey and Papal Lands."

THE STYLE IS THE MAN

The most charactertistic John Drew gesture—accompanied by the most charactertistic John Drew exclamation, "Fosh!" which means nothing—is the sharp, downward drive of two clinched fists that begin their plunge of impatience or despair from the left and right shoulders of their owner. With that movement Mr. Drew has expressed his utmost of amused or hopeless despair. But it is an odd fact that this extremely typical John Drew gesture has only once become a feature of any stage performance by John Drew, although he is often mistakenly thought of as always being himself whatever part he plays. In "The Tyranny of Tears" the gesture makes its first stage appearance, and then only for a second, and that is at the moment when Mr. Parbury again feels the hopeless tyranny exerted by his wife's tears.

BOY SCOUT NOTES

The next meeting of Troop 5 will be held Tuesday evening, February 24, at headquarters the chapel of the First Presbyterian church. The final rehearsal of the war drama, "The Raid On the Arsenal," will take place Febrauray 17. The official designation of the new Jewish Boy Scout Troop will be No 12, and Earl Victorson, of Dunellen has been appointed first assistant scoutmaster.

Under a ruling of national headquarters no scout can obtain badges or other equipment from the main offices in New York until his scoutmaster has been registered.

On Washington's Birthday, February 23, all the Boy Scouts in Plainfield will assemble at headquarters, the chapel of the First Presbyterian church, at 9 a. m., to compete in a courier contest for a prize offered by William M. Wherry. Scoutmasters or their assistants will receive their assignments for the day at that hour from the commissioner. Troops 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 have all been assigned for scout duty.

A meeting of all the scoutmasters and assistant scoutmasters in the city has been fixed for Sunday afternoon February 22, at 3 o'clock, at the residence of the commissioner, Allen E. Beals, 634 East Second street, at which time plans will be discussed for awarding the prize and for the distribution of the patrols for the courier contest on the following day. At the same time a "court of honor" will be organized so as to expedite the awarding of merit badges to those scouts who have won these honors. The officers of the local council are also invited to be present.

NEEDLEWORK

THREE DESIGNS FOR GUEST-TOWELS

If you are planning a trousseau, or for a bride, why not make a dozen of these dainty guest-towels such as these? Surely she can not have too many, and it is a pleasure to give something useful that is not too elaborate. If you are planning something for her linen shower, one such as is embroidered on fine linen would be sufficient. They are appropriate for almost any material, and colors can be omitted or changed with. For the bride use the finest grade linen towelling as it will [illegible] the most effect of the punch work on the heavier grades of this material.

Pattern 14629 includes transfers for stamping both ends of three towels. The butterflies may be worked in solid embroidery, combined with punch work or with dainty work in pink, blue or yellow. The wreath design may be done entirely in solid work, or eyelets may be used for the large flowers. The one-inch monogram or initial placed in the wreath [illegible] a personal note to the gift.

Hot iron transfer pattern [illegible] can be supplied to readers on receipt of price, 10 cents.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

7636

Among the new blouses one sees quite a number of colored ones. Delicate yellows, greens and rose colors in the cotton voiles, in the crepes and colored linen blouses, are being shown in the shops.

No. 7636 is an excellent design for voile or thin linen. There is a yoke extending across the shoulders into which the body of the blouse is gathered; the sleeve is slightly full, top and bottom, and may be long or three-quarters as preferred.

A very pretty blouse could be developed in pink voile after this design, with a row of white bone buttons down the front. The small, round collar and the narrow turned back cuffs, would be dainty in white batiste. A practical way of fastening on these bone buttons is to run a narrow piece of linen tape down the front of the blouse, bringing it through the buttons at regular distances on the right side.

This blouse may be made in size 36, with 3¼ yards of 36 inch material. The pattern is cut in 5 sizes: 34 to 42.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, measuring over the fullest part of the bust for dimensions.

It may be obtained by filling out the coupon and enclosing 15 cents in stamps or coin to the Pattern Department of this paper.

Woman's World

Artistic Triumph For Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney.

Of all the designs submitted for the memorial in honor of the heroes of the Titanic wreck, that of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney was adjudged the best and she was given the commission. Mrs. Whitney will now proceed with the work of preparing the statue. It is anticipated that it will be erected in Potomac park, Washington. Congress is expected to set aside a plot of ground there on which it may be put up.

The sketch, which was submitted in an invitation competition with seven other sculptors, shows the heroic figure of a man standing, with arms outstretched and head thrown back, as though eager for sacrifice. "Sacrifice" is, in fact, the title that Mrs. Whitney gave to the figure. From a distance the figure takes the form of a cross.

The sum of $45,000 has been secured through the efforts of the woman's Titanic memorial committee, which includes hundreds of women prominent throughout the country.

Mrs. Whitney, who was Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, began her art work very modestly, and at first never exhibited it under her name. Little by little, as if encouraged by favorable criticisms, she became more and more ambitious, entered public competitions and won prizes at exhibitions.

Last spring in Paris a marble fountain of hers received the honor of a special installation in the salon. In the design three more than life sized men held up the broad bowl from which the water gushed, and in addition to the real water there were palms and a grass inclosure to add to the parklike effect. This fountain was for a courtyard in a Washington building.

In the Architectural league exhibition of 1908 Mrs. Whitney, in association with Grosvenor Atterbury, architect, and Hugo Ballin, painter, won the special prize for a work combining the three arts. Mrs. Whitney's contribution to the design was a fountain.

Another piece of work of Mrs. Whitney familiar to New Yorkers is the great sculptural figures in the Hotel Belmont, the caryatids that support the ceiling in the entrance hall.

She is also associated prominently in the group that is designing the sculptural embellishments for the San Francisco fair. Her fountain, called "El Dorado," is to stand in the court of honor at the exposition.

Her studio on West Eighth street, New York, near the Macdougal alley studios, is being enlarged and improved in anticipation of her return to this country, supposedly about April 1. She and Mr. Whitney are now abroad.

Some Cookery Suggestions

NOVEL WAYS WITH TRIPE.

BREAKFAST MENU.
Grapefruit.
Oatmeal With Milk.
Fried Tripe.
Griddlecakes.
Sirup.
Coffee.

SOME excellent and unusual ways of cooking tripe are among the following recipes:

Covered With Batter.

Fried Tripe.—Make a batter by sifting two tablespoonfuls of flour into a bowl; add one well beaten egg, two finely chopped onions, half a pint of milk and a seasoning of salt and pepper. Select thin tripe and cut it into small strips. Dip each piece into the batter and fry it for seven minutes in plenty of smoking hot fat. Serve very hot with melted butter, made piquant by the addition of mustard.

Lyonnaise Tripe.—For cooking tripe lyonnaise cut it into fine strips about an inch in length. Put into a saucepan three tablespoonfuls of olive oil, and when hot add two tablespoonfuls of onions cut into thin slices. Cook to a delicate golden color. Add the tripe, cook slowly for fifteen minutes and season with salt, pepper, a dash of cayenne, a tablespoonful of parsley and a tablespoonful of tomato sauce. Serve with grated cheese.

Rolled and Baked.

Baked Tripe.—Four ounces of white breadcrumbs, one ounce of chopped suet, one teaspoonful of chopped parsley, half a teaspoonful of sweet herbs, salt, pepper and one well beaten egg. Mix the above ingredients, adding a little milk if necessary to hold them together. Spread this on one pound of tripe and form it into a roll, which must be secured by one or two pieces of tripe. Place the tripe in a baking pan with a good supply of dripping and bake it for half an hour, basting it frequently.

Curried Tripe.—Slice two large onions and fry them a light brown in two tablespoonfuls of dripping. Stir into the pan one teaspoonful of curry powder, one tablespoonful of flour and three-quarters of a pint of stock. Cook slowly for a quarter of an hour, then strain. Return it to the saucepan and add two pounds of the tripe, cut into small pieces. Season with salt to taste and stew slowly for one hour, then add one teaspoonful of lemon juice. Serve hot with a dish of plain boiled rice.

FOR THE COOK.

Two Dainty Ways of Serving Well Known Foods.

A delicious prune pudding can be made in the following way: Get the large California prunes; soak them overnight; in the morning cook them in very little water for about five minutes so that they can be stoned easily.

Chop one cupful of suet very fine, add a cupful of molasses, a teaspoonful of mixed spice, one of salt, a cupful of milk and three and a half cupfuls of flour, into which has been sifted one teaspoonful of baking soda. Cut the prunes in small pieces and pour all together, transferring the ingredients into a buttered mold, filling it about three-quarters full. Set in a pot of boiling water and let it boil uninterruptedly for four hours. Whatever is left of the pudding can be served again if cut in slices and fried brown in butter.

Veal cutlets when properly broiled are very much better than when fried in the usual manner. Season well two pounds of the meat and half an hour before serving broil quickly and thoroughly. A pan with a tightly fitted cover should be in readiness in the oven, into which a cupful of hot water and a piece of butter about the size of an egg should be poured. Lay the cutlets in this and cover up closely so that they will remain very hot until carried to the table.

The Way to Launder Curtains.

When doing up fine curtains the weight alone of the heavy work often tears the curtain.

To avoid this take cheesecloth that has been shrunk or old sheets sewed together, on which carefully baste the curtains.

After shaking out the dust soak in cold water. Put in suds and boil. Gently lift up and down in the water.

Rinse in several waters, the last slightly blued for white curtains or stained with coffee for ecru.

Put through the wringer; never wring by hand. Set up the stretcher and after doubling your curtain to find the center commence to pin on from center to outside.

Keep the curtains constantly wet while pinning on or they may tear. Four curtains may be pinned on at once, so keeping all pairs precisely the same size and shape for bay or double window.

A little starch may be added to the last rinsing water if desired.

—It is wiser to know what a thing ought to cost before buying it; and ad-readers usually do know this.

THE GIRL WHO SUCCEEDS.

She Is the One Who Puts Heart and Conscience Into Her Work.

To be a success in business a girl must be willing. An employer can always tell when his workers have his interests at heart. The business girl may think that the strict attention she pays to the business at hand goes unnoticed, but it never does. Every business man can tell which of his employees arrives the earliest and leaves the latest. He knows which one does the best work and which one is the most diligent.

The girl who must support herself should learn at the very start not to go into business with the idea of doing the least amount of work possible for her salary, but with the determination to do the work allotted to her thoroughly, no matter how long it takes, and to be always ready for more. This is the spirit which wins out in the end.

Another little word on this subject. The more a girl dislikes her line of work the more conscientious she should be about doing it thoroughly.

It is easy to do work well and to give overtime to it when the work is congenial and enjoyable, but when a girl longs to shirk at her business and finds it unpleasant, that is just the time when she needs to buckle down to real labor. The mere exertion of forcing herself to accomplish her duties well and thoroughly will eventually make the work more interesting and therefore more pleasant.

—Something unusual for the table is always a welcome treat to the home folks. The ad-reading women does not find the problem hard.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Open Window.

MAGEE stood up, and in the light of the fire met Hayden. Now he saw that the face of the latest comer was scheming and weak and that under a small blond mustache a very cruel mouth sought to hide. The stranger gazed at Magee with an annoyance plainly marked.

"A friend of mine—Mr.—er—Downs, Mr. Magee, muttered Bland.

"Oh, come now," smiled Magee. "Let's tell our real names. I heard you greeting your friend a minute ago. How are you, Mr. Hayden?"

He held out his hand. Hayden looked him angrily in the eyes.

"Who the devil are you?" he asked.

"Do you mean," said Magee, "that you didn't catch the name. It's Magee—William Hallowell Magee. I hold a record hereabouts, Mr. Hayden. I spent nearly an hour at Baldpate inn—alone. You see, I was the first of our amiable little party to arrive. Let me make you welcome. Are you staying to dinner? You must."

"I'm not," growled Hayden.

"Don't believe him, Mr. Magee," sneered the mayor, "he doesn't always say what he means. He's going to stay, all right."

"Yes, you'd better, Mr. Hayden," advised Bland.

"Huh—delighted, I'm sure," snapped Hayden.

"Peters," said Magee, "an extra plate at dinner, please. I must leave you for a moment, gentlemen." He saw that their eyes followed him eagerly—full of suspicion, menacing.

"Murder—that is hardly in your line."

Hayden slipped quickly between Magee and the stairs. The latter faced him smilingly, reflecting as he did so that he could love this man but little.

"Who are you?" said Hayden again. "What is your business here?"

Magee laughed outright and turned to the other men.

"How unfortunate," he said, "this gentleman does not know the manners and customs of Baldpate in winter. Those are questions, Mr. Hayden, that we are never impolite enough to ask of one another up here."

He ran upstairs and passed through No. 7 out upon the balcony. Trudging through the snow, he soon sighted the room of Professor Bolton. And as he did so a little shiver that was not due to atmospheric conditions ran down his spine, for one of the professor's windows stood wide open, bidding a welcome to the mountain storm. Peters had spoken the truth. Once more that tight little, right little package was within Mr. Magee's ken.

He stepped through the open window and closed it after him. By the table sat Professor Bolton, wrapped in coats and blankets, reading by the light of a solitary candle.

"Good evening, professor," said Magee easily. "Don't you find it rather cool with the window open?"

"Mr. Magee," replied the much wrapped gentleman, "I am that rather disturbing progressive—a fresh air devotee. I feel that God's good air was meant to be breathed, not barricaded from our bodies."

"Perhaps," suggested Magee, "I should have left the window open?"

The old man regarded him narrowly.

"I have no wish to be inhospitable," he replied. "But, if you please"—

"Certainly," answered Magee. He threw open the window. The professor held up his book.

"I was passing the time before dinner with my pleasant old companion, Montaigne. Mr. Magee, have you ever read his essay on liars?"

"Never," said Magee. "But I do not blame you for brushing up on it at the present time, professor. I have come to apologize. Yesterday morning I referred in a rather unpleasant way to a murder in the chemical laboratory at one of our universities. I said that the professor of chemistry was missing. This morning's paper, which I secured from Mr. Peters, informs me that he has been apprehended."

"You need not have troubled to tell me," said the old man. He smiled his bleak smile.

"I did you an injustice," went on Magee.

"Let us say no more of it," pleaded Professor Bolton.

Mr. Magee walked about the room. Warily the professor turned so that the other was at no instant at his back. He looked so helpless, so little, so ineffectual, that Mr. Magee abandoned his first idea of leaping upon him there in the silence.

"I suppose," he said, "your love of fresh air accounts for the strolls on the balcony at all hours of the night?"

The old man merely blinked at him.

"I mustn't stop," Magee continued. "I just wanted to make my apology—that's all. It was unjust of me. Murder—that is hardly in your line. By the way, were you by any chance in my room this morning, Professor Bolton?"

Silence.

"Pardon me," remarked the professor at last, "if I do not answer. In this very essay on—on liars, Montaigne has expressed it so well. 'And how much is a false spec it less sociable than silence?' I am a sociable man."

"Of course," smiled Magee. He stood looking down at the frail old scholar before him and consulted. Of what avail a scuffle there in this chill room?

He went out through the open window, and in another moment stood just outside Miss Norton's room. She put a startled head out at his knock.

"Oh, it's you," [illegible] "I can't invite you in. You might learn terrible secrets of the dressing table—mamma is bedecking herself for dinner. Has anything happened?"

"Throw something over your head, Juliet," smiled Magee. "The hackney is waiting for you."

She was at his side in a moment, and they walked briskly along the shadowy white floor.

"I know who has the money," said Magee softly. "Simply through a turn of luck I know. I realize that my protestations of what I am going to do have bored you. But it looks very much to me as if that package would be in your hands very soon."

She did not reply.

"And when I have got it and have given it to you—if I do," he continued, "what then?"

"Then," she answered, "I must go away—very quickly. And no one must know or they will try to stop me."

"And after that?"

"The deluge," she laughed without mirth.

Up above them the great trees of Baldpate mountain waved their black arms constantly as though sparring with the storm. At the foot of the buried roadway they could see the lamps of Upper Asquewan Falls; under those lamps presale citizens were hurrying home with the supper groceries through the night. And not one of those citizens was within miles of guessing that up on the balcony of Baldpate inn a young man had seized a young woman's hand and was saying wildly, "Beautiful girl—I love you."

Yet that was exactly what Billy Magee was doing. The girl had turned her face away.

"You've known me just two days," she said.

"If I can care this much in two days," he said, "think but that's old, isn't it? Some time soon I'm going to say to you, 'Whose girl are you?' and you're going to look up at me with a little heaven for two in your eyes and say, 'I'm Billy Magee's girl.' So before we go any further I must confess everything—I must tell you who this Billy Magee is—this man you're going to admit you belong to, my dear."

"You read the future glibly," she replied. "Are your prophecies true, I wonder?"

"Absolutely. Some time ago—on my soul, it was only yesterday!—I asked if you had read a certain novel called 'The Lost Limousine,' and you said you had and that it wasn't sincere. Well, I wrote it"—

"Oh!" cried the girl.

"Yes," said Magee, "and I've done others like it. Oh, yes, my muse has been a joyous, riche lady in a Worth gown; my ambition, a big red motor-car. I've been a 'scramble a cent, mister,' to ubadour beckoning from the bookstalls. I turned tired of that sort, and I decided to try the other kind—the real kind."

"Don't tell me," whispered the girl, "that you came up here to—to"—

"Yes," smiled Magee, "I came up here to forget forever the world's gidly melodrama."

The girl leaned limply against the side of Baldpate inn.

"Oh, the irony of it!" she cried.

"I know," he said, "it's ridiculous. I think all this is meant just for—temptation. I'll do the real stuff, so that when you say—as you certainly must some day—'I'm Billy Magee's girl,' you can say it proudly."

"I'm sure," she said softly, "that if I ever do say it—oh, no, I didn't say I would!"—for he had seized her hands quickly—"if I ever do say it—it will certainly be proudly. But now—you don't even know my name—my right one. You don't know what I do nor where I come from nor what I want with this disgusting bundle of money. I sort of feel, you know, that this is in the air at Baldpate even in the winter time. No sooner have the men come than they begin to talk of—love—to whatever girls they find here—on this very balcony—down there under the trees. And the girls listen, for—it's in the air, that's all. Then autumn comes, and everybody laughs and forgets. May not our autumn come—when I go away?"

"Never!" cried Magee. "This is no summer hotel affair to me. It's a real in winter and summer love, my dear, in spring and fall, and when you go away I'm going, too, about ten feet behind."

"Yes," she laughed, "they talk that way at Baldpate—the last weeks of summer. It's part of the game." They had come to the side of the hotel on which was the annex, and the girl stopped and pointed. "Look!" she whispered breathlessly.

In the window of the annex had appeared for a moment a flickering yellow light.

"I know," said Mr. Magee. "There's somebody in there. But that isn't important in comparison. This is no summer affair, dear. I love you, and when you go away I shall follow."

"And the book?"

"I have found better inspiration than Baldpate inn."

They walked along for a time in silence.

"You forget," said the girl, "you only know who has the money."

"I will get it," he answered confidently. "Something tells me I will. Until I do I am content to say no more."

"Goodby," said the girl. She stood in the window of her room, while a harsh voice called, "That you, dearie?" from inside. "And I may add," she smiled, "that in my profession a following is considered quite—desirable."

She disappeared, and Mr. Magee, after a few minutes in his room, descended again to the office. In the center of the room Elijah Quimby and Hayden stood face to face.

"What is it, Quimby?" asked Magee.

"I just ran up to see how things were going," Quimby replied, "and I find him here."

"Our latest guest," smiled Magee.

"I was just reminding Mr. Hayden," Quimby said, his teeth set, an angry light in his eyes, "that the last time we met he ordered me from his office. I told you, Mr. Magee, that the Suburban railway once promised to make use of my invention. Then Mr. Kendrick went away, and this man took charge. When I came around to the office again he laughed at me. When I came the second time he called me a loafer and ordered me out."

"Well?" asked Hayden.

"And now," Quimby went on, "I find you trespassing in a hotel left in my care—the tables are turned. I ought to show you the door. I ought to put you out."

"Try it," sneered Hayden.

"No," answered Quimby, "I ain't going to do it. Maybe it's because I've grown timid, brooding over my failure. And maybe it's because I know who's got the seventh key."

Hayden made no reply. No one stirred for a minute, and then Quimby moved away, and went out through the dining room door.

The seventh key! Mr. Magee thrilled at the mention of it. So Elijah Quimby knew the identity and the mission of the man who hid in the annex. Did any one else? Magee looked at the broad acreage of the mayor's face, at the ancient lemon of Max's, at Bland's, frightened and thoughtful, at Hayden's, concerned but smiling. Did any one else know? Ah, yes, of course. Down the stairs the professor of comparative literature felt his way to food.

"Is dinner ready?" he asked, peering about.

The candles flickered weakly as they fought the stronger shadows. Winter roared at the windows. Somewhere above a door crashed shut. Close to its final scene drew the drama at Baldpate inn. Mr. Magee knew it; he could not have told why. The others seemed to know it too. In silence they waited while the hermit scurried along his dim way preparing the meal. In silence they sat while Miss Norton and her mother descended. Once there was a little flurry of interest when Miss Thornhill and Hayden met at the foot of the stairs.

"Myra!" Hayden cried. "In heaven's name, what does this mean?"

"Unfortunately," said the girl, "I know—all it means."

And Hayden fell back into the shadows.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—A Party At the White House.

They Again Stood Before the President.

"THE other day," said daddy, "I was talking to an elderly lady whose father was Abraham Lincoln's greatest friend. You know, children, that there was a time when the country went back on Lincoln and the people didn't appreciate how much he really was doing for them."

"Oh, how dreadful," said Jack. "Didn't he have any friends?"

"Yes," said daddy, "he had one friend through all his dreadful time, and this friend was the father of this lady.

"But what I'm going to tell you about is a party that was given at the White House when Lincoln was president of the United States. This lady's father asked Lincoln if his daughter and a friend of hers could go to the party, which was to be a reception and to be given in the afternoon. Lincoln was delighted that the two little girls wanted to come to the reception, as he always liked children. Of course the lady was then only a very little girl about your age, Evelyn. So she and her friend spent days beforehand thinking and talking about the president's party. They could hardly wait until the day came, but at last it did come, and, dressed in their prettiest white dresses and best sashes, they started off for the White House with the little girl's father. Everybody went in line to speak to President Lincoln, and, following her father, the little girl and her friend went along in the line to speak to the president. When the little girl's father was before Lincoln he said, 'Mr. President, this is my little daughter, Katharine, and her friend, Mary.' President Lincoln shook hands with them both, and they glowed with pride as he said: 'How do you do, Katharine?' and 'How are you, Mary? I'm very glad to meet you both.'

"After Katharine's father had talked a few minutes with Lincoln they all moved on so the other people could meet the president. Katharine's father then told her to take Mary with her into another room, where they could have some delicious ice cream and cake. So they started, but before they had gone more than a few steps Katharine said, 'Let's go and shake hands with the president again, for he'll never recognize us a second time.' So they got in line at once, and soon they were again standing before the president.

"He smiled and said, 'I think I've had the pleasure of meeting you two nice little girls just a few minutes ago.'

"At first they were rather ashamed, and then as President Lincoln laughed they thought it was a good joke on them, and they were very proud that he had remembered them.

"And little Katharine, now quite old, says that is the proudest and happiest remembrance of her life."

Taking advantage of the good sleighing roads, a large number of students of the North Plainfield High School and their friends enjoyed an impromptu strawride last Saturday night. The party wound up at the home of Miss Lucy Douglas, of Grove street, where an indoor party took place. Dancing was enjoyed and many games were played. Lester Chandler and James Goodwin entertained their friends with an original one-act farce entitled, "The Professor." LITTLE TALKS BY THE WANT AD MAN

Copyright, 1913, The Int. Syndicate, Baltimore.

No. 60.

LET'S see now: What is a Want Ad? I'm not much on definitions, but how will this do: "An announcement of something desired or something for sale, printed in the Classified columns of a newspaper.

Not a very lengthy or involved definition, that. But doesn't it really define? Doesn't it about cover the object of all Want Ad. advertising.

That is all there is to Want Ad. advertising—an announcement of something desired or something for sale. I imagine I can hear you say "How about an ad. for a cook? How about if when I advertise the loss of an article, or when I advertise for typewriting to do at home?"

Well, when you insert an ad. for a cook, you want the services of a competent culinary attendant. Something desired. When you advertise the loss of an article, it is in the hope that the finder will see your ad. and restore the article. Something desired. When you advertise for typewriting work, you are offering your services. Something for sale.

There is no mystery about it. Advertising isn't hypnotism, or undue influence or black art. You write out what you want or what you have for sale—you put it in a good newspaper—the newspaper carries your message broadcast, into the homes and hearts of thousands of readers—some of those readers respond to your printed word—you sell or you acquire—and ADVERTISING has done its work.

Next time you want something or have something for sale, try a little Want Ad. The cost is trivial—the results more than worth while.

Announcing
The New Typewriter OLIVER No. 7

WE ANNOUNCE AN AMAZING MODEL—The OLIVER No. 7—a typewriter of superexcellence, with automatic devices and refinements that mark the zenith of typewriter progress. A marvel of beauty, speed and easy action. Typewriting efficiency raised to the nth power.

The OLIVER No. 7 embodies all previous Oliver innovations and new self-acting devices never before seen on any typewriter. A leap in advance which places The Oliver ten years ahead of its time. So smooth in action, so light to the touch, so easy to run, that experts are amazed. A model that means to the typist delightful ease of operation.

A model that means a higher standard of typewriting, longer and better service.

The No. 7 is now on exhibit and sale at all Oliver Branches and Agencies throughout the United States.

The new model has more improvements, refinements and new uses than we can even enumerate here.

The "cushioned keyboard" with "anchor keys" and the new automatic features mean less work for the hands, less strain on the eyes, less manual and mental effort.

With all of these masterly mechanical improvements we have made the machine more beautiful and symmetrical. From every standpoint The OLIVER No. 7 attains superlative excellence.

Nothing you could wish for has been omitted. The new devices, refinements, improvements and conveniences found on the No. 7 represent an enormous outlay and vastly increase its value—the price has not been advanced one penny. We shall even continue in force our popular 17-Cents-a-Day purchase plan, the same as on previous Oliver models.

The OLIVER No. 7, equipped with the famous Printype, if desired, without extra charge.

You owe it to yourself to see the new machine before you buy any typewriter at any price. Note its beauty, speed and easy action, its wonderful automatic devices. Try it on any work that is ever done on typewriters. Try it on many kinds of work that no other typewriter will do. It is a significant fact that the typewriter that introduced such epoch-making innovations as visible writing, visible reading, Printype, etc., should be the first to introduce automatic methods of operation.

MEYERBEER TOPIC AT WOMEN'S CLUB

HAD VARIED CAREER

Famous Composer Wrote Operas of German, Italian and French Schools During Long and Useful Career.

One of the most interesting papers that members of the art department of the Monday Afternoon Club have had the pleasure of listening to in some time was heard yesterday afternoon at Hartridge Auditorium, when Miss Elsie Suffern, of 163 Sycamore avenue, North Plainfield, addressed the club on the subject of "Meyerbeer and Melodramatic Opera." The paper, showing as it did infinite care and the most careful and painstaking research, was loudly applauded.

"Born of wealthy parents, the greatest gift that little Jacob Beer received," said Miss Suffern, "was the heritage of music. Other qualities which he inherited gave him aspirations, high ideals, persistency and the ability which brought him finally to be known as one of the greatest composers of his age.

"Herz Beer, the father, a Jewish banker, was a man of fine culture. His house was a meeting ground for poets, composers, artists and scientists. His wife, Amalie Wulf, was the daughter of the so-called Croesus of Berlin. She was beautiful, gentle and gracious. Heinrich Heine said of her, 'Not a day passes without her helping some poor soul. Verily, it seems as if she could not go to bed unless she had first done some noble deed. So she lavishes her gifts on people of all denominations—Jews, Christians, Turks, and even on the wretchedest sorts of unbelievers.'

"Jakob was the oldest son. He was born September 5, 1791, and was called Jakob Liebmann. Later on account of a legacy left by a relative named Meyer, he substituted that name for Liebmann and ultimately united the two names, taking the Italian form of Jakob, thus making the final form of his name the one by which we know him, Giacomo Meyerbeer.

"As a child, Jakob early showed signs of the greatest fairy gift. He could catch any tune and try to play it again on the piano, making up, instinctively, an accompaniment with his left hand. When he was four, he organized a little band of playmates with drums, fifes and cymbals. People were amazed to see how cleverly he conducted from a sheet of paper on which he had scratched an imaginary score. His parents were delighted and when he was five they intrusted him to the well known Bohemian teacher and composer, Franz Lauska, under whom he made astonishing progress.

"When he was seven he made his first appearance in public, playing Mozart's D Minor Concerto with great success. Two years later he was accounted the finest pianist in Berlin. His relatives were justly proud of him.

"At this time a resident tutor taught the boy French, Italian and Latin, but this still left him time to devote seven or eight hours a day to piano practice. It is to the credit of the Beers' that they not only recognized their son's especial bent but, at a time when music was regarded by the wealthier classes as a mere pastime, they gave him a sound professional training. It is as a pianist that he was expected to win his laurels. The papers of the day printed poems in his honor, and the Abbe Vogler, who heard him play in 1801, was amazed, and predicted that the young artist would become a great musician, a prophecy which had great weight in Berlin at this time.

"After having studied under several other teachers, Jakob was transferred to the care of Bernard Anselm Weber, the royal Kapellmeister, an excellent composer but an easy-going, negligent, teacher. Under him Meyerbeer composed a number of cantatas and other pieces for family festivals, but they are all lost. Weber was so much pleased with a fugue brought him one day by his pupil that he sent it to his own former master, the Abbe Vogler, at Darmstadt. For months the answer was eagerly looked for and at last it arrived in the shape of a huge packet. When opened, this proved to contain a long and exhaustive treatise on fugue in three sections. The first of these was theoretical, setting forth the whole duty of the fugue writer. The second, entitled Scholar' Fugue, contained Meyerbeer's unlucky exercise, criticised bar by bar, and pronounced bad. The third part, headed Master's Fugue, consisted of a fugue by Vogler on Meyerbeer's subject, analyzed like the preceding one, to show that it was good. The treatise was published after his death, but unfortunately critics discover that the so-called Master's Fugue is not so very far

DREIER CASE IS AGAIN IN COURT

Special Hearing Before Judge Connolly to Be Continued on March 19.

Elizabeth, Feb. 17.—Many Plainfield witnesses appeared before Judge James C. Connolly, at the special hearing of the Orphan's Court held here yesterday, in an effort to end the long drawn out litigation over the estate of the late Samuel Dreier, of Plainfield. The hearing was for the purpose of passing upon a score of objections raised by Mrs. Charles P. Senger, a daughter, to the accounting which her two brothers- and co, heirs, have already rendered. The brothers are Harry Drier, of Plainfield, and Garret Dreier, of New Brunswick. They were the trustees appointed under the will of their late father.

Testimony adduced at yesterday's hearing was, it is said, to the effect that the estate in litigation consists of improved real estate in Plainfield of the value of $125,000, with a total mortgage incumbrance of only $13,000. The accounting filed some time since by the trustees shows, it is said, that they have received from rents and other sources, the sum of $6,564.56. There is, it is said, only $38.38 remaining in the hands of the trustees at the present time. Computed on approximately $30,000, which is said to be the share of each direct heir of the estate, there would accrue to each, for the period of seventeen months covered by the accounting, only $7.68, or about 44 cents a month.

It was developed at the hearing yesterday, it is said, that it cost the heirs, over and above the amount of rental paid during seventeen months by Harry Dreier, to support the premises at Madison avenue and West Front street, a three-story brick building, $136.44. The rental paid by Harry Dreier for these premises is said to be $79 a month. The hearing will be continued on Thursday, March 19, when the defendants will offer testimony in rebuttal.

FATHER OF MRS. G. L. BABCOCK DEAD AT ALFRED, N. Y.

Charles Stillman, father of Mrs. George L. Babcock, of West Eighth street, died at his home in Alfred, N. Y., yesterday, in his sixty-third year, following an attack of pneumonia. He had many friends and acquaintances in Plainfield, having been prominently identified with the Seventh-Day Baptist Church. A sister, Dr. Martha R. Stillman, formerly practiced in this city, but shortly after moving to Bridgeport, Connecticut, died in that city. Besides Mrs. Babcock, the surviving members of the family are the widow and two daughters, Mrs. Paul E. Titsworth, of Alfred, and Mrs. Langford C. Whitford, of Albany.

POSTAL SUB-STATION.

Postmaster Elias H. Bird has been advised by the Washington authorities that he can open a branch post office in the pharmacy that is about to be opened by Mrs. Mary E. Mallinson, on East Second street, between Leland and Netherwood avenues. The new branch postoffice will, it is believed, be a much appreciated convenience to residents in the West End of the city. Mrs. Mallinson will be the postmistress. Her son, Lawrence A. Mallinson, will attend to the wants of customers of the drug store.

JOHN MEHL, AERONAUT.

The New York Sunday Evening Telegram, this week, contained a page account of the Gansevoort Business Men's Dinner, held in New York Saturday night. There were many interesting cartoons in illustration, one of which depicted John Mehl, of Hoboken, as "Flying Over from Jersey." Mr. Mehl is a former Plainfielder and brother to Captain George Mehl, of No. 3 Hose Company.

LEAVES FOR CALIFORNIA.

Owen Haulenbeck, of Somerset street, the borough, left yesterday afternoon for Los Angeles, Cal., where he has secured a responsible position with the Feerless Motor Car Company. Since the death of Frank Haulenbeck, Sr., his sons and daughters have been living in Los Angeles, except Special Marshal Frank Haulenbeck, of the borough, and a daughter, Mrs. W. MacConnell, of this city.

At an open meeting of the Plainfield Democratic Club to be held this evening, the subject of municipal ownership will be discussed.

"THE BRIGHT SIDE OF IMMIGRATION"

Former Chaplain of the Tombs Discusses Interesting Subject at Grace Church.

"Over a million foreigners come into this country every year as immigrants," declared the Rev. E. P. Tinker, of New York, yesterday, in an address on "The Bright Side of Immigration," which he made in the parish house of Grace church, before the members of the Young Women's Guild.

"Some six thousand immigrants a day are landed on the shores of America, one and all coming here with the idea of bettering themselves financially, and of securing that freedom from religious and political oppression which this country offers to the residents of foreign lands."

Mr. Tinker was chaplain of the City Prison, that grim, grey and sombre building known familiarly to newspaper readers as "The Tombs," in New York city, for five years. Of all the many prisoners who came under his notice he declared the best mannered and the nicest in every way were the Italians. As a class they rank high, he said, as music lovers; are kindly disposed towards strangers who treat them with kindness and consideration, and for the most part are very ardent in thir religious beliefs. Taking into consideration the temperamental nature of the Italians, Mr. Tinker said, the Roman Catholic religion fits them best. They are said to like its sonorous services, the swimming censer, the vestment of the priests and the musically intoned masses and other church offices.

Speaking of the brighter side of the immigration problem in the United States the speaker said that at times newly arrived immigrants have inquired as to whether America was in New York. "There are," said the speaker, "more real, full blooded Americans in New York than are to be found today in any other city in this country."

Forty years ago, he declared, the Irish were a much misunderstood people and that it was only within a comparatively recent length of time that the people of this country had come to realize the worth and staunchness of character of the Irish population. Among the Italian immigrants and prisoners that have come under the notice of Mr. Tinker the worst vice noticed was, he said, that of drunkenness. Few Hebrews, either those whose behaviour has been remarked by the clergyman when they first came to America as immigrants, or when through misfortune they fell within the clutches of the law and became inmates of the City Prison, in New York, are addicted to drink. As a rule, he said, but very few Hebrews in this country get drunk. They make excellent business men, fine types of citizens and as a rule, according to the speaker, make for the good of the community in which they live. In closing, the speaker, paid a high tribute to the Statue of Liberty which graces the entrance of New York harbor, pointing out the fact that it stood for progress, freedom and equality of mankind, its torch, held aloft to heaven typifying the light of understanding to the people of this and of all other lands.

STATION TO BE OPENED BEFORE DEPARTURE OF TRAINS

The residents of the Netherwood section and their friends will be glad to know that through the efforts of Robert A. Meeker, chairman of the railroad committee of the Netherwood Residents' Association, the New Jersey Central has kindly consented to allow the Netherwood station to be opened at night, before the time of departure of trains going east at 7.43, 9.32, 10.17 and 11.46 p. m., and, by the courtesy of Chief of Police Kiely, the police officer on duty at the Netherwood station has been instructed to unlock the door of the waiting room, thus affording the patrons of the road a warm shelter until the trains arrive.

CIVIC ASS'N CONCERT.

The West End Civic Association will give its first concert at the Washington School tonight, the program to be furnished by the widely-known Lotus Glee Club, of which Charles L. Lewis, of this city, is a member, and "Maurice," a comedy magician from New York. The association is making rapid strides these days in work of a progressive nature and tonight's concert promises to be one of the best events of the winter season in the city.

ONLY TWO PASS POLICE "EXAMS"

Twenty-four Applicants for Positions in Local Department Are Turned Down.

FAILED TO MEET TESTS

Mayor Percy H. Stewart and Police Board Are Puzzled Over the Results—Will Arrange for Another Examination.

The fact that but two of the twenty-six applicants for positions on the local police force passed the recent physical and mental examinations, was reported by Dr. Norman W. Currie, the city physician, to the Councilmanic police board last night, the other twenty-four being rejected because of their inability to meet the requirements. This remarkable fact was a cause of considerable surprise to the police board as well as Mayor Percy H. Stewart, and indicates a condition that has aroused the city officials.

Mayor Stewart in commenting on the fact today, remarked that when only two men out of twenty-six can be found fit to enter the service of the army, for that is really the test given here, it shows that something is radically wrong. "The city feels as though the men who take positions on the police force should meet the standard requirements," said Mr Stewart, "and citizens and taxpayers have a right to expect nothing less. This standard is not unusual. It is that of the New York police department, and is not considered too severe.

"Members of the force practically get a life position with good pay starting in at $75 a month and automatically increasing until the maximum wage of $1,200 a year is reached. And beside the men have the prospect of a pension after serving a certain number of years so that they have every inducement to seek such a position.

"We are anxious to increase the membership of the force and further examinations will be held just as soon as additional applications are received. Application blanks can be obtained either at my office or from Police Chief Kiely, and it is hoped that there will be a number of men seeking positions in the police department."

Applicants should not be less than five feet seven and a half inches in height, with a chest measure of 33½ inches and weigh not less than 138 pounds, and be between the ages of 21 and 30 years. The examinations call for good physical and mental condition and the police board believe that out of the available material in Plainfield it should be able to secure at least five or six additional men for the force.

FINE PROGRAM TO BE GIVEN AT SCOTS' CONCERT

Final arrangements have been made for the concert to be given at the Park Club on Friday evening, February 20, by Clan Mackenzie, No. 204, Order of Scottish Clans, of this city. The concert will, it is expected, attract of host of Plainfield men and women who the lovers of good music. No pains have been spared by the members of the organization under whose auspices it is to be given to make the affair unusually successful. There will be Scotch songs by men and women, dancers who will execute the famous Highland fling and other Scottish steps and the program is a long and a decidedly interesting one. Ten per cent. of the net profits of the concert will be given to the Anti-Tuberculosis League of this city.

ENJOYED A STRAWRIDE.

Members of the Sunday-school class of which Miss Stella Vermeule, of Grace M. E. church is teacher, enjoyed a sleighride last night to Westfield where they stopped for refreshments after which they drove back to their homes in this city. Those who enjoyed the ride, which was voted by all to have been a thoroughly enjoyable outing, were the Misses Stella Vermeule, Myra, Elva and Edith Lippincott, Lizzie Herman, Nellie Bond, Hattie Van Winkle, Fanny Buckley, Henrietta Buckley, Clara Bodenheimer, Esther Stebbins, Evelyn Nelson, Helen MacDonald, Myrtle Davis, Frances Avery, Gertrude Johns and Lester Johns.

PLANS COMPLETE FOR TRADE BOARD DINNER

About Two Hundred Expected to Attend Event on Thursday Night.

Seating arrangements for the Board of Trade dinner, which will be held in Columbus Hall on Thursday night, were completed at a meeting of the dinner committee held this afternoon, and except for caring for a few who have not procured their tickets as yet the plans are about perfected. It is expected that about two hundred will be present at the banquet, which will be the first held by the recently rejuvenated civic body, which has already taken such a prominent part in the civic life of the city.

The speakers will be Charles H. Sherrill, who was American minister to Argentine Republic, under President Taft; Rev. Christian H. Reisner, a well-known New York minister who has adopted modern methods of building up his church, and Congressman William E. Tuttle, Jr., who will come on from Washington to talk about postoffice legislation. Dr. William L. Saunders and Mayor Percy H. Stewart will also probably address the gathering. Charles A. Reed, corporation counsel of Plainfield, will act as toastmaster, and is said to have a lot of new stories to tell the diners.

An added feature will be in the music. Instead of having an orchestra, as is usually done at affairs of this kind, the committee has secured the services of the "Eureka Trio," colored entertainers, who play and sing all the popular music, and give what is virtually a cabaret performance while the dinner is in progress. These men have appeared at hundreds of social gatherings of all kinds, and have been a decided "hit" wherever they have been.

The arrangements at the Columbus Club for serving dinners are of the best, and all who attend are assured prompt attention, and a good dinner. The price of tickets is $3 and they can be procured from Herman Schwed, President William Jeffery, M. C. Van Arsdale, Leslie R. Fort, Milton Mendel, Thad. Doane, Jr., J. Henry Crane, Edward C. Hardingham, Samuel Rothberg, Henry Haurand and Edmund Rushmore.

Moke were heard on the piano.

Among the guests were: The Misses Ruth Martin, Ruth Johanson, Susie Sauermilch, Leila Leek, Ida Apgar, Florence McWade, Amplias Hodgets, Estelle Barry and Adelaide Barry, and the Messrs. Ivan Hill, William Sutton, Chester Smith, John Rhineheart, George Swackhamer, Samuel Harper, Wilbur Moke and Mr. Handsome.

AUTO ENGINE EN ROUTE.

In response to a telegram sent to the Knott Manufacturing Company, at Minneapolis, Minn., on Saturday, Chief T. O. Doane received word yesterday that Plainfield's new auto fire engine had been placed on the cars on Saturday morning for shipment to this city. The reply further stated that unless something unforeseen occurred, the machine would reach Plainfield in about two weeks. The chief said that he had made arrangements to have the car reported at various points along the way so that he might keep in touch with it.

HOSPITAL DANCE TONIGHT.

Those persons who expect to attend tonight's dance, which is to be held at Columbus Auditorium, under the auspices of the woman's auxiliary of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, are looking forward to a most enjoyable evening. There will be special decorations, a fine supper will be served during the evening, and McKee's orchestra from New York, will play for dancing.

SPANISH VILLAGE DESTROYED.

Madrid, Feb. 17.—Fire destroyed the village of Espinosa de los Cabelares, in the Province of Avila, last night and dispatches received here refer indefinitely to many dead and injured.

CHAPELITES WILL REHEARSE.

A rehearsal of the mock trial, to be given under the auspices of the Hope Chapel Young Men's Club next week, will be held in the Chapel rooms tonight.

RECITAL PLEASES LARGE AUDIENCE

Miss Henry, George C. Carre and Miss May Present a Fine Program.

An appreciative audience of music lovers attended the first recital held in the new Parish House of the Congregational church, last night, and enjoyed an excellent program of vocal and instrumetnal numbers given by Miss Mary Henry and George C. Carre, visiting artists. Miss Henry is a violinist from New York city, and is well known to local music lovers, having appeared at the Woman's Club and for several years past has been a leading feature on the commencement programs of the Plainfield Seminary.

Miss Henry is the possessor of a winsome personality and has together with the undeniable charm the exquisite playing of a real artist. Her Scottish selections were particularly well received and her imitation of bag-pipes was the object for several rounds of raptuous applause. A number of the selections she played last night were her own compositions and elicited much favorable comment during the evening of music.

Mr. Carre, a tenor soloist in the Tompkins Avenue church, of New York city, sang his solos with a clear high tone and he divided the applause evenly with Miss Henry. Mr. Carre was well received and all of his selections were subjects for encores.

As the result of the entertainment last night the fund for the purpose of furnishing the new parish house will be increased considerably as the affair was a decided sucess. The auditorium of the parish house was well filled and the comment on the artists' work was of the favorable variety. Miss May, of this city, and Miss Gano, of Long Branch, were the accompanists.

ADMITTED PICTURE GAME WAS CROOKED

City Judge W. G. DeMeza fined Wiliam Haulmen, of Philadelphia, $10 with the option of spending sixty days in the county pail this morning. Haulmen was charged with disorderly conduct while collecting premiums yesterday afternoon and was penitent in court. He admitted that the business in which he was engaged was little more han a "flim-flam" game.

Haulmen represented a picture concern, which sends men out to canvass for photographs to be reproduced in water colors and framed. The agent taking the order offers one contract to be signed and a "follow-up" man offers a revised one, reading entirely different from the original.

The pictures given by the unsuspecting to have reproduced are often prized highly and the owners are willing to go to extremes to get the originals back. The agents are instructed to get as much out of the patrons as possible before returning the original and Haulmen was operating this scheme when Mrs. Thomas Kane ,and Mrs. Kate Thomas, both of West Front street, became suspicious and notified the police. Detective-Sergeant Flynn arrested Haulmen this morning.

Judge DeMeza expresed his intention of stamping out this practise in Plainfield and declared that a more severe sentence would be handed out to the next offender.

CHANGES AT PRESS WORKS.

Plans are being made by the Hall Press Works to move its office to the power building. This is necessary, it is said, because of the increased business of the concern which necessitates additional office room. The change will probably be made on April 1. John Reynolds, time and cost clerk, has resigned his position. So has Raymond Kline, a stenographer, who goes with the purchasing department of the Ingersoll-Rand Company, in New York city.

TO APPEAR AT REFORMATORY.

The Oak Farm Dramatic Club will give an entertainment next Monday afternoon, February 23, at the Rahway Reformatory, under the direction of W. F. Richards. This will be the first appearance of the company outside of this vicinity.

FOUND DYING FROM EXPOSURE

REMOVED TO HOSPITAL

Heroic Treatment by Drs. C. B. Lufburrow and Albert Pittis Probably All That Saved Man's Life—Investigation By Chief Weiss.

Living alone, in a deserted house, in the vicinity of Greenbrook road and Jefferson avenue, in North Plainfield township, Peter Kestler, 55 years old, was found in a half frozen and starving condition late last night, by Dr. Charles B. Lufburrow and Dr. Albert Pittis. The man, whose condition was considered as very serious, his face being badly frozen and his body emaciated and shrunken from the intense cold and lack of sufficient food, was removed in a sleigh to Muhlenberg Hospital. There he was given heroic treatment including an ice bath, to restore his circulation, and was then fed and put to bed. It was said today that the hospital authorities had hopes of saving his life.

Tied to the bunk in which the nearly frozen man lay, the physicians found a dog, the animal whining and moaning from cold and hunger. Like his master, the dog, it was evident, had not been fed for days. The dog was untied by the physicians, and allowed to roam in search of food, when its master was removed to the hospital for treatment. There was no fire in the house, no food or fuel.

Discovery of the unfortunate plight of Peter Kestler was made yesterday through a telephone message which Dr. Charles B. Lufburrow received from some unknown person, requesting his attendance at the house located near Greenbrook road and Jefferson avenue. No details as to what the nature of the case might be were given, but the physician was asked to drive at once to the place and prescribe for an old man whom he would find there. Upon arrival at the house Dr. Lufburrow thought at first the dwelling was wholly deserted. Investigating, he heard the plaintive whining of a dog and going through the house finally came upon the man of whom he was in search. There was absolutely no furniture in the house, it is said, save the rude bunk and a very few pieces of tattered clothing which were heaped over the man's body in an effort for warmth.

Dr. Lufburrow notified Chief Marshal George Weiss, of North Plainfield, of the man's condition, but owing to the patient's extreme weakness which had caused him to relapse into a state of coma, the physician was unable to learn either his name, or the circumstances leading up to his pitiable condition. Chief Weiss at once got into communication with the poor authorities of Dunellen, in whose jurisdiction he believed the sick man to be. The case was one for the authorities of North Plainfield township to care for, Chief Marshal Weiss learned. Overseer of the Poor Theodore Lawson being ill, the head of the police department telephoned Dr. Albert Pittis, of West Front street, who cares for the poor of the township. He stated the case to him and the physician promised to conduct an immediate investigation. He did so, with the result that the sick man was removed to the hospital last midnight.

The hospital attendants succeeded today in learning the man's name, but further than saying that he had lived in the house where he was found alone for some time, no other information could be gained.

Through a misunderstanding of the facts in the case on the part of a reporter for the Daily Press, it was reported last night in this paper that Mrs. Hannah Linke, of West Front street, would be brought before City Judge DeMeza for violating the liquor laws, because of an alleged sale made from one of the Linke wagons. No charge whatsoever has been made against Mrs. Linke, and the city authorities have no intention of so doing. The charge is made against the driver of the wagon, an employe of Frank Linke, whom Archibald Reeves testifield sold him liquor from the wagon, in a case before the Judge yesterday morning. The Daily Press willingly corrects the misstatement made yesterday and regrets that the error was allowed to creep into its column.

CAR FLUNG TO STREET.

"L" TRAINS IN CRASH; CAR FLUNG TO STREET

Motorman Held In Coach, but Is Unhurt.

New York, Feb. 17.—A car was hurled from the elevated structure at Eighth avenue and One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street. It swung in mid-air, suspended by the coupling which attached it to the five other cars of the train. In his seat in the forward end was the motorman, John H. Becker of 333 Dill place, Evergreen, Long Island, and a snow pile saved him.

It was six feet deep, and this part of the car crashed into it. It eased the shock of the fall and acted as a cushion to the motorman. Half smothered and dazed, he managed to extricate himself from his booth and to scramble out of the car. He was badly shaken by the shock, but he escaped with nothing more serious than the fright.

The crash as Becker's car was sideswiped by another gave persons below a chance to spring away, and then the heavy car smashed through the steel guard rail and plunged to the street, with an ear splitting din of shattering wood and metal. As the broken third rail came into contact with the ripped steel structure a short circuit was established with a terrifying display of green and yellow electric fireworks. The elevated structure itself seemed ablaze for several minutes, and a fire alarm was turned in.

Spectators held their breath as they saw the car driven by the collision buck against the heavy steel girder and force its way through. As it toppled toward the street Becker could be seen still seated at his lever. The car was falling with his side of it down, and it appeared certain that he would be crushed in his trap.

But the force which had bowled the car from its track had been spent in breaking through the girder, and so it dropped slowly, held back by the train to which it was attached. Its end swung into the snow pile, collected earlier in the day by the street sweepers, and it came to rest one end held fast aloft and the other supported by the snow.

CASSIDY OUT ON $20,000 BAIL

Ex-Boss of Queens Says He Is Confident of Winning Appeal.

New York, Feb. 17.—Curly Joe Cassidy, ex-boss of Queens, was released in bail of $20,000 from the Raymond street jail, where he has been confined since he was convicted of selling a supreme court nomination to William Willett, Jr., in 1911. A bonding company supplied the bond.

Bail in the case of Louis T. Walter, Jr., convicted of being a go-between in the deal, was fixed at $5,000. A bonding company gave bail.

The certificates of reasonable doubt granted by Supreme Court Justice Blackmer on Saturday permitted the men to get their liberty pending appeal. Otherwise they would have had to begin their sentences this week. Cassidy got a maximum sentence of one year and six months in Sing Sing and $1,000 fine and Walter was sentenced to pay $1,000 and serve three months on Blackwell's island.

KNEW IT WAS "FRAMEUP"

Senator Denies That He Attacked Mrs. Bond in a Hotel—She Made Advances to Him—Says That She Led Him Into a Trap.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Feb. 17.—In a calm voice Senator Thomas P. Gore told of his encounter with Mrs. Minnie E. Bond in the Winston hotel in Washington, upon which Mrs. Bond bases her $50,000 damage suit against him.

Senator Gore denied Mrs. Bond's charges in detail. Moreover, he accused her of deliberately plotting to put him in a compromising position. He declared that she led him to her room in the hotel, and when he informed her that he could not use his influence to get a federal appointment for her husband she seized his hand and drew him toward her just as T. E. Robertson, one of her alleged accomplices, burst into the room.

The blind senator was led to the stand by D. M. Frawley, income tax collector for Oklahoma, and was examined by Judge C. B. Stuart of his counsel. He took the oath sitting down.

The senator said he remembered meeting Mrs. Bond at the Skirvin hotel in Oklahoma City in January, 1913, but not who introduced them. He told her that he was committed to an applicant for collector of internal revenue and could not give his indorsement to her husband.

"Was it ever suggested that she bring her indorsements to Washington?" asked Judge Stuart.

"It was not," said Senator Gore.

"Did you ever give her any encouragement that her husband would get your support?"

"I did not."

Mrs. Bond visited the senator's office in Washington first, he said, about ten days after the Wilson inauguration in 1913, and renewed her efforts in her husband's behalf.

Didn't Hold Her Hand.

"Tell this court whether at that time you held Mrs. Bond's hand," Judge Stuart asked.

"I did not," replied Senator Gore firmly.

"Did you put your hand on her foot?"

"I did not."

"Did you make any advances or take any liberties with Mrs. Bond?"

"I did not."

"When did Mrs. Bond leave your office?"

"When I told her I could hold forth no encouragement to her husband."

A week later Mrs. Bond asked the senator, he said, to come to the Winston hotel. She insisted, though he offered to have her sent right in if she would come to his office. He finally consented to "drop in" on the way home from his office. He had never been in the hotel before and knew nothing of its construction.

"About the time we entered the lobby," Senator Gore said, "Mrs. Bond came up and saluted me, saying, 'I'll take charge of the senator now.'"

"Did she then become your guide?"

"She did."

"Just about the time she mentioned the Mississippi connection I suggested that she would miss her train from Washington at 6:45 o'clock. She said she had decided not to go, but would go on the Southern railroad at 10 o'clock last night."

"What did you do?"

"I resumed my seat and next she suggested that she might run for commissioner of charities and corrections of Oklahoma. She also suggested that I was going to have a bitter opposition in my race for re-election, and we discussed that for awhile. Then somebody rapped and told her that she had a telephone call. She returned after a protracted conversation and sat on the bed."

"How long did you talk with her then?"

"Only a few minutes. I told her I would have to go. I rose to start and extended my hand. She took hold of my hand and kind of seemed to go down. I asked, 'What does this mean?' She gave some answer which I did not understand, and then I heard some one come in and say that he was T. E. Robertson of Oklahoma. We exchanged salutations. About that time Mrs. Bond began to make an outcry and take on."

TO KEEP M'ADOO IN CABINET.

Wilson Opposed to Secretary Mixing In New York Politics.

Washington, Feb. 17.—President Wilson set at rest reports that Secretary Houston would be made a member of the federal reserve board, and although he was not asked specifically about Secretary McAdoo and the United States senatorial race in New York, the emphasis which the president put on his desire to keep his cabinet intact was interpreted as an indication that his influence would be against drawing Mr. McAdoo into the New York situation.

Recently the president asked Secretary Wilson to remain in the cabinet rather than to run for the United States senate in Pennsylvania.

The People's Forum for the discussion of public questions which is to be started at Washington School on Thursday evening of this week is one of more than five hundred such gatherings now being promoted in seventy-one of the cities of the country. Beginning in Rochester in 1907 as one of the features of the great social center program there, the organization of forums of public opinion in public school-houses has been carried forward with the hearty approval of statesmen, educators, clergymen, social workers and men and women interested in advancing the common welfare everywhere. Justice, then Governor, Hughes, gave the movement his unqualified indorsement telling the citizens of Rochester that in providing public discussion and free examination of all questions that concerned the community they were buttressing the foundations of democracy. President Wilson has praised the people's forum as offering a practical method of approach to the successful administration of public business.

One of the most interesting developments in connection with the spread of the social center idea was the "Town Meeting Society" organized by Rev. Herbert Bigelow and Frank P. Stockbridge to promote the use of the public buildings of Cincinnati for the discussion of public affairs. In their struggle to accomplish this purpose, they found that the constitution of the State of Ohio, by requiring all cities to have uniform characters, made it impossible for the citizens of any municipality to effect any administrative reform without the consent of enough representatives to make a majority of the legislature. To meet this difficulty, it was determined to seek revision of the constitution and a movement for a constitutional convention was organized. This convention was held in 1912 with Mr. Bigelow as president and submitted to the voters forty-two amendments to the State constitution the result of which was to give Ohio what is regarded as the broadest and most progressive fundamental law of any of the States. Home rule for cities is one of its provisions.

The People's Forum is an established institution in several nearby cities, including Jersey City, New Rochelle and White Plains. The committee in charge of the program for the meetings to be held in Plainfield has been fortunate in securing Winston Paul, the chairman of the Forum Committee in Jersey City as one of the speakers at the opening meeting on Thursday evening. Mr. Paul will speak on "Democratizing the Public School."

Dr. Thomas C. Hall, of New York, will be the other speaker, taking as his topic: "Free Speech." Dr. Hall is a recognized leader of public opinion. His presentation of this important subject is illuminating in the highest degree.

It is announced that both men and women are invited to the meetings of the Forum. Opportunity will be offered for free discussion, following the addresses. The meetings are under the auspices of the Public Recreation Committee.

THE PLAINFIELD THEATRE

Five days before his inauguration and while he was still Gov. Wilson, the President occupied a box at the Eltinge theatre, New York city, and witnessed a performance of "Within the Law." He was accompanied by his friend, Colonel E. M. House, and two Secret Service men and laughed and applauded heartily throughout the entire evening. Between the third and last acts, a young man made his way to where the President sat and the audience realizing that something was afoot, began to applaud vociferously. The object of their interest was so engrossed with his visitor that he did not at first respond. Presently, he rose and bowed, raising his hand for silence. "I wish to present to you," he said, "the author of the play, Mr. Bayard Veiller." The young playwright, however, hung back in the shadow of the box and refused to face the applause. As it showed no signs of abating, Mr. Wilson stepped out to the front. An expectant stillness settled over the house, but the speech all hoped for was brief. "The newspaper men in the opposite box," the President said with a smile, "will tell you that I am making a virtue of silence." With which he returned to his seat after bowing to the renewed outburst of applause. "I was never more thrilled and interested in my life," was his observation to Mr. Veiller, as he prepared to leave his box after the performance. "Within the Law" is the play which ran for an entire year at one theatre in New York city and which will be seen at the Plainfield theatre on Monday afternoon and evening, February 23.

BIRD AS A COMPROMISE.

Some of the practical Democratic politicians, who do not recognize a capable man when they see one, are after Congressman Tuttle's scalp, principally because he has refused to stoop to petty political tricks to hold his position. Mr. Tuttle has represented the Fifth district for two terms, and has been a faithful, conscientious and studious member of the House of Representatives. He enjoys the confidence of his colleagues at Washington, regardless of party, and had he been left alone in the Plainfield postoffice matter would have solved the problem to the satisfaction of a large majority of the people, but of course not to the satisfaction of the disappointed seekers after the office and their friends.

Senator Martine means right in his handling of the case, but we fear that before he gets through with the muddle that he has thrown the matter into, he will wish that he had let Mr. Tuttle settle the question in his own way. There are about fifty-seven varieties of candidates for the job now, and each has his particular circle of friends who wish to see him appointed. Perhaps the best solution will be to rename Mr. Bird as a compromise candidate, and no one disputes that if ability to fill the office were the only consideration he would have been reappointed long ago.

Although the minature blizzard that visited Plainfield over the week-end brought untold suffering to the homeless and shelterless and delayed and impeded traffic, there was one feature that was a blessing. The tons of snow and ice forming the blanket supplied work for hundreds of unemployed, and the large amount of city money expended removing it will relieve much suffering among the worthy poor. Several of the factories here are working on short time, and other men have been laid off at this time of the year when money is most needed. Since the heavy snowfall of Saturday Street Commisioner Gavett has added many hands to his force and almost every man in the city willing to work has found some employment in the street department. All day Sunday and yesterday wagons and men kept busy carting the snow from the business section. Extreme cases have been brought to the attention of the city departments in which the snow supplied work for men who have not earned a dollar in weeks and have large families dependent upon them. While the snow will not last for a great period of time the city money earned by these laborers will go a long way toward alleviating suffering.

There is some criticism about the action of the owners of a hall in the borough in permitting the gallery therein to be crowded far beyond what is said to be the limit of safety. One afternoon last week it is said that 450 persons were jammed into the gallery in the hall for more than two hours, and whenever great enthusiasm was manifested over the playing of two basketball teams, it is said that there was noticed a perceptible swaying of the gallery. Fear was expressed for the safety of the crowd, suspended twenty feet in the air. The authorities should investigate all buildings where crowds congregate in both the city and the borough, and if they are not so constructed as to be perfectly safe, the police should keep the size of the crowds within the limit of reason. At present there seems to be no restriction on the number who may crowd into a public place in the city and borough except in the theatres, and the people of this community do not want to wait until a calamity has killed or injured some of the citizens before enforcing stricter rules.

Union county has always been represented in the Senate at Trenton by men of ability, high standing and courage, many of whom have attained greater honors in the after years. Should Mayor Percy H. Stewart of Plainfield become a candidate for Senator this fall, and be elected, this record would be maintained for another three years. If the people are given the opportunity of choosing between the present incumbent, Carlton B. Pierce, and Mayor Stewart it can be said that Union county's varied interests will be as well looked after in the future as they have been in the past, no matter which is elected.

Up in the Bronx the other night a policeman dropped in at a ball and arrested a young woman who was doing the tango and carrying a .32 calibre revolver in her blue silk stocking. There is no use creating a hubbub as it is not at all unlikely that the young woman carried the gun simply to emphasize the fact that she was "dressed to kill."

A friend of ours who has an exaggerated sense of humor dropped in the sanctum today to remark that February is the shortest month of the year. In view of the fact that the other eleven bring the same chronic condition to us in these days of the cost of high living, his reminder is not at all appreciated.

The will of the late Mrs. James A. Bailey, widow of the great circus king, is being contested by her sister, Mrs. Hutchinson. Her lawyers claim that there are nine different points on which their client can break the will. In other words, she has the greatest show on earth.

An old pistol said to have originally belonged to George Washington, was sold at auction the other day for $4,000. The West End Avenue sage pauses to remark: "What's the use of working for a living, when there is one born every minute, and sometimes there's twins?"

The Saturday contributed editorial for this week will be written by a woman—one who occupies a prominent part in a great work being done for women in Plainfield. She will tell about something which it is planned to do for the working girls of the city.

Putnam Griswold, the leading basso of the Metropolitan Opera Company, is convalescing from an operation for appendicitis, in which five high priced surgeons participated. Maybe he won't do some tall singing when he gets the bill.

JOHN KIRKLAND CLARK.

He Is Chosen by the Assembly as Craft Hunter.

Assistant District Attorney John Kirkland Clark has been settled upon for chief counsel of the assembly committee that is investigating state contract graft. It is understood that District Attorney Whitman, who will serve more or less in an advisory capacity, will urge upon Mr. Clark the immediate investigation of the state treasurer's office. It is understood that District Attorney Whitman will be the leading spirit in the assembly committee's graft investigation and that he will go to Albany to cross examine witnesses and give advice when solicited. Mr. Whitman, who has had the refusal of the position, recommended the appointment of Mr. Clark as the committee's chief counsel. State Senator Harvey D. Hinman and District Attorney Bond of Syracuse will be asked to serve with Mr. Clark as associate counsel.

THE FORUM.

Editor, Plainfield Daily Press:

If Mr. Arnold reads my first letter in reply to the priest's editorial, he will see that no priest was questioned on any religious or moral issue. That letter was exclusively designed to remind the priest that he was advocating a method to suppress a paper without a legal trial This in the very nature of the case is unfair, un-American and unconstitutional. The religious atmosphere was too thick about it to pass unchallenged.

Will Mr. Arnold now tell us if this is right A ban is considered innocent and given the benefit of the doubt, until the evidence is overwhelmingly against him. "The Menace" is not on trial—no evidence has yet been forthcoming to morally or legally condemn it—and what is still worse, a movement is on foot to give "The Menace" no opportunity to defend itself by rousing public opinion against it.

The hue and cry is, "down with 'The Menace.'" But, sir, this country will see to it that that paper gets a fair trial to substantiate its charges. This Rome dreads more than anything. If virtue is truly her birthright, and her present life is untarnished, why in the name of common sense is the cry raised, "down with 'The Menace?'"

If Rome is not afraid and stands on her pedestal of isolated glory and purity, we demand to know why she does not vigorously prosecute "The Menace" and thus once and for all settle the matter to her own and the world's satisfaction. It is the duty she owes to herself; to her off-spring, and to the awaiting world.

In the second reply the writer proved from Scripture and history that the dogmas of the papal system have no connection with Christ. Here again no individual priests are mentioned, but the writer takes the Roman Church as a concrete whole.

The writer emphatically states that the dogma of Celibacy of the Catholic priesthood is not of Christ; is not of the Apostles; and not of the early Christian clergy. There is no Christian basis for it at all—hence the source from whence it springs is foul. Every departure from God's word—every disobedience to Christian ethics, brings in its wake sin, misery and national disaster and humiliation.

Owing to the claims of the papacy that her authority for this practice is derived from the very foundation of Christianity, we are compelled to go back more than a thousand years—we must go back at least nineteen hundred years. We give a few texts her, in Paul's Epistle to Titus 1:5, 6 (Catholic Bible).

"For this cause I left thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and shoulds' ordain priests in every city, the husband of one wife having faithful children, etc."

This utterly destroys any argument for the celibacy of the priesthood. God foreseeing the impending apostasy again warns the Christian Church of this wickedness. We quote 1st Timothy 51-3.

"Now the Spirit manfestly saith, that in the last times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to spirits of error, and doctrines of devils. Speaking lies in hypocrisy, and having their conscience seared, Forbidding to marry, and to abstain from meats, etc."

The Roman Catholic Church then do the very things mentioned above. We can safely conclude it is not of Christ. Again, we hear so much about "tradition" a very questionable source; however, let us see if this helps out the papacy; we give extracts from the Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. X, page 460:

"Celibacy became an ideal for the clergy in the East gradually, as it did in the West."

"In the fourth century we still find St. Gregory Nazianzen's father, who was bishop of Nazianzos living with his wife without scandal."

"Priests already married may keep their wives, the same law applies to deacons."

"Nearly all secular priests were married."

In view of these facts Rome has no argument to put up. It is wrong—and before the God of the Universe she stands condemned.

The mystical hand solemnly inscribes, "Thou are weighed in the balance and found wanting."

CO. K NOTES

At the close of the regular drill ssesion of Company K, last night, a special meeting of the various committees in charge of arrangements for the coming tenth great fair, which starts Saturday night and continues for a week, was called by Captain Charles A. Peterson, who is the general chairman. The fair, which is the tenth annual of the company, will be held during the week that the company was organized thirteen years ago. No pains have been spared by the committees in charge to make this year's event the greatest in the history of the company.

All the alteration work that has been underway for the past three months in the armory has been completed and a sheet metal ceiling has been put in position. The floors of the armory have all been scraped, filled and waxed.

The newly tailored-to-fit and trimmed blue uniforms will be worn during fair week by the members of the organization who will be in charge each night. These blue uniforms were received at the armory last night and were issued to the men who were measured for them by the quartermaster sergeant and his assistant.

The last meeting of the committees will be held at the close of the school of musketry Thursday night, when all committee chairmen must have a final report to turn over to the general chairman, Captain Peterson.

The first night of the fair will be conducted by the members of the company. On Monday night, when it is thought that the company will participate in the review to be given in honor of Brig.-General Wilbur F. Sadler, the adjutant general of New Jersey, in the Trenton Armory, the ex-members of the company, assisted by a squad of the present members, will conduct the evening's entertainment.

The New Typewriter OLIVER No. 7

WE ANNOUNCE AN AMAZING MODEL—The OLIVER No. 7—a typewriter of superexcellence, with automatic devices and refinements that mark the zenith of typewriter progress. A marvel of beauty, speed and easy action. Typewriting efficiency raised to the nth power.

The OLIVER No. 7 embodies all previous Oliver innovations and new self-acting devices never before seen on any typewriter. A leap in advance which places The Oliver ten years ahead of its time. So smooth in action, so light to the touch, so easy to run, that experts are amazed. A model that means to the typist delightful ease of operation.

A model that means a higher standard of tyepwriting, ger and better service.

The No. 7 is now on exhibit and sale at all Oliver Branches and Agencies throughout the United States.

The new model has more improvements, refinements and new uses than we can even enumerate here.

The "cushioned keyboard" with "anchor keys" and the new automatic features mean less work for the hands, less strain on the eyes, less manual and mental effort.

With all of these masterly mechanical improvements we have made the machine more beautiful and symmetrical. From every standpoint The OLIVER No. 7 attains superlative excellence.

Nothing you could wish for has been omitted. The new devices, refinements, improvements and conveniences found on the No. 7 represent an enormous outlay and vastly increase its value—the price has not been advanced one penny. We shall even continue in force our popular 17-Cents-a-Day purchase plan, the same as on previous Oliver models.

The OLIVER No. 7, equipped with the famous Printype, if desired, without extra charge.

You owe it to yourself to see the new machine before you buy any typewriter at any price. Note its beauty, speed and easy action, its wonderful automatic devices. Try it on any work that is ever done on typewriters. Try it on many kinds of work that no other typewriter will do.

It is a significant fact that the typewriter that introduced such epoch-making innovations as visible writing, visible reading, Printype, etc., should be the first to introduce automatic methods of operation.

TYPES OF ENGLISH FICTION.

The members of the literature department of the Monday Afternoon Club met yesterday afternoon at the Public Library building. Discussion was had of types of English fiction, works taken up ranging from those of Richardson to Arnold Bennett. Mrs. Samuel P. Carter read a paper on "Sir Charles Grandison;" Mrs. B. J. Shreve, a paper on "Evelina," and Mrs. Samuel Huntington, a paper on "Tom Jones."

LINER ON ROCKS; 500 ARE SAVED

Roma Strikes No Man's Land In Storm.

WIRELESS CALL BRINGS AID

Hits Wreck Dotted Isle In a Blinding Blizzard—Three Revenue Cutters Are Rushed to Assistance and In High Seas Succeed In Floating Ship.

Boston, Feb. 17.—According to wireless dispatches received here, the Fabre line steamer Roma, which went ashore on No Man's Land, an island off Martha's Vineyard, Mass., has been floated and is on her way to Providence. The message came from the Roma's captain. It read:

We are floated and are proceeding en route for Providence. CAMBOUSE.

The Roma, with 418 passengers and a crew of 100 men, bound from Marseilles for Providence and New York, struck during a blinding snowstorm that, carried on the wings of a seventy mile wind, made navigation in the vicinity of the forbidding island extremely hazardous.

The revenue cutter Itasca, in the western end of Long Island sound, was first to respond to the distress signals, but had before her a hard fight of several hours. The revenue cutter Acushnet set out from New Bedford on an equally difficult trip.

The Roma was due at Providence last Saturday, and after bucking gales all the way across the Atlantic ran into a gale that, moving eastward, was central off Nantucket. Apparently the vessel was twenty miles off her course, which lies along what is known as the "Twenty Fathom Curve," when she brought up on the south shore of No Man"s Land.

The direction of the wind was her immediate salvation, for few vessels have escaped from the locks of the little island with the wind from the south.

The egg shaped island, with a coast line of about three miles, lies about eight miles south of Gay Head light and is the most isolated place of habitation on the Atlantic coast. A single family lives there this winter.

Sends Appeals.

The first wireless message from the Roma was picked up at the naval radio station at Newport at 4:40 o'clock in the afternoon. It was in French and was not translated until some time later. It read:

Ashore south of No Man's Land. Send powerful towboat with well provided towing material. Impossible for us to get off with our own power.

Two hours later Captain Cambouse sent the following:

Steamer shaking heavily. No water in holds. Bad weather. Passengers quiet. Hurry tug. CAMBOUSE.

In reply D. H. E. Jones, general agents, sent the following to the Sagaponack wireless station:

Please advice captain steamer Roma, No Man's Land, government tugs Itasca and Acushnet on way to assist him. Wrecking tug also leaving New London. JONES.

The tug Tasco put out of New London under the order from Elwell & Co and reached the endangered vessel about nightfall.

The gale was terrific, but hawsers were made fast, and the rising tide and the pull of the tug brought the craft out of danger.

PREDICTS T. R. AS GOVERNOR

Ex-Senator Davenport Says He Will Carry State by 200,000.

Utica, N. Y., Feb. 17.—In a statement here former Senator Frederick M. Davenport predicted Theodore Roosevelt as the next governor of New York state by 200,000 or 300,000 votes.

"The quickest way out of what many people think is an intolerable condition is for Progressive Republicans to get behind Theodore Roosevelt for leader in the state of New York. We will nominate him for governor this year, and we will elect him by 200,000 or 300,000. Then we will clear up this state from Buffalo to Montauk Point."

ALL WELL ON NIAGARA.

Ship Turned Back Owing to Broken Propeller.

Havre, France, Feb. 17.—The French Transatlantic Steamship company received a wireless dispatch from the Niagara saying that all on board were well and that the vessel was returning to Havre under her own steam.

The Niagara was obliged to turn back on her voyage from Havre for New York with 417 passengers on board owing to a propeller being broken by the heavy seas.

MEYERBEER THE TOPIC

superior to the pupil's.

"Meyerbeer was not discouraged and wrote another fugue in accordance with Vogler's suggestions and sent it to him. This imposing reply soon came: 'Art opens to you a great future. Come to me at Darmstadt. You shall be treated as a son and at the very fountainhead you shall quench your thirst for musical knowledge.' Such a prospect was not to be resisted and in 1810, in spite of objections on the part of his family, Meyerbeer became an inmate of Vogler's house, where Carl Maria von Weber was already a student.

"The Abbe Vogler was a brilliant man, born perhaps ahead of his time. He is often looked down upon as a mere musical charlatan, Mozart sarcastically saying, 'He gives out that he will make a composer in three weeks and a singer in six months,' but, nevertheless, Weber had a high opinion of his rare physical development, his honorable character and his skill in making the most of young composers, and fully intended to write his life.'

"Meyerbeer's education was carried on for two years. His diligence was such that often when interested in some new branch of study, he would not leave his room for days together. His great powers of execution on the piano enabled him to play at sight the most difficult and intricate orchestral scores, with a full command of every part.

"His first opera, Jepthah's Vow, was written during this Vogler period and was produced at Neuwich in 1813. Biblical in subject, dry and scholastic in treatment, it resembled an oratorio rather than an opera and although connoisseurs thought it promising, it failed to please the public. A comic opera, Alimelek, of the Two Saliphs, met with sufficient success in Stuttgart in 1813 to justify its request for the Karntnerthor theatre in Vienna.

"To Vienna, therefore, Meyerbeer now went, with the intention of making his appearance there as a pianist, but on the very evening of his arrival, he chanced to hear the renowned pianist, Hummel, and was so much impressed with the delicacy and beauty of the touch of this artist that he became dissatisfied with all he had hitherto accomplished. Meyerbeer then went into a sort of voluntary retirement and only at the end of ten months of incessant practice did he make his first appearance as a concert virtuoso, when his playing made a great sensation. But to be a composer was the only goal worthy of his ambition. The Two Caliphs, performed Vienna in 1814, had been an utter failure. Dejected, disheartened, such a degree as almost to doubt whether he had not from the first deceived himself as to his vocation, he was somewhat consoled by Salieri, who must have seen some merit in the work, and who advised him to go to Italy and there study the art of writing for the voice.

"Accordingly, Meyerbeer now went to Venice in 1815. Rossini's Tencredi was then at the height of its popularity and all Venice resounded with airs from that opera. It was not difficult for Meyerbeer to catch the trick of this light, graceful melody. Many years later he wrote to a friend, 'All my feelings became Italian; all my thoughts became Italian; after I had lived there a year, it seemed to me that I was Italian born. Of course such a complete re-tuning of my spiritual life had an immediate effect on my methods of composition.'

"His first Italian opera (Romildae Costauza) was produced in 1818 and was so successful that it immediately brought him orders for other works. His success was all the greater for being won in direct rivalry with Rossina himself. This did not hinder a warm friendship between the two artists.

"Meyerbeer's new operas soon travelled to Germany and his best friends who heard them not only felt that he was serving false gods, but had the courage to tell him so.

"The protests of the earnest Germans evidently made an impression upon him. He afterwards called these Italian works his 'wild oats.' The last and most successful of them, 'Il Crociato in Egetto,' is said to show a decided advance upon the earlier ones, as though he had tried to show that he might combine both methods, the light Italian and the earnest German. This opera was produced in Venice in 1824 and in 1826 he was invited to witness its first performance in Paris. This proved to be the turning point in his career. He eventually took up his residence in Paris and lived there most of his subsequent life.

"From 1824-1831 no opera appeared from his pen. A sojourn in Berlin, during which his father died, his marriage and the loss of two children were among the causes which kept him from public life. But in these years he undertook that profound study of French character, French history and French art which resulted in the final metamorphosis of his dramatic and musical style, and in the great works by which his name is remembered.

"Robert le Diable was performed the first time in November, 1831. In this opera the new Meyerbeer revealed himself and its unparalled success extended in a very few years over the whole civilized world. It made the fortune of the Paris Opera. Scenic effect, striking contrasts, word and brilliant instrumentation, fascinating melody, attained a dramatic force unlooked for and until then unknown.

"The popularity of this opera was so great that 'Les Huguenots,' produced in 1836, suffered at first by contrast, but the public soon learned to appreciate its beauties. It has been compared to a cathedral; it has been called an evangel of religion and love. It has been said to be the most vivid chapter of French history ever written. On the other hand, the German critics were even more severe upon it than they had been upon Robert. Schumann could see nothing in it but falsity and trickery.

"Meyerbeer's next great undertaking was suggested by a German novel that pleased him. He consulted with the scribe, who had written the books for the two previous operas, and the libretto was soon in his hands. He found fault with it. Scribe changed it again and again but failed to please the composer. Thus the great opera L'Africanie remained only an unfulfilled project. He never lived to see it put on the stage thought from time to time it occupied his attention until the very end. Scribe was pacified when Meyerbeer took another libretto of his, 'Le Propliete,' which so forcibly excited the composer's imagination that he at once set to work on it and finished it within the year, though it was not produced until long after this time.

"A good deal of Meyerbeer's time was now spent in Berlin, where the king had appointed him royal director of music and where he was subsequently given the position of Kapellmeister. Here, beside less important works he composed "Das Feldlager in Schlesieu,' in which Jenny Lind appeared for the first time in Berlin. He found the labors in Berlin too exacting. He was not a good conducor, as he himself confessed and he was anxious to be released. At firit he was granted only leave of absence which he spent in Paris.

"The year 1846 was marked by the production of his brother's drama of 'Struensee,' for which Meyerbeer composed the music, which was performed with great success. The overture is considered one of his highest achievements in sustained instrumental composition. After his sojourn in Paris Meyerbeer went to London with Jenny Lind, where they shared in a reception almost unequaled for its enthusiasm. On his return to Berlin he brought out Wagner's 'Rienzi.' Meyerbeer had already befriended Wagner whom he had found living in poverty in Paris. He was rewarded [illegible] ingratitude which even Wagne[illegible] admirer's find it hard to explain [illegible] Probably Wagner was jealous [illegible] cause some of his pet reforms were [illegible]rried out by a man who did not b[illegible] ev[illegible] in his principles. Wagner cal[illegible] Meyerbeer a 'most miserable n[illegible] maker—a Jew banker to who[illegible] occurred to compo[illegible] operas.'

"'Le Pro[illegible],' which was fina[illegible] produced in [illegible]is in 1849, after ex[illegible]less polishi[illegible]nd changing of d[illegible]tails, added [illegible]terially to the composer's fam[illegible] There was a feelin[illegible] of disappoint[illegible]nt at first as it d[illegible]fered materi[illegible] in style from its predecessor, [illegible]rtheless its greatn[illegible]ss was apprec[illegible], and in spite of a fearfully h[illegible]ummer, it kept the boards and [illegible]n reached its hundredth perf[illegible]ance.

"For the [illegible] time in its history the Opera [illegible]ique allowed a foreigner to w[illegible] for its famous stage, and 'L'Etoi[illegible] Nord' was produced in 1854. [illegible] is considered one of Meyerbeer's [illegible]st attractive works, besides bei[illegible]n example of his exhaustive ve[illegible]tility. In 1861 Meyerbeer celebrated his seventieth birthday. This same year he wrote for the International Exhibition, at London, a festival march and after its performance he was publicly thanked. This was his last great triumph. His failing health and trouble with his eyes forbade travel. His last words were spoken cheerfully on the evening of May Day, 1863. 'I will see you in the morning; I bid you good night.' He died early the next day.

"'L'Africanie' was performed after his death, at the Academie in Paris. The work has suffered somewhat from the incessant change of intention on the part of its composer but in spite of this the music has a special charm which will make it to some minds the most sympathetic of Meyerbeer's works. It is, in fact, the most purely musical of them all. None is as melodious or so pathetic, or so free from blemishes of conventionality, it approaches the domain of poetry more nearly than any of his other operas.

"Meyerbeer was an artist extravagantly praised during his life time and later no less bitterly decried. He was certainly an unusually clever man, with a strong instinct for the theatre. His influence upon modern opera has been extensive, and he was the real founder of melodramatic opera. He loosened the bonds of musical form and though not quite obliterating the old land marks did much to render traditional forms more scenic. What most composers before him had done only in the act finale, Meyerbeer did at any point in an act where he saw a chance of making a music development. In some moments of intense dramatic excitement he rises to the height of the situation as perhaps few others have done. Presenting as they do, splendid opportunities to singers of dramatic ability his operas still hold the stage, in spite of the exacting character which renders their perfect performance difficult and very rare."

Members of the Monday Afternoon Club also enjoyed violin selections by Miss Helen Harman and a paper on "Modern French Opera," read by Mrs. Orra Rogers.

Annual Sale of Publishers' Overstocks

At 50 to 80 Per Cent. Below Publication Prices

This is a clearance sale of thirty-five of the largest book publishers in the country.

At the end of every year these publishers take account of their stocks.

Certain of the books left on hand must be got rid of—and reductions far below the regular wholesale prices are the result.

These books are not special cheap editions; they are the regular publications which appear in the firms' catalogues. In many cases they are the choicest volumes. The publishers include in their clearance the books

(1) of which they have too [illegible] to be recatalogued;
(2) of which they printed or imported too large quantities;
(3) which they do not intend to reissue;
(4) which must be moved out to make room for new publications about to be issued.

Circumstances combined to make the publishers' overstocks left from last year larger than ever.

Only a bookseller with the widest possible outlet could handle the overstocks of a normal year.

(Years ago, the publishers naturally turned to the Wanamaker Book Store as the one capable of undertaking this task.)

But this sale of 180,000 volumes is—

The Largest Sale of Books the Largest Retail Book Business Has Ever Held

And this fact alone is of the most vital importance to book buyers, for it assumes a wider range than ever from which to choose.

because, of some titles, there are but three or four—and these include some of the choice volumes and sets. When they are gone we shall not be enabled to obtain duplicates at the prices in this Sale.

NEW JERSEY'S CHAMPION POOL SHOT IS DEAD

Michael A. Dolan, for many years New Jersey's champion pool shot, and well-known to hundreds of Plainfielders, died Saturday morning in the Post-Graduate Hospital, New York, where he had undergone an operation. He had been ill for more than a year with an affection of the stomach.

Mr. Dolan was a native of Hackettstown, where he was born fifty years ago. He always lived in the northern part of the State, but was a familiar figure in scores of cities throughout the East. He spent his summers at Lake Hopatcong, where he located the first camp on Halsey Island, and through which he came into contact with scores of Plainfielders every season. He was of an exceptionally friendly disposition and his death is regretted by many local people. In recent years he had not been active in professional pool circles, but retained his expertness until his health failed.

Beside his wife, who was Miss Mary Nearny, of Washington, and who is also well-known here, Mr. Dolan is survived by two brothers, Charles Dolan, of Hoboken, and Timothy Dolan, of Hackettstown. The funeral took place in St. Mary's R. C. church, Hackettstown, this morning, and burial was at that place.

OH YOU BILLIARDISTS!

One cause of the prejudice against billiardists arises from the common use of a misnomer. The public reads, for instance, of certain crimes and misdemeanors occurring in a poolroom and carry the impression that the item refers to a game room, when in reality such events never happened in any billiard hall and were in no way connected with the game of billiards. The better class of billiard room keepers have sought to eliminate this confusion by dropping the word "pool" in connection with their business. Pool is not a game, but is applied to the game of billiards by some through ignorance. The word has become obnoxious because many persons do not understand when reading of the poolroom in connection with the race horse gambling and other forms of chance. All the paraphernalia necessary for a poolroom are a telegraph instrument, a pencil, a pad of paper and money to wager. It is no wonder the billiard hall men see the advisability of not using the word "pool" as a name for pocket billiards because of the unsavory reputation given the word "pool." Like the great American games of baseball, the game of billiards has had a splendidly clean record and it is rightfully called the "gentleman's game" because of that record.

TOUGH FOR HANK O'DAY.

O'Day is taking over a tough managerial assignment and he will work for a hard man. Some of these days the National League will wake up and get rid of Murphy. Ever since this man has been connected with the sport he seems to be in a conspiracy to cheapen the professional game. There is not a disagreeable feature which has come up in the National League in years in which Murphy has not been the ringleader. His ticket scandals during World's Series, his rows with Chance and Evers, his treatment of Mordecai Brown, his effort to capture Ban Johnson's goat, his part in the Fogel mess, have all tended to make Murphy the most universally detested man in baseball. A club owner told the writer last week, "Few people know how near Murphy came to meeting the same fate as Horace Fogel in 1912." If he only had! If organized baseball wants to fight the Federals let them start in by firing Murphy.

Ol' Chris Mathewson's proclamation from a Los Angeles tee that the Federal League can never, or hardly ever, lure him from the shadow of Coogan's immutable cliffs created no intense astonishment in baseball circles. It is estimated that the Old Master blasts about $10,000 a year out of the Giant management. Then he has his side pickings, which amount to something. The Federal League could hardly offer him sufficient inducement to abandon this money, and his golf, too.

WILL SPLIT WITH A. A. U.

Members of the New York Athletic Club were discussing today the possibility of the organization withdrawing from the Amateur Athletic Union. Although it never was acknowledged, the recent fight at the annual election of the organization was over the interference of the Amateur Athletic Club in the management of the club. The independent ticket that successfully elected its candidate for the presidency of the club was known as the A. A. U. ticket in club circles.

COMISKEY STILL SERIOUSLY ILL.

Rome, Italy, Feb. 17.—Charles Comiskey, the owner of the Chicago American League baseball club, who, because of severe illness, was compelled to remain here after the departure of the world-touring baseball players, is but little better. He will probably not be able to carry out just yet his plans for sailing direct to America.

Query—How long has baseball been played in Japan? Is it played to any great extent in that country? —J. G.

Answer—Baseball was imported into Japan from this country about ten years ago. It has won a place in the college athletics of that country. College nines from this country have journeyed to Japan to play ball. Professional clubs have also gone there to play, one representing the National League. The Japs are recognized as unusually clever athletes and make crackerjack ball players.

With three victories in a row last night on the Rahway Elks' alleys the members of the Newark Elks' team increased their lead in the Elks' League to three games each way over the New Brunswicks. The Newarks did good pinning in the first game only last night; after that the work was far below par. Luckily for the Green street contingent the pinning was good enough to top the efforts of the Rahway pin-knights. Newark started off nicely with a total of 937, and Rahway came nowhere near that mark, having a count of 750. In the next game the Newarks dropped to 764, but the Rahway bowlers were accommodating and only accounted for a score of 736. In the next match Rahway dropped even farther back and only totaled 719. Newark, with 820, was on Easy street. Howard Williams, with an even 200, was high for Newark. The scores:

SENIOR INTERCLASS TEAM DEFEATED FRESHMEN RIVALS

The Senior class team, of the Plainfield High School Inter-Class League, defeated the Freshmen class team yesterday afternoon by the score of 30 to 17. The game was very close in the first half, the lead passing back and forth from one team to the other until the half ended with the score at 11 to 8 in the Senior's favor. With the beginning of the second half the Seniors began playing a stronger game and gradually drew away from their younger rivals. The lineup:

PLAN SHOW PARTY.

A number of local sport followers, including representatives from Plainfield and North Plainfield High Schools, are planning to form a party to visit the Sportsmen's Show in Madison Square Garden next week. BOROUGHITES PRACTISE.

DATE FOR BIG GAME.

A date has finally been selected for that deciding Interscholastic Basketball League game and the all-important event will take place on the Y. M. C. A. court, Thursday afternoon, instead of Wednesday, as was heretofore reported.

LEAL'S SCHOOL LONG SCHEDULE

Manager Dale the First to Announce Baseball Schedule for 1914 Season.

SOME GOOD MATERIAL

Probable Personnel of the Private School Nine—No place to Play Games on Has as Yet Been Secured—Several "Me!" Teams Scheduled.

Prospects for a speedy baseball team to represent the Leal School on the local and suburban diamonds this season are unusually bright, according to early season dope, and with a good supply of veterans for a nucleus the private school nine is already rounding into shape. Coach Wardlaw will probably be assisted in whipping the aggregation into shape by Jack Martin, the local ball player, and indoor drills are now being held in the Y. M. C. A. "gym."

Captain Faber has been giving his men limbering up drills during the past few weeks but no hard work has been programmed as yet. The basketball schedule has not been completed as yet and until that time the ball players will not be able to have a regular hour for practice in the Association rendezvous.

Manager Orton Dale has been busy compiling a schedule of games for the 1914 ball tossers and is the first manager in this section to make public his season's announcements. A card of seventeen games has been compiled by Dale and he has but one open date, that coming in the latter part of May. Included in the contests are interscholastic matches with Plainfield and North Plainfield High School and also contests with Westfield, Somerville and several New York scholastic teams. No playing field has as yet been secured by the Leal management and the cutting up of Crescent Oval makes it necessary for the private school youths to look elsewhere. There is a bare possibility that Parker Field will be chartered certain afternoons during the week and Hyde Oval and Cricket Field have also been mentioned but as yet no definite action in this matter has been taken.

The Interscholastic Baseball League may yet be formed and in the event of this organization coming together for another season the interscholastic matches arranged with the local and borough High Schools will be championship battles.

Although nothing definite is known concerning the personnel of the nine for the coming year the following veterans have made their appearance: Dickerson, Voorhees, Faber, Stewart, Lyon, Snyder, Stevenson and Dale. It is understood that Captain Faber will take a chance on some of the catching this season and during off-hours will hold down an outfield job. Dickerson, the veteran backstop, will try his hand at heaving as will also Fred Krom, Gus Van Deventer and Voorhees. "Peanut" Stewart will play his old position at short, Lyon will play second, Stevenson first, and Sneider third. Dale and the pitching staff will probably play the outfield. The schedule:

BOUND BROOK HIGH SCHOOL SWINGER IN SECOND PLACE

The New York University gymnastic team sprang a big surprise on the Rutgers College gymnasts in a meet held last night in the Ballentine Gymnasium, New Brunswick, by taking first place by a slim margin.

Local interest has been attracted to the work of Richardson, the Bound Brook High School product, who proved a big disappointment in the club swinging event. He had been counted upon to take first place easily but was a little off form and got only second place. The time allowed for club swinging was four minutes.

SUNDAY BASEBALL HEARING POSTPONED TO MARCH 2

Trenton, Feb. 17.—Owing to the failure of Senator McGinnis and Senator Read to appear in time for the public hearing on the Senate bill to legalize Sunday baseball the meeting was postponed until March 2. Senator Egan, of Hudson, who introduced the measure, was in the Senate chamber, but was the only member of the judiciary committee present which has the bill in committee.

Representatives of the various ministerial unions and the Anti-Saloon League were here to fight the passage of the measure.

Senator Egan assured those who came to attend the hearing that nothing would be done in the way of advancing the passage of the bill until after the committee heard argument on the measure on March 2. The hearing on that date will be held at 4:30 p. m.

Plainfield Telephone Exchange

The Story of the Development of the Telephone in Plainfield, and of how "Central" Works . . .

The Telephone Company's New Commercial Office in Plainfield.

Interior New Commercial Office New York Telephone Co.

The first telephone instrument in Plainfield was installed some 32 years ago. Since that time the number of telephones in Plainfield has creased to 4,055. Where there used to be a few calls a day exchanged between the first telephone subscribers, today hundreds of calls are made each 24 hours and the actual number averaged each day is approximately 19,220. About 14,000 calls a day are local calls from one subscriber to another in the Plainfield District, 3,366 are calls to out of town or foreign points, 1,004 are calls made by out of town subscribers to Plainfield and 850 are "Information" calls.

The first telephone exchange was opened here in 1882 and the first telephone was installed by C. W. Runyon, who is still a resident of Plainfield, in the newspaper office of the "Constitutionalist." In January, 1883, the number of telephones had increased to 100. This number increased to 195 in 1895; 604 in 1904, and 1622 in 1905. In 1907 when the telephone system was changed from magneto to the present common battery there were 1946 telephones. From this point the development has been very rapid and the number increased from 2146 on January 1st, 1908, to 4055 on January 1st, 1914.

These figures are perhaps surprising, but they show that in Plainfield the telephone has developed from a luxury little used by a few people to a necessity liberally used by many.

A tour of the Plainfield Exchange proved both interesting and instructive to the writer. The questions asked were answered so that an intelligent idea was obtained of how the work of operating is carried on.

The details of the work of making the hundreds of different connections and the speed at which this is done, are fascinating. The lifting of the receiver from the hook starts an electrical current in motion. This current travels over wires between the telephone and the Central office and lights a tiny electric light in the switchboard. The operator responds by inserting in a hole or "answering jack," just over the electric light, one of a pair of brass plugs attached to a cord and as she does she says, "Number, please?" If the number you ask for is in the same exchange, as is the case when one Plainfield subscriber is calling another, the operator takes the companion plug, pushes it into the hole or "multiple jack," designed by the number called, presses the key that rings the bell on the telephone called for, and as soon as the person answers, conversation begins.

Each switchboard consists of what are called "A" and "B" positions. From either an "A" or "B" position all of the subscribers' lines in the Central Office may be reached. At the "A" positions all calls that are made by Plainfield subscribers are answered. If these calls are for another Plainfield subscriber, the "A" operator makes the connection right before her. At the "B" positions are handled all calls to Plainfield subscribers from other Central Offices.

Suppose "Elizabeth No. 1" is calling "Plainfield No. 1." The Elizabeth subscriber takes the receiver off the hook and is answered just as in the local call by the "A" operator. The "A" operator would then call the Plainfield "B" operator, who would assign a trunk line from Elizabeth to the Plainfield Central Office, and would make the connection with the line to Plainfield No. 1, thus causing the bell on this subscriber's instrument to ring. When the subscriber answered, conversation would begin.

Frequently, of course, people are uncertain about the number they wish to call, or for some reason or other wish to secure information to enable them to make a telephone call. To meet this condition the Telephone Company maintains "information" operators. Strictly speaking, the "information" operators are clerks rather than operators. They relieve the regular operators of answering questions regarding irregular calls that the regular operators cannot answer. They are selected because of their experience and tact, and are provided with the necessary data for giving telephone information. These operators sit at what is generally known as an "information desk" and the facilities at their command consist of records of subscribers listed alphabetically, numerically and by street and number.

The Plainfield Central Office is centrally situated on the third floor of a three story and basement building on 109 East Fourth street. The telephone wires from all parts of the town are brought into this building to a cable vault in the basement. They then run to the main distributing frame, as it is called, on the second floor. Here they are protected from foreign currents or electrical storms by "heat coils" and carbon equipment. From the main frame the wires run to the intermediate distributing frame and then to the switchboard.

In the Plainfield Exchange every detail has been capably and carefully planned. The system is protected from stray electrical currents at the central office by "heat coils" and carbon equipment, and further protection is provided at each subscriber's premises so that the possibility of injury to subscribers from these causes is eliminated. The exchange is up-to-date in every particular and the switchboard is of sufficient size to accomodate the increase of subscribers for three years. At the same time every provision has been made to serve the public promptly even under the unusual demands caused by extreme hot or cold days, unexpected storms, fires and the like.

So much has been done to assure for Plainfield prompt, efficient service at all times and under all conditions, that it is only fair for the public to do its part in making Plainfield's telephone service even more efficient. The three parties to every telephone call, the person calling, the operator and the person called, must work together harmoniously and intelligently in order to secure prompt, satisfactory telephone service. The practice of telephone courtesy has been proved to give the best results and to be even more essential than courtesy in face to face conversation. It would help Plainfield's telephone service if we all practiced the slogan of the Telephone Company, "The Voice With the Smile Wins."

To those who are interested in making a personal visit to the Plainfield Central Office, Mr. A. B. Wilson, local commercial manager, extends a cordial invitation to inspect this most wonderful system. If you are interested be sure and call on him at the company's commercial office at 37 Park avenue and he will arrange to have you properly conducted through the Central office.

The modern telephone is truly a wonderful and marvelous talker. The instrument is the greatest boon of present day life. It is equally convenient and practically indispensable to business men and householders. Orders can, and are, sent by telephone to stores, offices and houses hither and yon. One can sit in one's own home, or shop, or office, in this city, and almost instantly, upon demand being made for the connection, get in touch with friends or business associates in cities, towns and villages that are far distant from Plainfield.

NEEDLEWORK

A BEAUTIFUL LUNCHEON SET THAT WILL NEVER GO OUT OF STYLE

A luncheon set involves so much work that it is not worth while to embroider one in the temptingly attractive fads in embroidery stitches. For a luncheon set worked in colors in one of the lazy-daisy, thousand-flower or seemingly easy stitches that become fads for a few months will be out of style almost as soon as it is finished. Much wiser is it to use a conservative, dainty design such as this which will always be in good style and in good taste with any kind of china. Pattern 14669, includes transfers for stamping a 36-inch centerpiece; 8 plate doilies, each 10 inches in diameter; 8 bread-and-butter-plate or finger-bowl doilies, each 6 inches in diameter and 8 tumbler doilies 4 inches in diameter. Choice of linen, or fine round-thread linen, or fine plain damask, 42-inches wide. The entire set will require 2¼-yards of linen 42-inches wide.

The embroidery should be done with white mercerized cotton, using number 20 for the scalloped edge and number 25 for working the baskets of flowers. The scalloped edge should be worked first, padding it firmly with chain-stitch or running-stitches so that the threads of the material will not fray after the piece has been laundered. The baskets are worked in outline-stitch, and the flowers may all be done in well padded solid work or the small flowers may be worked in eyelets.

Hot iron, transfer pattern 14669, including designs for stamping the 36-inch centerpiece and 8 doilies in each size, will be sent to any address on receipt of twenty cents in stamps or coin. Please write plainly and address Fashion Department, care of this paper.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

A feature of this little dress (6433) which makes it especially suited to wash materials is the opening at the top of the sleeve and underarm.

The dress may be opened and laid flat on the ironing board.

As illustrated it is developed in white linen and embroidered with an attractive raised design; the edge of the neck is scalloped and these scallops may be continued down the shoulder and underarm closing.

If preferred the underarm seam may be closed and the shoulder seam only left open.

Linen, madras, crepe, or gingham may all be used to advantage with this design.

For a child of eight this pattern requires 2¾ yards of 36 inch material.

The pattern is cut in 5 sizes: 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10 years.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, passing the tape around the fullest part of the breast well up under the arms.

It may be obtained by filling out the coupon and enclosing 15 cents in stamps or coin to the Pattern Department of this paper.

TO make good soup the meat, bones and vegetables must be fresh and wholesome.

The foundation of all soups is stock. This is the liquid in which meat, bones and vegetables have been boiled and should always be made in advance, so that all fat may be removed when cold.

Stock is to the cook what the medium or the water is to the painter in oils or in water colors.

Good Lenten Soup.

Macaroni Cream Soup.—Take three ounces of macaroni, two quarts of stock, one carrot, one turnip, one tablespoonful of crushed barley and one teacupful of milk.

Break the macaroni into short lengths and boil it in the stock with the carrot and turnip until tender. Remove the carrot and turnip when cooked and stir in the barley with the milk. Serve hot.

This Is Very Fine.

Artichoke Soup.—Take two pounds of Jerusalem artichokes, one ounce of butter, three pints of stock, one-half pint of milk and salt and pepper. Peel the artichokes and cut them up. Fry them in the butter, add the stock and cook until tender. Rub through a sieve. Add the milk and seasonings. Return to the saucepan and reheat. Serve.

A Homely Dish.

Potato Soup.—One dozen potatoes, one ounce of butter, one-half pint of milk, two quarts of stock or water, two onions, two sticks of celery and salt and pepper. Boil the potatoes, drain and mash them thoroughly with the butter and milk. Place these in a saucepan with the onion, celery and stock. Cook until the vegetables are ready. Pass through a sieve and reheat. Season with salt and pepper and serve.

They Gave a Ball in Their New Home.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

The Waltzing Mice and Their Opening Ball.

"YOU know," said daddy, "there are kinds of mice called the waltzing mice."

"I didn't know that," said Jack. "Are they fond of jumping around? Is that why they are calling waltzing mice?"

"No," continued daddy; "they don't just jump around and frisk about, but they really dance."

"Do they waltz just like real people?" asked Evelyn.

"Yes, indeed," said daddy; "they waltz around and around, but all by themselves, and they dance just as fast as they can. They love it better than anything else. In fact, I think they even care more for waltzing than they do for eating."

"I didn't know any animal cared more for anything than eating," chimed in Jack.

"Well, the waltzing mice are different. They will waltz all day long, and they never seem to get tired of it.

"Once there were a number of mice who had been living in a cellar of a house. One day one mouse heard one of the grownup people in the house say that they were going to get a big cat and have him live in the cellar, as they had been much disturbed by the sounds of mice and feared they would be overrun by them.

"But this frightened the mice terribly, and they didn't know what they could do. So one of the older ones said he would spend the next day looking around for a new home.

"At night he came back in very high spirits, saying that he had discovered an ideal home and a very grand one. It was in a barn not far from where they were, where there was plenty of room for waltzing and also warm hay for them to sleep in at night. All the mice at once began to waltz around with joy, for they had been worrying about the cat all day long.

"However, the old mouse was very wise and prudent, and he stopped them, saying, 'We must hurry and get out before the cat is brought here.' So one by one they filed through a narrow hole and out into a side street, where they scampered after the old mouse to their new, safe home.

"They were perfectly delighted with the barn, which seemed like a palace to them after the dingy cellar, and they all felt so happy and so secure now that they had escaped in time. So they soon cleared away some hay in the center of the barn and sent for a lot of their friends and gave a fine opening ball in their new, beautiful home."

MINARET YELLOW.

Afternoon Gown of This Startling New Shade.

CHIC AFTERNOON GOWN.

Minaret yellow is one of the new and popular shades. It is a rather brilliant tone, but combined with lace, as in the case on the gown illustrated, it is quite pleasing. This tunic of princess lace is sloped to give the smart pointed effect in the back. The costume is for afternoon affairs or for restaurant wear in the evening.

The attempt to bring in high collars is as unwelcome as attempts to bring in long sleeves have so far been. In the case of the collars it will probably fail. However, the fact remains that some of the new lingerie waists show high collars and, of course, back closings. The front closing and the low waist are both so comfortable that women will probably cling to them.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Table Talk.

FINALLY the attitude of the hermit suggested that the dinner was ready.

"I guess you might as well sit down," he remarked. "It's all fixed, what there is to fix. This place don't need a cook, it needs a commissary department."

"Peters," reproved Magee. "That's hardly courteous to our guests."

"Living alone on the mountain," replied the hermit from the dining room door, "you get to have such a high regard for the truth you can't put courtesy first. You want to, but you have not the heart."

The winter guests took their places at the table and the second December dinner at Baldpate inn got under way. But not so genially as on the previous night did it progress. On the faces of those about him Mr. Magee noted worry and suspicion; now and again menacing cold eyes were turned upon him; evidently first in the thoughts of those at table was a little package rich in treasure, and evidently first in the thoughts of most of them, as the probable holder of that package, was Mr. Magee himself. Several times he looked up to find Max's catlike eyes upon him, sinister and cruel behind the incongruous gold rimmed glasses; several times he saw Hayden's eyes, hostile and angry, seek his face. They were desperate; they would stop at nothing; Mr. Magee felt that as the drama drew to its close they saw him and him alone between them and their golden desires.

"Before I came up here to be a hermit," remarked Cargan contemporaneously with the removal of the soup, "which I may say in passing I ain't been able to be with any success owing to the popularity of the sport on Baldpate mountain, there was never any candles on the table where I ate. No, sir. I left them to the people up on the avenue—to Mr. Hayden and his kind that like to work in dim surroundings—I was always strong for a bright light on my food. What I'm afraid of is that I'll get the habit up here and will be wanting Charlie to set out a silver candelabrum with my lager. Candles'd be quite an innovation at Charlie's, wouldn't they, Lou?"

"Too swell for Charlie's," commented Mr. Max. "Except after closing hours. I've seen 'em in use there then, but the idea wasn't glory and decoration."

"I hope you don't dislike the candles, Mr. Cargan," remarked Miss Norton. "They add such a lot to the romance of the affair, don't you think? I'm terribly thrilled by all this. The rattling of the windows, and the flickering light—two lines of a poem keep running through my head:

"My lord he followed after one who whispered in his ear—
The weeping of the candles and the wind is all I hear.

"I don't know who the lord was nor what he followed—perhaps the seventh key. But the weeping candles and the wind seem so romantic—and so like Baldpate inn tonight."

"If I had a daughter your age," commented Cargan, not unkindly, "she'd be at home reading Laura Jean Libbey by the fire, and not chasing after romance on a mountain."

"That would be best for her, I'm sure," replied the girl sweetly. "For then she wouldn't be likely to find out things about her father that would prove disquieting."

"Dearie!" cried Mrs. Norton. No one else spoke, but all looked at the mayor. He was busily engaged with his food. Smiling his amusement, Mr. Magee sought to direct the conversation into less personal channels.

"We hear so much about romance, especially since its widely advertised death," he said. "And to every man I ever met it meant something different. Mr. Cargan, speaking as a broad minded man of the world—what does romance mean to you?"

The mayor ran his fingers through his graying hair and considered seriously.

"Romance," he reflected. "Well, I ain't much on the talk out of books. But here's what I see when you say that word to me: It's the night before election, and I'm standing in the front window of the little room on Main street where the boys can always find me. Down the street I hear the snarl and rumble of bands, and pretty soon I see the yellow flicker of torches, like the flicker of that candle, and the bobbing of banners. And then—the boys march by—all the boys! Pat Doherty and Bob Larsen and Matt Sanders—all the boys! And when they get to my window they wave their hats and cheer. Just a fat old man in that window, but they'll go to the pavement with any guy that knocks him. They are loyal. They are for me. And so they march by, cheering and singing—all the boys—just for me to see and hear. Well, that—that's romance to me."

"Power," translated Mr. Magee.

"Yes, sir!" cried the mayor. "I know I've got them. All the reformers in the world can't spoil my thrill then. They're mine. I guess old Napoleon knew that thrill. I guess he was the greatest romancer the world ever knew. When he marched over the mountains with his starving band and looked back and saw them in rags and suffering—for him—well, I reckon old Nap was as close to romance then as any man ever gets."

"I wonder," answered Mr. Magee. It came to him suddenly that in each person's definition of this intangible thing might lie exposed something of both character and calling. At the far end of the table Mrs. Norton's lined, tired face met his gaze. To her he put his question.

"Well," she answered, and her voice seemed softer than its wont, "I ain't thought much of that word for a good many years now. But when I do—say, I seem to see myself sitting on our porch back home thirty years ago. I've got on a simple little muslin dress, and I'm slender as Elsie Janis, and the color in my cheeks is web, it's the sort that Norton likes. And my hair—but I'm thinking of him, of Norton. He's told me he wants to make me happy for life, and I've about decided I'll let him try. I see him coming up our front walk, coming to call on me. Have I mentioned I've got a figure, a real sweet figure? That's about what romance means to me."

"Youth, dear?" asks Miss Norton gently.

"That's it, dearie," answered the older woman dreamily. "Youth."

For a time those about the table sat in silence, picturing, no doubt, the slender figure on the steps of the porch long ago. Not without a humorous sort of pity did they glance occasionally toward the woman whom Norton had begged to make happy. The professor of comparative literature was the first to break the silence.

"The dictionary," he remarked academically, "would define romance as a species of fictitious writing originally composed in the romance dialects and afterward in prose. But the dictionary is prosaic—it has no soul. Shall I tell you what romance means to me? I will. I see a man toiling in a dim laboratory, where there are strange fires and strange odors. Night and day he experiments, the love of his kind in his eyes, a desire to help in his heart. And then—the golden moment—the great moment in that quiet, dreary cell—the moment of the discovery. A serum, a formula—what not. He gives it to the world and a few of the sick are well again and a few of the sorrowful are glad. Romance means neither youth nor power to me. It means—service."

He bent his dim old eyes on his food, and Mr. Magee gazed at him with a new wonder. Odd sentiments these from an old man who robbed fireplaces, held up hermits and engaged in midnight conferences by the annex door. More than ever Magee was baffled, enthralled, amused. Now Mr. Max leered about the table and contributed his unsavory bit.

"Funny, ain't it," he remarked, "the different things the same word means to a bunch of folks. Say romance to me and I don't see no dim laboratory. I don't see nothing dim. I see the brightest lights in the world and the best food and somebody, maybe, dancing the latest freak dance in between the tables. And an orchestra playing in the distance—classy dames all about—a taxi clicking at the door. And me sending word to the chauffeur, 'Let her click till the milk carts rumble—I can pay.' Say, that sure is romance to me."

"Mr. Hayden," remarked Magee, "are we to hear from you?"

Hayden hesitated and looked for a moment into the black eyes of Myra Thornhill.

"My idea has often been contradicted," he said, keeping his gaze on the girl; "it may be again. But to me the greatest romance in the world is the romance of money making—dollar piling on dollar in the vaults of the man who started with a shoestring and hope and nerve. I see him fighting for the first thousand—and then I see his pile growing, slowly at first—faster—faster—faster—until a motor-car brings him to his office, and men speak his name with awe in the streets."

"Money," commented Miss Thornhill contemptuously. "What an idea of romance for a man!"

"I did not expect," replied Hayden, "that my definition would pass unchallenged. My past experiences"— he looked meaningly at the girl—"had led me to be prepared for that. But it is my definition—I spoke the truth. You must give me credit for that."

"I ain't one to blame you," sneered Cargan, "for wanting it noticed when you do sidestep a lie. Yes, I certainly"—

"See here, Cargan," blazed Hayden.

"Yes, you did speak the truth," put in Miss Thornhill hastily. "You mentioned one word in your definition. It was a desecration to drag it in—hope. For me romance means only—hope. And I'm afraid there are a pitiful number in the world to whom it means the same."

"We ain't heard from the young woman who started all this fuss over a little word," Mr. Cargan reminded them.

"That's right, dearie," said Mrs. Norton. "You got to contribute."

"Yes," agreed the girl with the "locks crisped like golden wire." "I will, but it's hard. One's ideas change so rapidly. A moment ago if you had said romance to me I might have babbled of shady corners, of whisperings on the stair, of walks down the mountain in the moonlight or even on the hotel balcony." She smiled gayly at Magee. "Perhaps tomorrow, too, the word might mean such rapturous things to me. But tonight—life is too real and earnest tonight. Service—Professor Bolton was right—service is often romance. It may mean the discovery of a serum—it may mean so cruel a thing as the blighting of another's life romance." She gazed steadily at the stolid Cargan. "It may mean putting an end forever to those picturesque parades past the window of the little room on Main street—the room where the boys can always find the mayor of Reuton."

Still she gazed steadily into Cargan's eyes. And with an amused smile the mayor gazed back.

"You wouldn't be so cruel as that," he assured her easily; "a nice, attractive girl like you."

The dinner was at an end. Without a word the sly little professor rose from the table and hurriedly ascended the stairs. Mr. Magee watched him disappear and resolved to follow quickly on his heels. But first he paused to give his own version of the word under discussion.

"Strange," he remarked, "that none of you gets the picture I do. Romance—it is here—at your feet in Baldpate inn. A man climbs the mountain to be alone with his thoughts, to forget the melodrama of life, to get away from the swift action of the world and meditate. He is alone for very near an hour. Then a telephone bell tinkles and a youth rises out of the dark to prate of a lost Arabella and haberdashery. A shot rings out, as the immemorial custom with shots, and in comes a professor of comparative literature, with a perforation in his derby hat. A professional hermit arrives to teach the amateur the fine points of the game. A charming maid comes in—too late for breakfast—but in plenty of time for walks on the balcony in the moonlight. The mayor of a municipality condescends to stay for dinner. A battle in the snow ensues. There is a weird talk of—a sum of money. More guests arrive. Dark hints of a seventh key. Why, bless you, you needn't stir from Baldpate inn in search of your romance."

He crossed the floor hastily and put one foot on the lower step of Baldpate's grand stairway. He kept it there. For from the shadows of the landing Professor Bolton emerged, his blasted derby once more on his head, his overcoat buttoned tight, his earmuffs in place, his traveling bag and green umbrella in tow.

"What, professor," cried Magee, "you're leaving?"

Now, truly, the end of the drama had come. Mr. Magee felt his heart beat wildly.

"Yes," the old man was saying slowly. "I am about to leave. The decision came suddenly. I am sorry to go. Certainly I have enjoyed these chance meetings."

"See here, Doc," said Mr. Bland, uneasily feeling of his purple tie, "you're not going back and let them reporters have another fling at you?"

"I fear I must," replied the old man. "My duty calls. Yes, they will hound me. I shall hear much of peroxide blonds. I shall be asked again to name the ten greatest in history—a difficult, not to say dangerous task. But I must face the—er—music, as the vulgar expression goes. I bid you goodby, Mr. Bland. We part friends, I am sure."

He turned to Magee.

"I regret more than I can say," he continued, "parting from you. My eyes fell upon you first on entering this place. We have had exciting times together. My dear Miss Norton, knowing you has refreshed an old man's heart. I might compare you to another with yellow locks, but I leave that to my younger—er—colleagues. Mr. Cargan—goodby. My acquaintance with you I shall always look back on"—

But the mayor of Reuton, Max and Bland closed in on the old man.

"Now, look here, Doc," interrupted Cargan. "You're bluffing. Do you get me? You're trying to put something over. I don't want to be rough. I like you. But I got to get a glimpse at the inside of that satchel. And I got to examine your personal makeup a bit."

"Dear, dear!" smiled Professor Bolton. "You don't think I would steal? A man in my position? Absurd! Look through my poor luggage if you desire. You will find nothing but the usual appurtenances of travel."

He stood docilely in the middle of the floor and blinked at the group around him.

Mr. Magee waited to hear no more. Quietly and quickly he disappeared up the broad stair and tried the professor's door. It was locked. Inside he could hear a window banging back and forth in the storm. He ran through No. 7 and out upon the snow covered balcony.

There he bumped full into a shadowy figure hurrying in the opposite direction.

SAGE TEA DANDY TO DARKEN HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair.

You can turn grey, faded hair beautifully dark and luxurious almost over night if you'll get a 50c bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old, famous Sage Tea Recipe are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is becoming gray, becoming faded, dry, scraggly and thin have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful—all dandruff goes, scalp itching and falling hair stops.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur tonight and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.—Adv.

BIG EATERS GET KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache.

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney troubles, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.—Adv.

JERSEY HARBOR CHANGES URGED

In Vicinity of Hudson and New York Bay.

SUBMIT FOURTH REPORT

Harbor Commission Shows Backwardness of Jersey as Compared With New York—Only Remedy State Authority With "Superior Powers Over Municipalities as to Water Fronts."

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 17.—After investigations extending over a period of three years the New Jersey harbor commission submitted to the governor a fourth preliminary report for improving water front conditions in the vicinity of New York. After detailing the backwardness of New Jersey in this respect as compared with New York the commission concludes that the only remedy lies in the creation of a state authority "having superior powers over the municipalities as to their water fronts."

Much of the report had to do with the Hudson river shore front and the hitherto neglected opportunities for making the westerly side of the river as important commercially as the New York side. To emphasize this situation the report contains a map eighteen feet long by three and one-half in width. This shows the New York shore and the New Jersey shore of New York bay and the Hudson river from Constable Hook to Edgewater. It shows the various railroads terminating in the harbor, their mileage and the location of their terminals.

That "New Jersey is dependent to a large extent upon the manner in which New York solves its problem and in the way in which New York proceeds with its development" is the opinion of the commission. It states: "New York's principal object is now to connect itself with New Jersey for rail and traffic service in order to overcome its insular disadvantages. This will be accomplished by bridges or tunnels or both, and the commission in its plans and recommendations has looked forward to this condition."

LOVE FOR GIRL BETRAYS HIM.

Army Deserter, Accused of Theft, Traced by Letters.

Blairstown, N. J., Feb. 17.—His love for a girl near Fort Bliss, Tex., resulted in the arrest of Russell Ludy Simerson, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Simerson of Jacksonburg. He was taken to Fort Wadsworth, Staten Island, where he will be court martialed, charged with theft and desertion.

Several weeks ago the youth returned home and never left his parents' house except at night. He became lonely for news of his sweetheart in the south and two weeks ago came to Blairstown and mailed a letter to her. Detectives, knowing of the friendship of the girl and soldier, kept watch on her mail and, finding it postmarked from here, started on the trail and arrested the youth as he was reading the answer to his letter.

HOBOKEN HAS BOMB SCARE.

But Suspected Package Was Only Alarm Clock Hoax.

Hoboken, N. J., Feb. 17.—Peter Silsbury, who is in charge of the storeroom in the Lackawanna railroad terminal here, heard a clicking sound coming from a package he took from a messenger. Immediately he thought of bombs and infernal machines, and called on Detective William Wallace.

It didn't take long for the news to leak out, and everybody got as far away from the storeroom as possible, excepting Silsbury and Wallace. They secured a pike pole and soused the package in the Hudson river about fifty times, then opened it. Inside was an alarm clock and two dry batteries. The whole thing was a joke, but on just whom could not be ascertained, because the sousing had washed off the address.

GIRL'S CHARGES BEFORE JURY

Hudson County Continues Case Against Bayonne Minister.

Jersey City, N. J., Feb. 17.—The Hudson county grand jury will continue its investigation of the charges made by Ethel Paine, the sixteen-year-old Bayonne girl, that her rector, the Rev. Dr. Scott Kidder of St. John's Episcopal church, held her on his knees and made love to her while her mother lay sick in an adjoining room.

Mrs. Paine and Captain of Detectives Edward M. Griffin of the Bayonne police department, who says he witnessed the scene, will tell what they know about the affair.

ERIE STATION BURNS.

Mahwah and Suffern Firemen Work Hard at Blaze.

Mahwah, N. J., Feb. 17.—The volunteer firemen of this place and of Suffern, a mile and a half away across the New York state line, were tired out after a long fight which they made to save the Erie railroad station here. It was after midnight before the station had burned to the ground and all danger of the blaze spreading to nearby buildings passed.

LITTLE TALKS BY THE WANT AD MAN

Copyright, 1913, The Int. Syndicate, Baltimore.

No. 60.

LET'S see now: What is a Want Ad? I'm not much on definitions, but how will this do: "An announcement of something desired or something for sale, printed in the Classified columns of a newspaper.

Not a very lengthy or involved definition, that But doesn't it really define? Doesn't it about cover the object of all Want Ad. advertising.

That is all there is to Want Ad. advertising—an announcement of something desired or something for sale. I imagine I can hear you say "How about an ad. for a cook? How about it when I advertise the loss of an article, or when I advertise for typewriting to do at home?"

Well, when you insert an ad. for a cook, you want the services of a competent culinary attendant. Something desired. When you advertise the loss of an article, it is in the hope that the finder will see your ad. and restore the article. Something desired. When you advertise for typewriting work, you are offering your services. Something for sale.

There is no mystery about it. Advertising isn't hypnotism, or undue influence or black art. You write out what you want or what you have for sale—you put it in a good newspaper—the newspaper carries your message broadcast, into the homes and hearts of thousands of readers—some of those readers respond to your printed word—you sell or you acquire—and ADVERTISING has done its work.

Next time you want something or have something for sale, try a little Want Ad. The cost is trivial—the results more than worth while.

SOCIETY DANCE FOR HOSPITAL

Successful Affair Arranged by Woman's Auxiliary Board of Institution.

AT COLUMBUS HALL

Elaborate Decorations, Fine Music Features of Social Function—Committees in Charge of the Affair.

Many matrons and misses, with their male escorts, were present at the dance held for the benefit of Muhlenberg Hospital, at Columbus Auditorium, last night, and which was arranged for and given under the management of the womans' auxiliary of the Board of Governors of that well-known institution. The dance continued up to a late hour. It was declared by those who attended and participated in the pleasures of the evening to have been one of the most enjoyable as well as one of the successful of the many social functions that have taken place in Plainfield thus far this winter.

Excellent music for the dancing was furnished by McKee's orchestra, of New York. Guests were served a fine collation throughout the evening, at small tables. This was rather an innovation and one that seemed to be much enjoyed and fully appreciated by the patrons, giving as it did an opportunity for social intercourse, and doing away wholly with the usual overcrowding so much in evidence at supper time at large public dances. The large auditorium was prettily decorated for last night's dance.

Table decorations were red and white carnations, the decorative scheme carrying out the colors of Muhlenberg Hospital. Mrs. Henry C. Irons, was the general chairman of the committee having the dance in charge. Several hundred of representative society people of this city attended the affair. Isaac P. Schwed had charge of the table where cigars were sold. The lemonade was dispensed by Mrs. A. L. Otterson and Mrs. Frederick Goddard. The publicity of the dance was in charge of Mrs. Stuart H. Patterson, and the attendance was most gratifying to the women who had arranged the affair.

Membess of the floor committee were Mrs. Henry C. Irons, Mrs. E. H. Ladd, Jr., Miss Elsie Burrowe, E. H. Ladd, Jr., A. L. Otterson, J. Hartley Mellick, W. L. Righter, R. S. Rowland, Thomas M. Day, S. D. Lounsbery and Arthur Otterson.

The members of the supper committee were Mrs. H. A. McGee, Mrs. F. C. Ard, Mrs. F. J. Hubbard, Mrs. A. V. Healy, Mrs. F. H. Andrews Mrs. Jabez Gilbert, Mrs. Henry Stockton, Mrs. H. L. McGee, Mrs Walter McGee, Mrs. George Mellick Mrs. Robert Rushmore and Mrs. Frank Warren.

Just what the total net receipts of the dance were has not yet been determined but it is thought that the revenues of the hospital will be increased to a material extent through the efforts of the Woman's Auxiliary.

J. Albert Polhemus, aged 42 years, brother of Mrs. Peter B. Hodge, of Plainfield, died suddenly at his home in Astoria, L. I., on Monday night after a short illness. He was widely known in this city, where he had visited many times. Mr. Polhemus was a native of Bound Brook, being the son of Mrs. Henrietta Havenstrite, now of Somerville.

Mr. Polhemus lived for some time at Somerville and about eighteen years ago removed to New York, and for the past fifteen years held a responsible position with the Uptegrove Hardwood Company, of Brooklyn. He was married twice. He leaves a wife and a daughter, Miss Margaret Polhemus, by the first marriage; also a mother and sister, Mrs. Peter B. Hodge. The funeral will be held at the late home tomorrow noon.

"FREE SPEECH" TO BE SUBJECT OF FORUM

Dr. Thomas C. Hall to Give First of Series of Popular Lectures.

Dr. Thomas Cumming Hall, who will speak on "Free Speech," at the opening meeting of the "People's Forum," is professor of ethics in Union Theological Seminary, New York.

Dr. Thomas Hall.

Prominent both as an author and speaker of rare culture, he has for years been greatly interested in the cause of free government and democracy. He has produced many works in religion, philosophy and general literature and contributed largely to modern thought in religion and politics through the public platform both in this country and in England.

He is the son of Dr. John Hall, formerly pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York, and was a classmate of President Woodrow Wilson at Princeton University.

As an active pastor in large parishes in the cities of Omaha and Chicago, Dr. Hall was interested in many movements outside of his immediate parish, taking an active part in the civic life of these communities. While at Omaha he built two churches and edited a church periodical. During two pastorates at Chicago he was very popular as a preacher besides being prominent in many other ways in the life of the city. Forced to leave Chicago in 1897 on account of his health, he went to Germany for a year and a half to study. On his return he accepted the chair of ethics in Union Theological Seminary.

Dr. Hall is said to be a close student of modern life and thought; but has always been in close touch with the real life of the people and has a peculiarly sympathetic nature, giving him a keen insight into social problems. During the past year an honorary degree was conferred upon him by the German Emperor, an unusual honor for an American scholar.

Broad-minded and unusually well informed, Dr. Hall, it is said, speaks from the point of view of one deeply interested in the welfare of humanity and realizes the great importance of all taking a more active and intelligent interest in public affairs.

Another speaker at the "People's Forum" will be Winston Paul, secretary of the Citizen's Federation, of Jersey City, and president of the People's Institute there. He is also director of the Legislative Bureau of New Jersey, which compiles information about important bills during the legislative session at Trenton.

The meeting of the Forum will be held at the Washington School tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock. Patrons are requested to take the Fourth street car to Darrow avenue.

FORMER BOROUGHITE MAKES CHARGES OF GRAFT

Thomas J. Winckler, chairman of the Street Committee, in Asbury Park, and a former resident of North Plainfield, has made charges that the mupicipal authorities bought $6,000 worth of pipe at a price above the ordinary market value of the "E. J. Holland Pipe Company," an alleged fictitious concern, and declares that "someone" pocketed the difference.

The Asbury Park Council has authorized a supreme court investigation of the city's affairs for a period of years. The investigation was brought about through the instrumentality of the former North Plainfield resident who is said to be an expert on civic and municipal affairs and an investigator of merit.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT.

Mrs. Mary Tice, of Westfield, has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Jessie Gilmore Tice, to Charles Ernest Conover, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Conover, of Elmwood place, this city. Miss Tice is well-known here where she has relatives. Mr. Conover is associated with his father in the contract painting business.

RESIGNS FROM TAX COMMITTEE

Timothy F. Harrington Declines to Serve Longer on Borough Body.

ACTION IS A SURPRISE

Inasmuch as He Intends to Join W. L. Smalley in Suit Against the Borough, Believes He Should Retire as Commissioner.

Declaring that he must refuse to longer serve as chairman of the Citizens' Tax Committee of North Plainfield, owing to the fact that he expected to join with his neighbor, former Councilman William L. Smalley, in bringing suit against the municipality to force the repairing of West End avenue, Timothy F. Harrington has sent his resignation to Mayor Robert Clark, Jr. That official has written Mr. Harrington requesting him to reconsider the matter and asking that he withdraw his resignation. As yet no reply has been received by Mayor Clark.

News that Chairman Harrington has decided to resign his official position as the head of the Citizens' Tax Committee will, it is believed, come as a complete surprise to his fellow members on that committee. None of them, it is said, is aware of the fact that he has already placed his resignation in the hands of Mayor Clark. No intimation that such a step had been taken was given out at the office of Mayor Clark, nor was the fact known to any of the borough Councilmen. It was with considerable reluctance that Mayor Clark, when seen by a reporter of The Daily Press this afternoon, confirmed the report that Chairman Harrington had resigned. He declined to discuss the matter in any way, except to say that it was true that he had written Mr. Harrington on February 13, immediately after he had received his letter of resignation, and had asked him to reconsider his determination. He said he had as yet received no answer to his letter.

Other members of the Citizens' Tax Committee are William J. Buttfield, S. St. John McCutchen, Morris C. Van Arsdale and John Becker. All of these gentlemen are appointees of Mayor Robert Clark, Jr., and are named for one year terms. The committee is regarded as an important adjunct of the borough government.

Members of the committee serve without compensation. The organization was effected on October 25, 1912, and was the outcome of a meeting of taxpayers held in North Plainfield for the purpose of entering a protest against what was termed the unjust discrimination as regards other sections of the county, in the matter of assessments. The meeting passed a resolution that a Citizens' Tax Committee be appointed by the Mayor, the members to meet from time to time as the occasion might warrant, and confer regarding the subject of taxation with the members of the Councilmanic tax committee. Such a committee, co-operating as it has always done with the borough Councilmen whose duty it is to look after all taxation matters, is held by residents of North Plainfield generally to make for the good of the community in that the interests of the taxpayers in the borough are at all times conserved.

C. E. SOCIETY ENJOYS SLEIGHRIDE TO WESTFIELD

About fifty members of the Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church enjoyed a strawride to Westfield and return, last night. The start was made from the church on West Second street at about 8 o'clock, and the party again returned about 10:30 o'clock.

Upon returning to town the party adjourned to the Sunday-school rooms of the church, where refreshments were served and a general social time was held. Russell Doeringer, president of the society, and Miss Marie Hahn, a vice president, were in charge of the enjoyable evening's trip and social time.

C. E. S. SLEIGHRIDE PARTY.

Twenty-five of the members of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist church enjoyed a fine sleighride to Westfield on Monday night. Upon the return of the sleighriders they were royally entertained at the home of Arthur M. Harris, of Central avenue, the superintendent of the Sunday-school of the First Baptist church. Refreshments were served during the evening. There were musical selections and the evening was passed most pleasantly.

—Evaporated fruits are being featured at Neuman Brothers' market, corner Watchung avenue and Fifth street, the peaches, pitted cherries, apricots and prunes being especially fine.—Adv. ***

CHARGED WITH THEFT OF FUNDS

E. J. O'Connor and Mrs. Edna Senn On Trial Before Judge Connolly.

PRESENT STRONG CASE

Alleged Woman Accomplice Repeats Story Told the Police, Explaining How the Money Was Taken—Jonathan F. Reger a Witness.

Elizabeth, Feb. 18.—Charged with stealing $500 from the United States Express Company on November 1, Edward J. O'Connor and Mrs. Edna Senn, his confessed accomplice, were brought to trial in the County Court, before Judge James C. Connolly this morning to answer to the allegations. Both are local people, Mrs. Senn having resided on Westervelt avenue, and O'Connor having boarded with her prior to the time of the alleged embezzlement. The State's side of the case, represented by Assistant Prosecutor Martin O'Connor, took up the court session this morning and the better part of the afternoon and it is expected that the trial will be concluded late tomorrow.

Jonathan F. Reger, clerk in the local express office; Charles B. Clark, another employe of the local office and Mrs. Senn were the witnesses examined this morning in the State's effort to incriminate the accused O'Connor and for the most part the testimony given by those examined was conflicting. John P. Owens, of this city, and Samuel B. Schleimer, of Elizabeth, are the lawyers for the defense and during the cross-examination of Reger the accused witness' counsel endeavored to show that Reger was indirectly connected with the embezzlement.

Reger became confused while on the stand and could not bear out certain statements he made to the local police at the time O'Connor was apprehended here. Chief of Police Kiely is also a witness in the case and a number of local people were interested spectators at the trial, the court room being packed to the doors.

While on the stand Mrs. Senn reiterated her story told Chief Kiely and Prosecutor Albert A. Stein in Elizabeth several weeks ago when she voluntarily confessed that she was an accomplice to the crime. When O'Connor was arraigned before Judge DeMeza in the City Court in December, Mrs. Senn, under oath, gave damaging testimony against the defendant, declaring that while her back was turned he stole a packet containing the money from the North avenue office of the United States Express Company. She told this morning how she and O'Connor had connived to take the money and her testimony was by far the most important of the day.

Jonathan F. Reger, the clerk in the office where Mrs. Senn was employed, on the stand this morning recited the story told the local police, and his testimony was shattered to pieces by the lawyers of the defense during the cross-examination.

LOCAL YOUTHS COMMITTED TO STATE HOME FOR BOYS

Francis McCarthy and Joseph Miskell, the two local youths who were convicted of breaking and entering three stores in this city on Saturday night, February 7, and sentenced to the State Home for Boys at Jamesburg, were delivered to that institution in the custody of Freeholders J Hervey Doane and Joseph Perry, yesterday, where they will remain until they are twenty-one years of age, each youth having a period of five years to serve.

The two youthful thieves were part of a trio that was caught in Jersey City two weeks ago, following several petty robberies that were committed in this city and held to await the action of the Juvenile Court. A short time before the triple crime was committed the same couple were participants in a similar robbery in this city and were given another chance when arraigned before Judge James C. Connolly in the Juvenile Court Both have had bad records and their parents were affiliated with the police authorities in having them placed in an institution.

JARDIN DE DANSE.

Demonstrations of the latest dances were given during the evening. During the grand march the dancers were presented with patriotic souvenirs and refreshments were served. Another dance will be given next Tuesday night.

WOULD ENGAGE SCHOOL MATRONS

Miss Hartridge Suggests Their Appointment at Conference of Mothers and Teachers.

PREVENTIVE MEASURE

Co-operating With Teachers It Is Believed That These Supervisors Would Accomplish Much Good—Plan Visits to Free Clinics.

The presidents of the Parent-Teacher Associations and the president of the Plainfield Mothers' Association met in conference at the home of Mrs. William M. Sandford, yesterday afternoon, each president being privileged to bring one officer. The work of each association was discussed and plans made for a union meeting to be held the first Thursday night that the new auditorium of the Plainfield High School is available.

Miss Hartridge, of the Hartridge School, urged the Parent-Teacher Associations to take up the subject of providing a school matron for each school, whose duty would be to mother the children when not in the class rooms. Miss Hartridge stated that such a person co-operating with the principals, teachers and nurses could do much preventive work and relieve the principals of much disciplinary as many offenses were committed when the children were not in the class rooms, which made or marred a child's career. The mere presence of such a matron would prevent many mistakes and mishaps and the right person in the place could wield an influence which could not be measured.

A suggestion was also made that all parent-teacher associations appoint committees to co-operate with the school nurse offering their services to visit homes and accompany children to free clinics when so advised by the medical inspector. Mrs. Munro urged the associations to consider the need of school lunches in the schools and to co-operate with the mothers' association in establishing them in all the schools in the city. Every association in Plainfield and North Plainfield was represented by one or two members and the meeting was full of interest and enthusiasm. Refreshments were served. Miss Pauline Sandford and Mrs. Harriet Chase poured and a very enjoyable informal discussion followed the business meeting.

"AIM OF FEDERATION" THEME OF ADDRESS

Mrs. F. St. John Fitch Explains the Purpose of Local Missionary Body

Under the auspices of the Woman's Association of the Congregational church, a meeting of considerable interest was held yesterday afternoon. Mrs. F. St. John Fitch, president of the Federation of Women's Missionary Societies of this city, gave an instructive talk on "The Aim of the Federation," in which she told of the early work of the organization and what it hoped to accomplish in the way of securing the co-operation of all the women of the city and borough churches in the cause of missions.

Sixteen churches are now affiliated with the federation, each one having two representatives in that body, named by the home and foreign missionary societies of the churches. These are changed annually so that there is an increasing interest made possible on the part of all the women.

Miss Addie Eastman, of the church association, gave an interesting talk on "The Work of the Congregational Church in Turkey and Other Papal Lands." At the conclusion of the addresses there was a brief informal discussion and a social time was enjoyed.

ACTIVITIES AT HOPE CHAPEL.

It was a busy time at Hope chapel last night. Three organizations dealing with various activities of the chapel had meetings, all of which were well attended. Besides the lecture on "The Far East," which was given by J. M. Whiton, there was a meeting of a score of young men who are rehearsing for the mock trial which is to be put on the boards next week, and in another part of the building thirty members of the Girls' Protective League were conducting one of their monthly socials.

FINAL REHEARSAL.

Members of the Public Recreation Committee's folk dancing class will hold a rehearsal in the Washington School auditorium tonight. This will be the final rehearsal prior to the public exhibition which will be given in the Washington School auditorium next Monday night.

ANNOUNCE BETROTHAL OF POPULAR COUPLE

Engagement Made Public at a Dinner Party Given by Mrs. P. S. Suffern.

Announcement was made at a dinner given in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip S. Suffern, on Kensington avenue, last night, of the engagement of Miss Mary Henry and C. William Bingeman, the many friends of the couple being pleasantly surprised by the tidings so uniquely made public. Covers were laid for twelve guests and the Suffern home was appropriately decorated, pink and white being the prevailing color scheme Following the dinner an informal program of entertainment was enjoyed by the guests, Miss Henry rendering several violin selections and Mrs. Lawrence Whital giving vocal numbers.

Miss Henry has gained country-wide prominence as the result of her ability as a violinist and composer of Scottish music, having appeared before many audiences of metropolitan critics and music lovers during her career. Monday night, Miss Henry appeared in the parish house of the Congregational church in connection with the recital there and she has also been a brilliant figure in the entertainments given by the local women clubs and the commencement exercises conducted annually by the Plainfield Seminary.

Since coming to Plainfield in 1909, Mr. Bingeman has been affiliated with the local Y. M. C. A. in the capacity of boys' work director and has become known throughout this and other States for his work among the juvenile set. While connected with the local association he has been a prominent figure in local boys' work and known to practically every member of the younger set in Plainfield and in nearby suburbs. During the summer months Mr. Bingeman is assistant director of the New Jersey State Y. M. C. A. Boys' Camp at Lake Wawayanda and through this medium he has become popular with the boys and men of other cities.

He is a graduate of the International Y. M. C. A. Training School at Springfield, Mass., in the class of 1906, and came to this city from Kingston, N. Y., after acting as boys' work director of that association for a short time. He has been a prominent figure in local church work and as an organizer of classes for Bible study and is a member of the Congregational church Sunday-school.

WOULD MAKE SMALL BOARDS COMPULSORY

Assemblyman Griffin Introduces a New Bill Affecting Every County in State.

Trenton, Feb. 18.—Assemblyman John J. Griffin, Democrat, of Union county, introduced in the Assembly yesterday afternoon a mandatory small board of freeholders bill. Its introduction followed an opinion from Attorney General Wescott that the recent bill by Mr. Griffin applying small boards of freeholders only to Union, Bergen and Camden counties was unconstitutional because it applied arbitrarily to certain counties.

The new Griffin measure makes it compulsory upon every county in the State to change to the small board of freeholders, unless they have already done so. In counties having more than 30,000 inhabitants the board shall consist of nine members; in counties of between 135,000 and 300,000, of seven members; in counties between 50,000 and 135,000, five members, and in all other counties three members shall constitute a board.

The terms of the freeholders are made three years, so arranged that the terms of one-third of the members, or as near that as possible, shall expire each year. It terminates the office or employment of every existing Board of Freeholders, and every officer and employe under them, whether elected, or appointed, on January 1, 1915. The bill gives general provisions for putting the new government into effect in all the counties.

SIGNS A DECREE IN HOOD CASE

Vice-Chancellor Stevens Directs That Personal Property Be Given the Wife.

ALSO NAMES A MASTER

Who Will Settle the Disposition of Twenty-five Articles in Dispute—No Decrees in Divorce As Yet—Hood Takes An Appeal.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Newark, Feb. 18.—Vice Chancellor Stevens today signed the decree in the Richard Haden Hood personal property case. The decree provided for the turning over to Hood by his wife all articles enumerated in an annexed schedule, and the disposition of about twenty-five articles upon which the Hoods cannot agree, was referred to a master, Fred F. Guild, of Newark, being named to settle the matter.

The costs of this suit are placed upon Mrs. Hood, but the Vice Chancellor explained that the cost could offset the cost in the realty suit which Mrs. Hood won. The Vice Chancellor expressed some surprise that no divorce decree had been presented to him for signature.

Conover English, of the firm of McCarter & English, Mrs. Hood's counsel, explained that he had been too busy to prepare the papers. There was further discussion of the hearing before Judge Whittemore on the question of alimony. Mr. English remarked that Mr. Hood possessed enough to warrant a reasonable alimony order.

It was learned today that Judge Gilbert Collins of counsel for Mr. Hood, that he had filed an appeal with the Court of Errors and Appeal in the realty case and argument on this will be heard later.

SPEAKER OUTLINED WORK FOR TEACHERS

Many Attended Interesting Meeting Held in the Home of Mrs. W. J. Hamilton.

Many women, and a number of men, attended the parlor meeting of the local branch of the W. C. T. U., which was held last night at the home of Mrs. W. J. Hamilton, at 407 East Seventh street, to listen to an interesting address by Mrs. Isabel Demarest, of Closter. She spoke on the subject, "The Teacher's Opportunity," pointing out the great work that teachers could, if they so desired, accomplish in the instruction of the pupils in the public schools and of the manifold advantages that would accrue to boys and girls through the teachers instilling in their minds the scientific instruction which is now being taught. Mrs. Demarest is the corresponding secretary of the State organization of the W. C. T. U., is a member of the Board of Education at her home in Closter, N. J., and was a public school teacher for twenty-five years. She spoke entertainingly of her experiences as a teacher and of her pride in being recognized and praised for her work as a teacher by some of her pupils after a lapse of many years. She is a woman of exceptional ability, of strong character and is thoroughly sympathetic in her views and work.

Following the address there was a whistling solo by Miss Edith Hamilton and recitations by Miss Marian Wean. Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, president of the local W. C. T. U., and who is also county president of that organization presided at the meeting last night. Mrs. Edmund Teel and Mrs. Ira West and Mrs. Negley were members of the social committee.

THE PLAINFIELD THEATRE

After some years of discouragement to have finally struck a theme that for a moment reflected the most interesting conversation in New York—grafting among the police officials and the manners and ways of the underworld—is the experience of Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law" generally conceded to be the most popular play of the season and which will be seen at the Plainfield Theatre, Monday afternoon and evening, February 23. For weeks after the premier there never was a vacant seat at the Eltinge Theatre. A. H. Woods, proprietor of the theatre and owner of an interest in the play, said recently that the theatre's share of the profits of "Within the Law" would pay for the cost of its construction. What has been the author's share of unusual success? A story went the rounds of Broadway soon after the premier that Mr. Veiller, pressed for some wherewithal, sold outright his interest in his work for $5,000. This story is untrue and from Mr. Veiller himself the statement was obtained that his royalties have been in excess of $1,000 a week. What really happened was that one of the managers, who owned a big share in the play sold his holdings for $10,000 and has been mentally kicking himself ever since. "Within the Law" ran for an entire season and the first season's profits amounted to about $40,000. According to a person in a position to judge the worth of these things, Mr. Veiller, as author, will realize a quarter of a million dollars during his lifetime from "Within the Law."

NO REASON FOR IT.

When Plainfield Citizens Show a Way.

There can be no reason why any reader of this who suffers the tortures of an aching back, the annoyance of urinary disorders, the pains and dangers of kidney ills will fail to heed the words of a neighbor who has found relief. Read what a Plainfield citizen says:

Mrs. E. Dorflinger, 400 Clinton avenue, Plainfield, N. J., says: "The first symptom of kidney trouble in my case was a dull, heavy pain in my back and head. This was followed by a tired, languid feeling and I knew that my kidneys were gradually giving out. I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and getting a box at Randolph's drug store, I began using them. Before long I improved and I continued until I was cured. I hold just as high an opinion of Doan's Kidney Pills now as when I gave my former testimonial. The cure they made has been permanent."

FOR CHECK ON FORMING NEW B. & L. ASSOCIATIONS

Trenton, Feb. 18.—To regulate the establishment of new building and loan associations, Assemblyman Burton introduced yesterday a bill to prevent the creation of them hereafter except with the consent of the State banking commissioner.

It has been found that some associations are organized practically as side issues for other businesses. Some are utilized by saloon men, while real estate boomers not infrequently utilize the present unregulated system of organization to boom land deals. The Burton bill, which was drafted after conference with Banking Commissioner LaMonte, provides as follows:

"Before the certificate of incorporation shall be recorded or filed * * * it shall be submitted to the commissioner of banking and insurance, who, if he shall approve the form thereof, and if it shall appear to him that the establishment of such an association is warranted by the conditions and will be of public service shall indorse thereon or annex thereto his approval and such certificate shall not be recorded or filed without his approval."

ANTHONY CAMINETTI.

Denies Friction With Wilson Over Attack on Japanese.

If Commissioner General of Immigration Caminetti makes the race for the California governorship he insists it will be of his own free will and not because of any friction between him and the Wilson administration over the matter of Japanese immigration. The commissioner said he was daily receiving letters and telegrams from California asking whether or not he would accept the gubernatorial nomination. He expects to make a reply before March 1. Caminetti denied he was "in bad" with the administration because of his recent speech on Asiatic exclusion before the house immigration committee but Democratic leaders made it apparent they consider Caminetti had placed the administration in an embarrassing position by his radical speech before the house committee.

U. S. TROOPS TAKE CASTILLO BAND

Mexican Bandit Also Caught Near Border.

CAUSED BIG TRAIN WRECK

Six of His Followers Captured by Ninth Cavalry—He Had Been Reported Executed Last Week—Villa Hopes to Get Him.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 18 — Maximo Castillo, the Mexican bandit, who is charged with responsibility for the Cumbre tunnel disaster, in which ten Americans and forty-one others lost their lives, was captured, with six followers, by American negro cavalrymen thirty-eight miles south of Hachita, N. M.

The arrest of the bandit and six of his men was reported from the Alamo Hueco wireless tower of the United States army to the commanding officer of the Ninth cavalry at Hachita, New Mexico. The message was also received at the Fort Bliss wireless station and delivered to General Hugh L. Scott, commanding the border patrol.

The capture of the bandits took place near Alamo Hueco ranch, west of El Paso on the New Mexico-Mexico line, after the bandits had crossed into New Mexico closely pressed by the Mexican troops. Castillo, like others before him, chose flight into American territory rather than capture at the hands of the rebels.

The rest of Castillo's band was reported to be on American soil near Dog Springs, which is just north of the point on the Palomas ranch in Mexico, where the band spent last night. A troop of United States cavalry was sent from Hachita to effect their arrest.

Lieutenant Rothwell, in command of a detachment of Troop A, Ninth cavalry (negro), made the arrest of the Castillo band and the leader was identified, according to the lieutenant's report, by several ranchmen in that section well acquainted with Castillo.

Reported Executed Last Week.

The rebel leader was reported last week as captured by Villa's men, and the day following he was reported executed by them, but General Villa himself never had official confirmation and refused "to believe the good news." When told that the United States had made Castillo a prisoner Villa said:

"If the United States will turn him over to me they will be relieved of the expense of feeding him."

A letter from Castillo reached El Paso, dated Vado de Fusiles, Chihuahua, Feb. 11, in which he denies responsibility for the Cumbre tunnel disaster and asserts that he is not a bandit, but the military commander of the Zapatista cause in northern Mexico and has never harmed a foreigner nor even a prisoner.

Heavy guards have been posted in Juarez around the house where Pancho Villa is stopping, and all automobiles and pedestrians passing the temporary home of the rebel leader are stopped after night. The cause of this sudden vigilance, according to friends of Villa, is the disclosure of a plot to have him assassinated. The report says that rich Mexican refugees on this side of the river, who want Villa out of the way, have offered $150,000 gold for his assassination.

Pancho Villa said that he was about ready to return south for the attack on Torreon.

A train from Chihuahua arrived in Juarez bringing an escort of soldiers and Major Rodolofo Fierro, Villa's chief trainmaster. Fierro says everything is quiet around Torreon and that both sides are playing a waiting game. General E. A. Banaviedes and his brigade are leaving Chihuahua for the south.

LEO M. FRANK LOSES APPEAL IN GEORGIA

Must Pay Death Penalty For Girl's Murder.

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 18.—"I do not think I shall be hanged for a crime that I never committed," said Leo M Frank when told that the Georgia supreme court had sustained the verdict of the lower court, which sentenced him to death for the murder of fourteen-year-old Mary Phagan, who was killed in the pencil factory of which Frank was superintendent.

"I believe some way will be found," Frank continued, "to prove my innocence and to upset the verdict. I have not lost hope."

Rabbi David L. Marx, accompanied by Mrs Leo Frank, her father, Emil Selig, and Attorney J. M. Goldstein went to the jail about noon to inform the prisoner of the court's decision. Frank heard the adverse news with calmness and comforted his wife, who was greatly distressed. Rabbi Marx also showed deep emotion.

"Frank received the news as calmly as though it were an every day event," said Mr. Goldstein. "He is perfectly composed and confident that he will be ultimately cleared of all suspicion of guilt."

The supreme court was regarded as virtually the last resort of Frank's lawyers. Judge Atkinson wrote the opinion, which also was signed by Judges Evans, Lumpkin and Hill.

Chief Justice Fish and Judge Beck wrote a dissenting opinion, in which they maintained that the evidence of Frank's alleged perversion was inadmissible, as it was independent of the crime with which he was charged.

The majority opinion held that the evidence was admissible as throwing light on Frank's remarks in connection with the crime of murder and in connection with his conduct at the time the girl was slain.

NAVY YARDS' BIDS ARE LOWER

Boston and Philadelphia to Build Supply Ship and Transport.

Washington, Feb. 18.—Secretary Daniels decided to award to the Boston and Philadelphia navy yards respectively the contracts for the construction of a supply ship and a transport. The supply ship will cost $1,171,713 and the transport $1,458,305.

Decision to have these vessels constructed at the navy yards was reached by Secretary Daniels after it was found that the navy yard bids were much lower than those by private firms. Mr. Daniels has also adopted it as a part of his policy to increase as far as possible and economical the amount of vessel construction at the navy yards.

REPUBLICAN REORGANIZATION.

The speech of Senator Borah at the Republican Club Lincoln dinner in New York was a courageous one. He was one of the few members of the Republican National Committee who fought the fraudulent seating of delegates at Chicago in June, 1912, but he did not leave the Republican party, though he does not claim to have voted for the party nominee. Borah says he stayed in the party to try to save it. This is also the position taken by former Governor Hadley, of Missouri. They are not alone.

Senator Borah declares that the party cannot come back on the old basis; that the men who brought ruin upon it in 1912 must retire and the leadership of the party become progressive, or it can never again succeed. He declares that, as between the Progressive Republican and the Progressive party there is but little difference. He calls for a change of the party rules, for the recognition of the direct primary, for the elimination of the right of the National Committee to pass up credentials of the delegates from any State, for the reduction of representation where there are no Republican voters, and the like. This plan is good. But we are not sure it goes far enough.

Senator Borah and ex-President Taft do not agree on the possible amalgamation of Republicans and Progressives. Taft declares this cannot be. In the Saturday Evening Post Mr. Taft, in a carefully prepared article, says: "I concur in the views of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Beveridge that a union of the Republican and Progressive parties is not possible." Borah is nearer right than Taft, and we feel sure the people will much sooner follow him. Neither of these gentleman tell us how the union can be brought about. For this there may be a reason. Each may be too modest to say how he thinks it can be done, for the reason that each may think that he would be the Moses to do it. But are neither of them wise enough to see the leader who can do it and win?

If Theodore Roosevelt had been nominated by the Republican National Convention at Chicago in 1912, does any one, free from prejudice, doubt he would now be president? We do not believe so. If he is nominated in 1916 the same result would be certain to come. Borah calls for new leadership; new political ideals; the acceptance of the policies which the people are demanding. Who best typifies this in the estimation of the people? Does any one doubt that the old party would come back into power if Roosevelt were named? We recognize that there are many men who do not believe this, but we feel sure that the vast mass of the American people do and there are more people saying it today than ever before.

CUTTING STATE EXPENSE.

As a result of the report of the Economy and Efficiency Commission, which has been presented to the Legislature, there have been introduced at Trenton a series of seven bills recommending changes in many of the present boards, which if passed, will wipe out of existence offices for which the combined salaries and expenses amount to $200,000 annually.

Among other things it is proposed to establish is a Department of Conservation and Development, doing the work of the State Water Supply, Forest Park Reservation, Riparian, Washington Crossing Park and Washington Rock commissions, the Geological Survey and part of that of the Charities and Corrections Department; to consolidate the ship canal and harbor commissions; transfer the engineering department of the State Board of Assessors to the Utility Commission; combine all the oyster commissions into one; establish a State Board of Taxes and Assessment by consolidating the Equalization of Taxes and Assessors Boards; and reorganize the Board of Health and other state bodies.

The report is a comprehensive one, and conclusively shows that there are entirely too many unwieldy boards now conducting the State departments, which can well be done away with. The work of the commission has been exhaustive, and aside from those who will lose their places, all familiar with the State government will approve the proposed legislation.

Brief mention has been made of the "penny lunches" which are being sold to school children in the city, and which are said to be working great good in maintaining the health of the younger pupils. The committee having the matter in charge has gone a step further now, and is giving a bowl of soup each noon to many young people who have no pennies to pay for it. Naturally this entails additional expense on the school lunch committee, and they will welcome contributions, no matter how small in amount,, to continue the work. Money may be sent to Miss Flora Griffen at the Bryant School. Among the many worthy charities in Plainfield there is none deserving of more liberal support than the one under discussion.

After being left severely alone for several years, the local option question is again before the Legislature, having been introduced by Senator Smick, of Salem county. This has been a most troublesome piece of legislation in past years when it has been agitated, and has been the downfall of more than one legislator. There is only one honest solution of the liquor question, which does not bring about hypocrisy and deceit in the handling of the liquor traffic, and that is the very excellent high license system with strict enforcement of the law, such as now prevails in Plainfield. Local option may be a good thing, but it causes entirely too much dissention and evading of the law to ever solve the iquor problem.

The apparent lack of meeting places for the colored youth of our city aside from those offered by the bar and pool rooms, has been the thought uppermost in the minds of several of the leading citizens of the community of late. The most natural outcome of the consideration of so important a subject is the suggestion that the Y. M. C. A. make provision in the new building to be erected, for these young men, so that the city may benefit to the greatest possible degree by their presence. It is to be earnestly hoped that the officials of that institution will see their way clear to solve the problem of meeting the needs of our brethren of darker color.

THE FORUM.

Editor, Plainfield Daily Press:

There are two reasons why the people's "Forum" attracts interest in the winter time. "Writing" is essentially an indoor sport, and it keeps up the circulation. When people have nothing else to do, they look for an argument. The "Donny-brook" slogan prevails. Wherever you see a head, "hit it."

Good seldom comes from such debates, because they invariably start from nothing, on their way to nowhere, and in most cases do not care if they ever arrive. Now, an excellent suggestion for an editor would be to charge regular advertising rates to the firm, institution, or individual who is getting the benefit of public mention. What a futile waste to run a column of ad. matter for a periodical and not to charge for the space.

The Scriptural quotations of Mr. Cruikshank, are, of course, the time-worn boxing-gloves of the ex-champus-agnosticies. The method of proceedure for the "destroyer" (I use the word as a genarality) is to pick upon the spots of his prey where he believes it to be vulnerable. This picking of a quotation here and there is the accepted formulae for an attack on the Bible or on any religious institution. Then the complaint is made that no opportunity is given to establish the proof of this or that vagary.

The method is old; oh, ever so old, and, alas! how ineffectual; for everyone knows that in the Bible are to be found contradictory sayings which require intelligent interpretation. On some of these adverse propositions are builded the charges of inconsistency, which form the foundation for the destroyer's glaring denunciation. It is like the writer who goes to the proof-room a-rearing and a-tearing because the compositor used the letter (m) in burdock.

The principle is the same as that which prompted a spiteful little girl to dislike her teacher, because she had a wart on her face. There is not today, nor was there ever, any one thing so perfect as to make it entirely immune from all criticism. One can look at a star and know that it shines supremely bright and clear, and then (because it is one's habit) say: "Oh! but there is one point slightly shorter than the others."

With statistics it is possible to prove anything if the proper statistics are selected. (I believe Justice Waite said that.) Also, if just one Scriptural quotation is used and the proper words emphasized, it is possible to construct a most plausible argument. I have no desire to begin another dissection of the Bible. The point is this:

Objection is taken because priests do not marry, and because Paul in an epistle to his companion, "Titus," showed that he did not disapprove of marriage for the priests and bishops; nor did he encourage it. Note well: Epistle St. Paul to Titus 1-6: "If any be without crime, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, not accused of riot, or unruly." This is more of a permit than a request. At the time there was no choice of taking married men or single men. It was a question of getting priests to instruct the struggling Christians.

When a thing is in its infancy it cannot yet be said to have acquired all the knowledge which (like water to a plant) is necessary to make it bloom. Nor is this a repudiation of Paul's Epistles, or Paul's wisdom. It is that through abnegation we are brought in closer touch with the sublime. Whoever has cheerfully relinquished a comfort that they might lessen the misery of another will realize that a different "Spirit of Life" has flown through them.

There are indeed but few of us willing to make a great sacrifice. Some are so unwilling that they cannot comprehend the motive of the willing one. It comes back to the day when the Jones kid split his apple with Mickey Ryan, while the superior Percival sat on a hickory stump and devoured his own in peaceful contentment.

COMMISSION FORM OF GOVERNMENT DISCUSSED

Advantages of a commission form of government for municipalities and the opportunity for a cheaper administration of a city's finances through the appointment of a city manager, were discussed last night by Seymour Perkins, of this city, in an interesting paper which he read before members of the Plainfield Democratic Club. The speaker was listened to by a large audience.

President Howard Lapsley introduced Mr. Perkins, who pointed out the fact that cities such as Dayton, Ohio, Galveston, Houston and Des Moines, that had adopted the commission form of government had proved that a city manager resulted in considerable saving to the local governments because of the business of the city being placed on a thoroughly business basis.

The committee in charge of the affair is composed of D. J. Couraine, John McCarthy, Harry Pasch, John Caffrey and Joseph F. O'Keefe. Mayors Stewart, of this City; Evans, of Westfield, and Steele, of Somerville, have been invited to attend.

KING ALBERT.

Belgian Monarch Thrown From Horse and Has Arm Broken.

Albert I., king of the Belgians, broke his left arm when he was thrown from his horse while riding in the forest of Soignies, not far from the battlefield of Waterloo. His escape from even more serious injury was a narrow one, and the report of the accident caused much public concern in the Belgian capital. The king's physician, however, allayed anxiety by declaring that no graver consequences were likely to ensue from the accident, as the king's general health is good and he is a young man, not yet thirty-nine years old.

TO PROBE GOV. GLYNN WHILE COMPTROLLER

Assembly to Investigate His Term Under Hughes.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 18.—Governor Martin H. Glynn's record as state comptroller under Governor Charles E. Hughes during the years 1907 and 1908 is to be investigated by the assembly probe committee, of which John L. Sullivan of Chautauqua is chairman.

When Chairman Sullivan was asked the question he said: "Well, if there is anything wrong in Mr. Glynn's record as comptroller we expect to find it. We are not telling what information has been laid before the committee, but I can say there will be such an investigation."

Mr. Sullivan would say nothing more about the matter.

The comptroller's department is one of those which the committee intends to make a general investigation of, it was learned. This, as well as the state engineer's department, both elective officers, will be gone into thoroughly.

Chairman Sullivan spent some time trying to get into comunication with John A. Hennessy, who was Governor Sulzer's special graft investigator and who secured a number of indictments in connection with the state highways. Mr. Sullivan says he expects to make Hennessy the chief investigator for the committee, believing that his former investigations will make him a valuable man in that work.

"It would take any other man three or four months to get as far as Mr. Hennessy already has gone," said Chairman Sullivan, "and that would be so much wasted time to us. If we can get Mr. Hennessy we feel sure he will be able to bring to light some things of which the people at large do not even dream."

NOTES FROM LABOR FIELD

Union waitresses in Seattle have a home of their own.

France has a trade union membership of over a million.

The employment of persons under sixteen in Germany is controlled by special laws.

More than sixty-five thousand persons are employed in the iron mines of the United States.

Agricultural workers in England have been promised six dollars a week for a twelve-hour day.

The British Columbia Federation of Labor has passed resolutions favoring woman suffrage, and the exclusion of Asiatics.

The Boston Elevator Operators and Porters' Union has decided that their minimum wage rate shall be $15 a week after March 1.

The National Association of Letter Carriers will tae a referendum vote to settle the question of affiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

Members of Congress holding trades union cards will be guests of honor at a banquet to be given in Washington on February 24 by the Washington Building Trades Council.

In case of illness of employes of the London postoffice they may be absent on full pay for as much as six months and on half pay for another six months.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, is of the opinion that the present industrial warfare can be ended only by profit sharing and the elimination of the labor unions.

Every postoffice in the United States would be made an employment agency in which a list of cities where labor is wanted would be kept, under a bill which Congress will be urged to pass by the Eight Hour League of America.

A ruling by the Oregon Welfare Commission, now in effect, prescribes a minimum wage of $8.25 a week for women employed in industrial occupations in the State of Oregon, and fixes forty-four hours as the maximum time they may be employed in any one week.

In the year recently ended there were a total of 120 strikes in New Jersey, not counting the great strikes in the silk mills. Twenty-four of the 120 strikes were successful, twenty-eight partly successful and sixty-eight were failures. Twenty-four causes were assigned for these strikes.

Charles B. Hawkes and Marsden G. Scott, the rival candidates to succeed James M. Lynch as president of the International Typographical Union, are both members of the famous "Big Six" union of New York city. The election will be decided by a referendum vote of the entire membership of the organization during the present month. The ballots will be forwarded to the international headquarters at Indianapolis, where the result will be announced early in March.

Under the joint auspices of the National Association for Labor Legislation and the American Section of the International Association on Unemployment a national conference on unemployment is to be held in Washington at the end of this month. Governors of all the States and the mayors of the principal industrial cities have been requested to appoint delegates to the conference. Reports on recent unemployment conditions, constructive proposals for the prevention of unemployment, and plans for immediate action towards the relief of the present unemployment will be considered.

SUED BY FORMER MANAGER.

Metuchen, Feb. 18.—Truman T. Pierson has sued the Metuchen Gas Light Company for $600. Papers were served yesterday on Patrick Convery, of Perth Amboy, president of the company. Although Mr. Pierson is still the statutory agent of the concern the sheriff decided that as he is the plaintiff he ought to serve somebody else. Mr. Pierson says the $600 he asks represents unpaid salary and office rent. He retired a short time ago after serving several years as superintendent and manager.

EARLY DECISION LOOKED FOR IN RAILROAD CASE

(By Telegraph to The Daily Press.)

Washington, Feb. 18.—President Wilson sent for Chairman Clark, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, today, and the conferred for half an hour. Mr. Clark declined to say what had been discussed, but it was said at the White House that the President expressed deep interest in an early decision on the application of the eastern railroads for higher freight rates. Chairman Clark believes that if the railroads will furnish their side of the case promptly, a decision will be forthcoming soon. The President does not intend to interfere in the hearings now going on. It is believed that in addition to the railroad situation the President discussed general business conditions with Mr. Clark.

SWIMMERS' CORNER

With the 220-yard metropolitan championship swung out of the way the attention of followers of aquatics is now directed to the 500-yard championship, which this year will be held in Madison Square Garden during the week of the Sportsmen's Show, February 21 to 27. Nicholas Nerich and Bud Goodwin are sure to be formidable contestants for the honors.

Now that it is dennitely known that Otto Wahle, the genial czar of the A. A. U. swimming branch, is to conduct the water sports at the Sportsmen's Show in Madison Square Garden the week of February 21 to 27, a rush for applications from swimmers in all parts of the East all eager to enter the contests, may be expected. All the show's water sports program needed to insure its success was the entrance of Otto in the field.

The present holder of the title in the metropolitan 500-yard championship is N. T. Nerich, of the New York A. C. Should the event be held in the Garden Nerich will defend his title.

One of the sure entrants in fancy diving competitions will Arthur McAleenan, the present A. U. national champion. He has announced his willingness to defend his title against all comers or appear merely in an exhibition.

Feeling that every man should know how to swim the Wesleyan faculty has just adopted a regulation making a course in swimming compulsory. Classes are to be conducted daily by a regular swimming instructor and attendance will be marked as in the regular courses in the curriculum, credit being given toward the students' diplomas for the time thus spent. More than one-third of the men in college are unable to swim, according to a census recently made among the student body, and all these in consequence will be obliged to use the pool regularly each week.

THE DAILY PRESS IN LINCOLN will be found on sale or delivered to any address every afternoon by E. Purvis newsdealer.

CIVIC ASSOCIATION CONCERT PLEASES

Lotus Glee Club and "Maurice" Entertain An Appreciative Audience.

A capacity audience attended the first annual concert of the West End Civic Association held in the auditorium of the Washington public school last night and enjoyed an excellent program of music and sleight-of-hand entertainment. The Lotus Glee Club furnished the principal part of the program for the large gathering and the numbers given were cause for much enthusiastic applause. Each of the singers as well as the quartet responded to encores and the selections were well received by an appreciative audience.

"Maurice," a comedy magician of New York, presented many mystifying "stunts" with paraphernalia he had especially prepared for the occasion. These included many novelties.

The event was a marked success in every way and the civic organization was enthusiastic over the result of their efforts.

Barton K. Davis was chairman of the entertainment committee, and was assisted by Thomas C. Vail, William W. Robisonn, William J. Boyd, John J. Carroll, A. R. Parkhurst, Jr., Den J. Galbraith, J. Stephen Higham, Frank S. Power, George H. Fisher, Jr., David L. Coleman, Dr. P. B. Cregar and Joseph Edgar, Jr.

HE SPOKE OF LAND WHERE CUSTOM RULES

John M. Whiton Gives Interesting Lecture on "India" at Hope Chapel.

Under the auspices of the Men's Club of Hope chapel, a lecture on "The Far East" was delivered last night, by John M. Whiton, superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Congregational church, of this city. The lecture was well attended. The speaker spoke particularly of India, in which eastern country he has travelled extensively, referring to it as a land where custom rules, where there are great congregations of dusky people, whose love of barbaric display and costumes, handsome and bizarre, is surprising.

The development of the agricultural life of India, the speaker declared to be greatly handicapped by the unwillingness of the people, even the very poor, to labor in the fields and there is a lack of interest as regards the adoption of modern ideas of agriculture and in the use of modern farm machinery of all sorts. He also described, in a vivid manner, the religious features of life among the people of India. The lecture was highly entertaining and instructive. Numerous stereopticon slides were shown the audience, most of which depicted scenes taken from life in China and in Japan. Refreshments were served after the lecture and a "smoker" was held.

ELEVEN CANDIDATES ARE INITIATED

Freedom Castle Entertains Large Delegation From Perth Amboy Castle.

Seven candidates, brought to the lodge rooms of Freedom Castle, No. 42, Order of Knights of the Golden Eagle, of this city, by brethren of Halcyon Castle, No 35, Knights of the Golden Eagle, of Perth Amboy, were given three degrees last night by the team of the local castle. Four of their own candidates also had the three degrees conferred upon them. The occasion was enjoyable in every way. Thirty lodge members from the Perth Amboy organization were present and there was a large gathering of local members of the order to witness the ceremonies attendant upon the conferring of the degrees on the eleven candidates.

The distinguished guests present last night were Grand Chief Walton Chew, of Pitman Grove, and Vice Grand Chief John D. F. Morgan, of Camden. After the initiation of the candidates, refreshments were served and several impromptu speeches were made.

So well does the degree team of Freedom Castle, No. 42, of the Order of Golden Eagles do its work that the team has been invited to confer the degrees on a large number of candidates who are to be taken into the order in Camden, early in April. It is expected that degrees will be conferred on fully one hundred candidates at that time from all parts of the State.

APPROPRIATE $26,000 FOR SCHOOL ADDITIONS

Taxpayers of Dunellen Approve One Proposition—Turn Down Another.

Taxpayers of Dunellen, by a vote of 60 to 19, voted last night to appropriate $26,000 for the remodeling of four rooms of the Lincoln School and for the erection of a four-room addition to the present building. Plans for the contemplated improvements have already been approved by the State Board of Education. Work will be begun early this spring.

The meeting was in the nature of a special school election, held in the Whittier School. J. Newton Apgar was chairman, and A. J. Hamley, secretary. There were numerous women voters in the assemblage of whom seemed to take great interest in the proposition recently advanced to the taxpayers refused to entertain the proposition recently advanced to build a two-room addition to the Whittier School at an estimated cost of $7,000. This project was abandoned it is believed because of the lack of funds in the borough treasury and owing to the necessity for a large expenditure for the sewer project within a comparatively short time.

TEAMS IN FINE FORM

Biggest Basketball Game of the Season Will Be Staged in the Association Rendezvous Tomorrow Afternoon.

Both the Plainfield and North Plainfield High School basketball teams, rivals for the interscholastic title which will be decided on the Y. M. C. A. court tomorrow afternoon, held sixty minute workouts on the association court yesterday afternoon under the direction of their respective coaches and rumor has it that everyone of the ten men selected to start the battle are in the pink of condition. When the last game was played Dunning and Abrams, of North Plainfield were on the sick list and barely able to get around prior to the contest, but both of these regulars have rounded back into shape and will be in their best form tomorrow afternoon, as evidenced by their playing in practise yesterday.

North Plainfield took the floor first and under the direction of Paul Collier, their coach, the players had a forty-five minute shooting drill and then put in fifteen minutes of hard scrimmage work. The regulars stayed in the fray during the entire quarter of an hour while two teams of substitutes were used to furnish opposition.

Plainfield's practise was vastly different and included scrimmage work almost exclusively. Jack Martin and Ralph Patch, the P. H. S. coaches, spent only ten minutes in shooting and the other forty were put to use in scrimmage work. Although pretty well fatigued after the gruelling drill the local athletes appeared to be in the best of physical condition and a fine corps of substitutes will be held in reserve by the coaches.

The game will be called promptly at 3:30 o'clock and it behooves those who are particularly anxious to get in to be on deck early as Physical Director Ostlin has had instructions from Fire Chief Doane to limit the number of spectators and as soon as the gallery and playing floor is comfortably filled the doors will be closed.

A special premium has been placed on gallery seats and the cheering factions of the two schools have engaged their respective blocks of seats for the occasion. The cheer leaders have been rehearsing a set of noisy howls and the rivalry between the two factions is at a high ebb just at present.

The teams will start the game with the following personnels:

PLAINFIELD — N. PLAINFIELD.
Hetfield ..... Love — forward
Snyder ..... Van Mater — forward
Gavett ..... Dunning — centre
Peacock ..... Burner — guard
Rosenson ..... Abrams — guard

$50,000 FOR OLYMPICS.

Berlin, Feb. 18.—By a considerable majority, the German Imperial Parliament yesterday granted an appropriation of $50,000 for the Olympic games to be held here in 1916. The appropriation had at first been rejected by the Budget Committee on January 15, but on this occasion the leaders of the Clerical Party gave their followers freedom of action in the matter, and all except a few of them voted in favor of the appropriation.

Y. M. H. A. BASKETBALL TEAM PLAN FOR GAME

The New Brunswick Young Men's Hebrew Association will travel to this city tomorrow night where they will be entertained by the fast local Y. M. H. A. The last time these two aggregations came together the Plainfielders came home victorious by a one point margin but the Brunswicks are confident that when they come to Plainfield this week, they will make the Plainfielders bow to them and thus even the series. The Brunswick Y. M. H. A. has been practicing hard for the last few weeks to get in trim and hope to defeat the Plainfield quintet by a comfortable margin.

A large crowd of rooters will accompany the team to this city. The Plainfielders feel confident that playing on their own court they will be able to play circles around the New Brunswickers.

A fast preliminary game will be played by the Plainfield Y. M. H. A. Juniors and the Perth Amboy Y. M. H. A. Juniors, which will draw a large crowd from the Facemaking City down the river. The quintets seem to be evenly matched.

The big game will furnish the fireworks of the evening. The teams will likely lineup as follows.

N. B. Y. M. H. A.		P. Y. M. H. A.
L. Freedman	right forward	Shrager
Spritzer	left forward	B. Rosenson

OFFICIALS SELECTED FOR CHAMPIONSHIP COURT MATCH

It was announced this morning that Ralph E. Martin, principal of the Westfield High School, had been secured to act in the capacity of umpire at the interscholastic league championship match on the Y. M. C. A. court tomorrow afternoon, and McNamee will referee. Martin is a familiar official in local basketball circles and until recently he was the central figure in all of the championship matches. Some hitch occurred yesterday afternoon over the selection of an umpire as Martin has always acted as a referee and it was thought likely that he would refuse to act as second man. The financial end of the deal was satisfactory to him, however, and he consented to be on hand for the big game.

At a conference of the managers and coaches of the two teams held late yesterday, final preparations were made for the third game and it was decided that scorers and timers representing both factions would officiate tomorrow, although no definite officials were named at that time. It was also decided to call the game at 4 o'clock.

WHY MURPHY FIRED JOHNNY EVERS.

President Murphy, of the Chicago club, fired Manager John Evers for an alleged bone-headed play to which Murphy charges the loss of the post-season series to the White Sox.

The score was 0 to 0 with the Cubs at bat in the last half of the ninth inning. Archer, a comparatively slow runner, opened with a base hit. Evers had two slower men, Bresnahan and Needham, as reserve catchers, and three players faster than Archer on the bench. Murphy says Evers should have taken Archer out and sent a faster man to first. Cheney had pitched nine innings and held the Sox scoreless. Murphy says Evers should have sent a substitute to bat for Cheney. Cheney is a good bunter, a fair hitter, and was pitching well. Should Evers have made the change?

"Sportdom Tips"

THAT OFFICIAL QUESTION

During the past few days many erroneous reports have been circulated concerning that third and deciding game of the Interscholastic Basketball League which will be pulled off on the Y. M. C. A. court tomorrow afternoon and the officiating stunt is occupying more space and causing more comment than the game itself. Martin, of Westfield; Rimmer, of Hope Chapel; and Lidgate, of Scotch Plains, are three of the aspirants to the job and although some of the group mentioned in the matter is campaigning for the task various misleading reports have been spread each day concerning the duo that will finally land the job. All three of these men are competent to handle the all important contest either from an umpire position or from the central position and it matters little just at present what couple will finally be entrusted with the task. A couple of those mentioned in connection with the officiating task have been objects of wealth of comment, both favorable and unfavorable, and for the most part these criticisms have had no foundation.

A GRAND FINALE.

Tomorrow will wind up another season of Interscholastic League basketball and which ever way the big contest ends tomorrow afternoon it will put a grand finale on one of the best seasons of interscholastic competition held in recent years. Last year Plainfield won the third and deciding contest in Saengerbund Hall after an overtime period of play and the locals are out to duplicate their feat this season although not along the same strenuous lines. Last season the competition was decidedly closer than this year and the fact that Plainfield and North Plainfield won their initial victories on their home courts was only in keeping with precedent. This season, however, North Plainfield crossed the brook and walloped Plainfield on the latter's home court and Plainfield turned around and sprang the surprise of the season in whipping the boroughites on a court on which they have been well nigh invincible all season. This sudden turn in affairs has led an interesting aspect to the third game and the crowd that will attend the big show tomorrow afternoon will without doubt be the largest ever housed in the association "gym."

BASEBALL PROSPECTS.

Veteran material will play a prominent part in the diamond competition of all three local schools during the coming season if early prospects may be taken as a criterion. Leal School has seven or eight old timers, Plainfield has at least six and North Plainfield is fluent with veterans and substitutes who starred last year. An interscholastic cup race this year would induce some better rivalry than was evidenced last season and another league will no doubt be formed between Plainfield and North Plainfield High Schools and Leal School. The private school youths as yet have no home field on which to play but Hyde Oval in the borough and Parker Field would make ideal playing grounds for the school boy league. Hyde Oval will be put in excellent condition before the season opens and will probably rival Parker Field for advantages as the result of a little hard work on the part of Captain Ralph Smalley and his men.

SIMMONS, WHO PLAYED HERE LAST YEAR, SIGNED BY FEDS

George Simmons, a teammate of Jack Martin's who made a big hit with the local fans here last season when he appeared with the All-Star team led by Martin in two games with the Plainfield baseball team, has been corraled by the Federal League. Simmons was signed by Otto Knabe, manager of the Baltimore team and attached his signature to a three-year contract calling for $4,000 per season. On signing, $2,000 was turned over to the slugging infielder. These are much better terms than Rochester, with whom he played last year, could afford to offer.

Last year Simmons played in 125 games at second base, finishing eighteenth in the list with a percentage of .932. He covered first base in twenty-five games and was nineteenth, his percentage being .977. But it was as a wielder of the bludgeon that he shone, batting .339 in 150 games, which topped the league. Simmons always was a great hitter and that was what attracted Knabe to him.

ANNUAL Y. W. C. A. GAME WITH TRENTON IS ARRANGED

As has been the annual custom for the past few years, the Y. W. C. A. basketball team will go to Trenton Saturday night to play the Association quintet of that place in the yearly out-of-town contest. Last year and the year previous, Trenton succeeded in nabbing the two engagements staged between the local and Capitol city rivals and the locals are naturally out to turn the tables on this occasion.

Strengthened by the addition of Miss Clara Smith, the Association team will go to Trenton prepared for a victory and while the home five will have practically the same stellar outfit as appeared here last season and will have the added advantage of playing on their home court the locals are confident of turning the tables.

LOCAL LEAGUE GAME.

Joe Berger and Joseph Blackburne are to fight it out for the regular job at second base for the Chicago White Sox.

The Kansas State League has been reorganized, with Great Bend, Salina, Hutchinson, Newton, Clay Center and Emporia making up the circuit.

Contrary to published reports, Catcher "Gabby" Street did not jump to the Federals. The former battery-mate of Walter Johnson has signed with the Chattanooga Southern League team.

George Graham the new president of the Tri-State League, believes in the strict enforcement of a monthly salary limit. At the same time he advocates abolishing the individual limit of $175 a month.

The Louisville club of the American Association, will pitch its training camp this spring at Fort Myers, Fla. This will be the first time the Colonels have ever journeyed to the South for spring practice.

The flop of "Hap" Myers to the Federal League cost the Boston Braves $3,500. Boston traded Myers to Rochester for Quinn and Schmidt and agreed to pay Rochester $3,500 if Myers was not delivered.

Pitcher "Big Ed" Walsh was the first member of the White Sox to report at Paso Robles, Cal., where the Chicago team is to get into condition this year. Ed believes he is due for a great year on the mound.

WITH THE BOXERS

Georges Carpentier, the French champion, has declined an offer to meet Eddie McGoorty.

February 23 has been selected as the date for the Leo Houck-Willie Meehan bout at San Francisco.

Followers of the boxing game in Texas will make an effort to have a new boxing law passed in that State.

Manager Aleck McLean hopes to sign up Gilbert Gallant for another match in San Francisco this month.

Eddie Campi, the Los Angeles boxer, is to quit the bantamweight ranks as he can no longer make the weight in good condition.

George Chip, the Scranton whale, will start another boxing campaign February 24. On that date he is to tackle Gus Christie in Pittsburgh.

GORE'S FATE IS NOW UP TO JURY

Mrs. Bond Weeps as Her Lawyer Pleads.

SENATOR NOT DISTURBED

Sat Motionless During a Scathing Denunciation of Accused's Attorney. Judge In Charge Tells Jury to Carefully Weigh All of the Evidence.

Oklahoma City, Okla, Feb. 18.—The fate of United States Senator T. P. Gore, who is being sued by Mrs. Minnie E. Bond for $50,000 damages for alleged indignities, now rests with the jury. Mrs. Bond wept as her attorney pleaded with the jury.

Mrs. Gore, wife of the senator, leaned forward, smiling as if to scorn, as the woman who accused her husband of attacking her in a Washington hotel brushed the tears from her eyes.

Giddings contrasted Mrs. Gore and Mrs. Bond.

"Look at these two women," he said, pointing first at Mrs. Bond then Mrs. Gore. "One in her modest suit of black, the other in all her finery."

Senator Gore sat motionless through a scathing denunciation of Mrs. Bond's lawyer. Occasionally he brushed the knob of his heavy cane across his lips or tapped himself on the forehead. Mrs. Gore frequently whispered comments to John M. Young, defense lawyer.

This dramatic scene occurred during the summing up in the case which reached the jury stage. After attorneys for both the plaintiff and defense rested, Judge Clark immediately began the reading of his instructions to the jury.

Following Judge Clark's instructions to the jury arguments were started and the case was given to the jury.

Telegrams of Sympathy.

Decision by both the plaintiff and defense to rest their case eliminated the testimony of James R. Jacobs, one of the Oklahoma men who entered the room in the Washington hotel at the time the senator and Mrs. Bond were there, and who was expected to be one of the plaintiff's chief witnesses.

Scores of telegrams were received by Senator Gore from friends all over the country, expressing sympathy and confidence in him. A characteristic message was from L. M. Nichols of Bristow, Okla., who said:

"This is no time for a pillow fight. Turn on the hot stuff."

The court instructed the jury to judge the evidence and credibility of the witnesses, both for the plaintiff and defendant. Judge Clark referred to the alleged conspiracy against the senator, and the jury was told that if there was a conspiracy, and it was known to Mrs. Bond, then she was a party to it and was not entitled to recover damages.

As to character, the instructions said the previous character of Mrs Bond or Senator Gore had no bearing on the case. The court said if the jury believed an attack was attempted, then the verdict should be for the plaintiff. If there was no attempt, or if there was a conspiracy in which Mrs. Bond was a party, then the verdict must be for the defendant, the court held.

SOLEMN RITES OVER BACON.

Simplicity Marked Funeral Services In Senate Chamber.

Washington, Feb. 18.—In the ornate chamber in which most of his triumphs were gained final tribute was paid to Augustus O. Bacon, late United States senator from Georgia. There was no eulogy, no flowers, no music; just the solemn, simple funeral service of the Episcopal church, to which the dead statesman belonged. The prayer was by the Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman chaplain of the senate; the regular ritualistic funeral service was read by the Right Rev. Alfred Harding, Protestant Episcopal bishop of Washington, and the chaplain pronounced the final benediction.

The seats on the floor had been reserved for the members of the senate and house, the supreme court and the admiral of the navy and the chief of staff of the army, the cabinet and members of the diplomatic corps. In addition the regents and secretary of the Smithsonian institution were present.

HANG UNCONSCIOUS MAN.

Calgary Authorities Wouldn't Wait For Murderer to Recover.

Calgary, Alberta, Feb. 18.—After having been in a state of coma for three days William Jasper Collins was hanged in the local jail yard without regaining consciousness. Collins confessed to killing J. T. Benson, a farmer for whom he worked. Later he repudiated the confession. The minister of justice refused a stay of execution.

President at Work Again.

Washington, Feb. 18.—President Wilson was back at his desk looking a little pale and with a slight huskiness in his throat as a result of his recent cold. He was anxious to resume his regular workday program, including a cabinet meeting, but Dr. Grayson forbade him going out of doors.

FIVE LOST IN GALE; 3 FROZEN IN RIGGING

Eight Others Are Rescued by Life Savers.

Wellfleet, Mass., Feb. 18.—Five men lost their lives, one was seriously injured and eight are in a critical condition from frostbite and exposure in the wreck of the Italian bark Castagnia, which went ashore in a blizzard on Cape Cod, a mile and a half south of the Cahoon's Hollow life saving station. The vessel is slowly breaking up under the pounding of the waves, with the bodies of three men frozen in the rigging where they were lashed.

Captain Garver, in command of the bark, was washed overboard and drowned. Three sailors froze to death in the rigging and one died of exposure in the lifeboat in which the first mate and seven seamen were being rescued by life saving crews. Captain Tobin of the Cahoon's Hollow life saving station was crushed and seriously hurt by a lifeboat which was hurled back upon the beach by a wave when an attempt was made to launch it. The loss of life was the largest in a wreck on Cape Cod in twelve years.

The Castagnia, bound from Montevideo to Boston with a cargo of phosphate rock, struck the bar in a blinding snowstorm which accompanied a sixty mile gale. The vessel struck heavily, and the great waves pounded her for hours, washing away almost all the superstructure and sending hundreds of tons of water along the deck every minute. Captain Garvar ordered his men aloft, and each tied himself firmly in the spars.

There they stayed for hours in the driving blizzard, with the vessel slowly going to pieces beneath them. At dawn the beach patrol sighted the stranded vessel only 300 yards off shore. The combined life saving crews of the Nauset and Cahoon's Hollow stations were immediately summoned.

MRS. BUFFUM IS AMUSED.

Woman Accused of Murder Amused by Prospective Juror's Answer.

Little Valley, N. Y., Feb. 18.—As the work of selecting a jury to try Mrs. Cynthia Buffum, charged with having poisoned her husband in order that she might be free to marry Ernest Frahm, a farm hand, proceeded, the accused woman took a lively interest in the questioning of prospective jurors. She laughed heartily when James Phillips gave his age as twenty-three and said he was married and had five children, the oldest thirteen years. Phillips then corrected himself, saying he was thirty-eight years old.

Mrs. Buffum's attorneys have decided they will enter no plea of insanity. It is understood that the accused woman will not be forced to testify against Frahm, who is also charged with murder. She exacted this promise before appearing before the grand jury.

Destruction of Espinosa With Reports of Loss of Lives.

Madrid, Feb. 18.—Fire destroyed the village of Espinosa de los Caballeros, in the province of Avila, and dispatches refer indefinitely to numerous dead and injured. The flames broke out in the dead of night and were fanned by a strong wind until every house in the place was on fire.

Espinosa de los Caballeros is a small agricultural center.

NEEDLEWORK

MARGARET LAWRENCE

A SMART EMBROIDERED BLOUSE

With warm weather comes the need of new washable waists, and this year the finest imported lingerie blouses are made of crêpe voil or batiste, finished with narrow embroidered collars and cuffs of the material. Most of these blouses open in the front and have either kimono or raglan sleeves. The model illustrated may be cut by pattern 7715, which comes in sizes 32 to 42, requiring 3¼ yards of 36-inch material for size 36. The transfer pattern 14664, is a very simple design, characteristic of the French imported waists, yet so simple that any home needleworker can embroider it. The pattern includes transfers for stamping the collar, cuffs, fronts and two pretty wreath motifs which may be used on the sleeves or back. The roses and wreaths should be developed in solid work and seed-stitch; the bow knots in outline, and succeeding with the small flowers in either solid work or eyelets. For a blouse as this, made of crêpe de Chine, handkerchief linen, batiste or voile, would be appropriate for wear with any suit, and will be very attractive in midsummer, with separate skirts of white serge or ratine.

Blouse pattern 7715, and transfer pattern 14664, can be supplied to readers on receipt of price, 15 cents each.

Some Cookery Suggestions

GELATIN JELLIES.

JELLIES made with gelatin and served with whipped cream are dainty and wholesome desserts for the season. They may be flavored to suit the taste. They may be made in large or small molds and should be served in glass dishes.

Lemon Jelly.—Soak one box gelatin in one pint cold water two minutes; add two pints boiling water, one and one-half cupfuls sugar and stir until dissolved; add juice of three lemons. Strain through jelly bag into molds.

A Handsome Dessert.

Fruit Jelly.—First make plain lemon jelly, adding sugar according to the fruit to be used. When beginning to set add bananas, sliced thin; white grapes, oranges cut in small pieces and figs. Serve with whipped cream or a thin custard.

Orange Jelly.—Soak one-half box of gelatin in one-half cupful of cold water for three minutes. Dissolve with one cupful of boiling water, stir well, add one cupful of sugar and when that dissolves put in one pint of orange juice and the juice of a lemon. Mix thoroughly.

Leftover Coffee.

Coffee Jelly.—Use two cupfuls of clear, strong coffee, one cupful of sugar, one cupful of boiling water, one and one-half cupfuls of cold water and one-half box of gelatin. Let the gelatin soak for three minutes in the cold water, stir the sugar into it and pour over it the boiling water and coffee; strain it into mold. When it has become cold turn it into a pretty dish. Let it get perfectly cold and serve with whipped cream.

A Cereal Dainty.

Farina Jelly.—Heat one pint of milk and one tablespoonful of farina over a slow fire until the grain softens and thickens the milk, stirring occasionally. Put one-half box of gelatin to soak in half a cupful of cold water. Stir the gelatin into the milk and farina, mix well, add one cupful powdered sugar, stir again and set away to cool. When it begins to thicken whip one quart of cream and stir it into the gelatin and farina mixture until smooth and light. Flavor with the strained juice of one orange and turn into one large mold or a number of small ones. This jelly is good for fever patients. If a mild stimulant is ordered or needed it may be flavored with one-half cupful of very good sherry.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

Billy Beaver's Home For His Bride.

He Worked Busily.

"I SUPPOSE," said daddy, "the most industrious and capable little animal is the beaver, for he can even help grownup men. When men are about to build bridges and they see that beavers are near by they are delighted, for they know beavers enjoy working and will help them greatly with the bridge building, and they're such a little animal, too, that it is really wonderful how much they can do.

"Billy Beaver had just asked Miss Jennie Beaver to marry him, and as she had consented Billy wanted to build a fine new house for their home. So he wandered all over the woods seeing where he thought the best place would be to have it. Of course he also wanted to be near some water, for the beaver loves swimming, and he uses the mud at the bottom of lakes and ponds to help him with his building. So at last he settled on the spot. It was in a lovely part of the woods where there were huge pine trees, and near by was a narrow river with mossy banks on either side where he could make plenty of holes in which to hide if he thought he was either being watched or disturbed. Finally he set to work. He first began by burrowing a tree. He arranged to burrow from a certain side so it would fall in the opposite direction, for beavers always arrange in which direction a tree will fall. They are very fussy about the exact spot they want the tree to be, and so they take all this care. Billy Beaver went into the river and dug up some mud. He carried it on his tail and swam to the bank with it. Then he climbed up the bank and left the mud on one side of the tree. This he did again and again, for he wanted plenty of mud to stand on while working. Of course Billy was very small, and he had picked out a huge tree to burrow.

"At last, though, after days and days of very hard work the tree began to waver, and in a few more days down it fell. Next Billy fixed the inside of his house in the hollow of the tree, and with lots and lots of moss and mud he made it very comfortable, according to his idea of comfort.

"Soon the day came for Jennie Beaver to see her new home, and Billy was wild with excitement wondering how she would like it. Billy wasn't conceited.

"But Billy could not help being a little proud of his new home, for he had planned it and worked over it with might and main to make it a lovely home.

"When Jennie Beaver arrived Billy could hardly wait to hear what she would say.

"'Oh,' she exclaimed, 'I think it's the most marvelous home I've ever seen, and I think you are the most wonderful beaver!'

"So Billy was well rewarded for his hard work, and he felt himself to be a very lucky beaver."

GOVERNMENT TELLS USES OF CORNMEAL

Agricultural Department Bulletin Contains Many Recipes for Housewives.

A bulletin which has just been issued by the United States Department of Agriculture is of much interest to housewives who are looking for new dishes. It tells of the varied uses to which cornmeal can be put. The peculiar consistency of cornmeal, which many houewives have found a disadvantage under some circumstances, is, according to the new farmer bulletin (No. 565), a great advantage in making griddle cakes or waffles, for it renders them very tender. Among the recipes which the bulletin recommends are the following:

Corn-Meal Pancakes.

2 cups flour.
½-cup corn meal.
1½ tablespoons baking powder.
1⅛ teaspoons salt.
One-third cup sugar.
1⅛ cups boiling water.
1¼ cups milk.
1 egg.

Add meal to boiling water and boil 5 minutes; turn into bowl, add milk and remaining dry ingredients mixed and sifted, then the egg well beaten, and butter. Cook on a greased griddle.

Corn-Meal and Wheat Waffles.

1½ cups water.
½ cup white cornmeal.
1½ cups milk.
3 cups flour.
3 tablespoons sugar.
1¼ tablespoons baking powder.
1½ teaspoons salt.
Yolks 2 eggs.
Whites 2 eggs.
2 tablespoons melted butter.

Cook the meal in boiling water 20 minutes; add milk, dry ingredients mixed and sifted, yolks of eggs well beaten, butter and whites of eggs beaten stiff. Cook on a greased waffle iron.

There is also a large variety of popular and very nutritious puddings that may be made with cornmeal although rice is probably more frequently used. The Department's experts in nutrition suggest that the housewife try these:

Indian Pudding.

5 cups milk.
One-third cup cornmeal.
½ cup molasses.
1 teaspoon salt.
1 teaspoon ginger.

Cook milk and meal in a double boiler 20 minutes; add molasses salt, and ginger; pour into buttered pudding dish and bake 2 hours in slow oven; serve with cream.

Corn-Meal and Fig Pudding.

1 cup cornmeal.
1 cup molasses.
6 cups milk (or 4 of milk and 2 of cream.)
1 cup finely chopped figs.
2 eggs.
1 teaspoon salt.

Cook the cornmeal with 4 cups of the milk, add the figs and salt. When the mixture is cool, add the eggs well beaten. Pour into a buttered pudding dish and bake in a moderate oven for 3 hours or more. When partly cooked add the remainder of the milk without stirring the pudding.

Corn-Meal and Apple Pudding.

For the figs in the above recipe substitute a pint of finely sliced or chopped sweet apples.

It is often possible to substitute cornmeal for part of the flour in making cakes. In some cases there is no special advantage in using it but it is well to know that it can be used in emergencies. In making doughnuts, however, there is a decided advantage in substituting cornmeal for part of the flour, for doughnuts so made are more likely to be tender.

Indian Meal Doughnuts.

Three-fourths cup milk.
1½ cups very fine white cornmeal.
1¼ cups wheat flour.
One-fourth cup butter.
Three-fourths cup sugar.
2 eggs well beaten.
1 teaspoon cinnamon.
2 teaspoons baking powder.
1 level teaspoon salt.

Put milk and meal into a double boiler and heat together for about 10 minutes. Add the butter and sugar to the meal. Sift together the wheat flour, baking powder, cinnamon, and salt. Add these and the eggs to the meal. Roll out on a well-floured board; cut into the desired shapes; fry in deep fat; drain and roll in powdered sugar.

Corn meal, because it requires long cooking, is peculiarly adaptable for preparation in the fireless cooker. Also, like all finely divided foods which are cooked in water, it can easily be brought to a uniformly high temperature, and there is no danger, as there is in cooking large pieces of meat, for example, that some parts will be cool when the food is put into the cooker. The large amount of water with which it is combined is also of advantage, for water has a very high specific heat, and for this reason cools off comparatively slowly. In cooking cornmeal in the fireless cooker, 5 hours at least should be allowed.

1 cup meal.
1 teaspoon salt.
4½ cups water, milk, or milk and water.

Mix the ingredients and bring them to the boiling point. Place the pail in the cooker and leave for from 5 to 10 hours. If the pail holding the mush is set into another pail of hot water before being placed in the cooker, the heat will be retained better, but whether this is necessary or not depends on the efficiency of the cooker.

The new bulletin just issued, which gives these recipes and others is entitled: "Corn Meal as a Food and Ways of Using It," and may be had free upon application to the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

8023

Every woman who admires the simple one-piece dress that is so convenient and becoming will be interested in this model, No. 8023. It is cut in drop-shoulder style, closes at the side front, has a small square collar and a full length sleeve. The skirt is a six gored design. Eponge, ratine or serge would any of them make up to advantage and be suitable for street wear. A dark blue or gray ratine with collar and cuffs of brightly colored silk eponge would be most pleasing.

In finishing the hem of a heavy material of this sort, instead of turning the upper edge under it may be pinked before stitching. This gives a smooth, neat finish.

To make this dress in size 36 it requires 4¾ yards of 36 inch material.

The pattern comes in 8 sizes; 34 to 48.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, measuring over the fullest part of the bust for dimensions.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

CHAPTER XIX.

A Man From the Dark.

FOR fully five seconds Mr. Magee and the man with whom he had collided stood facing each other on the balcony. The identical moon of the summer romances now hung in the sky, and in its white glare Baldpate mountain glittered like a Christmas card.

"A lucky chance," said Mr. Magee. "You're a man I've been longing to meet, especially since the professor left his window open this afternoon."

"Indeed!" replied the other calmly. "May I ask what you want of me?"

"Certainly!" Mr. Magee laughed. "A little package. I think it's in your pocket at this minute. A package no bigger than a man's hand."

The stranger made no reply, but looked quickly about over his shoulder at the path along which he had come and then past Mr. Magee at the road that led to freedom.

"I think it's in your pocket," repeated Mr. Magee, "and I'm going to find out."

"I haven't time to argue with you," said the holder of the seventh key. His voice was cold, calculating, harsh. "Get out of my way and let me pass or"—

"Or what?" asked Billy Magee.

He watched the man lunge toward him in the moonlight. He saw the fist that had the night before been the Waterloo of Mr. Max and the mayor start on a swift, true course for his head. Quickly he dodged to one side and closed with his opponent.

Back and forth through the snow they ploughed, panting, grappling, straining. Mr. Magee soon realized that his adversary was no weakling. He was forced to call into play muscles he had not used in what seemed ages—not since he sported of an afternoon in a rather odorous college gymnasium. In moonlight and shadow, up and down, they reeled, staggered, stumbled, the sole jarring notes in that picture of Baldpate on a quiet winter's night.

"You queered the game last time," muttered the stranger. "But you'll never queer it again."

Mr. Magee saved his breath. Together they crashed against the side of the inn. Together they squirmed away across the balcony to the railing. Still back and forth, now in the moonlight, now in shadow, wildly they fought. Once Mr. Magee felt his feet slip from beneath him, but caught himself in time. His strength was going—surely—quickly. Then suddenly his opponent seemed to weaken in his grip. With a supreme effort Magee forced him down upon the balcony floor and tumbled on top of him. He felt the chill of the snow under his knees and its wetness in his cuffs.

"Now!" he cried to himself.

The other still struggled desperately. But his struggle was without success, for deftly Billy Magee drew from his pocket the precious package about which there had been so much debate on Baldpate mountain. He clasped it close, rose and ran. In another second he was inside No. 7 and had lighted a candle at the blazing logs.

Once more he examined that closely packed little bundle; once more he found it rich in greenbacks. Assuredly it was the greatly desired thing he had fought for the night before. He had it again. And this time, he told himself, he would not lose sight of it until he had placed it in the hands of the girl of the station.

The dark shadow of the man he had just robbed was hovering at his windows. Magee turned hastily to the door. As he did so it opened and Hayden entered. He carried a pistol in his hand; his face was hard, cruel, determined; his usually expressionless eyes lighted with pleasure as they fell on the package in Mr. Magee's possession.

"It seems I'm just in time," he said, "to prevent highway robbery."

"You think so?" asked Magee.

"See here, young man," remarked Hayden, glancing nervously over his shoulder. "I can't waste any time in talk. Does that money belong to you? No. Well, it does belong to me. I'm going to have it. Don't think I'm afraid to shoot to get it. The law permits a man to fire on the thief who tries to fleece him."

"The law, did you say?" laughed Billy Magee. "I wouldn't drag the law into this if I were you, Mr. Hayden. I'm sure it has no connection with events on Baldpate mountain. You would be the last to want its attention to be directed here. I've got this money and I'm going to keep it."

Hayden considered a brief moment and then swore under his breath.

"You're right," he said. "I'm not going to shoot. But there are other ways, you whippersnapper"— He dropped the revolver into his pocket and sprang forward. For the second time within ten minutes Mr. Magee steadied himself for conflict.

But Hayden stopped. Some one had entered the room through the window behind Magee. In the dim light of the candle Magee saw Hayden's face g white, his lips twitch, his eyes glaze with horrible surprise. His arms fel limply to his sides.

"Good God, Kendrick!" he said.

The voice of the man who Billy Magee had but a moment befo struggled on the balcony answered:

"Yes, Hayden. I'm back."

Hayden wet his lips with his tongue

"What—what brought you?" he asked, his voice trailing off weakly on th last word.

"What brought me?" Suddenly, a from a volcano that had long bee cold, fire blazed up in Kendrick's eyes "If a man knew the road from he back home what would it need bring him back?"

Hayden stood with his mouth part open. Almost a grotesque picture o terror he looked in that dim light Then he spoke in an odd, strained tone, more to himself than to any on else:

"I thought you were dead," he said "I told myself you'd never come back Over and over—in the night—I tol myself that. But all the time I knev —I knew you'd come."

A cry—a woman's cry—sounde from just outside the door of No. 7 Into the room came Myra Thornhill Quickly she crossed and took Kendrick's hands in hers.

"David!" she sobbed. "Oh David is it a dream—a wonderful dream?"

Kendrick looked into her eyes, sheepishly at first, then gladly as he saw what was in them. For the ligh there under the tears was such as n man could mistake. Magee saw it Hayden saw it, too, and his voice wa even more lifeless when he spoke.

"Forgive me, David," he said. " didn't mean"—

And then as he saw that Kendri did not listen he turned and walke quietly into the bedroom of No. 7, tak ing no notice of Cargan and Blan who, with the other winter guests o Baldpate, now crowded the doorwa leading to the hall. Hayden closed th bedroom door. Mr. Magee and th others stood silent, wondering. The answer came quickly—the sharp cry o a revolver behind that closed door.

It was Mr. Magee who went into th bedroom. The moonlight streamed i through the low windows and fe brightly on the bed. Across this Hay den lay. Mr. Magee made sure. I was not a pleasant thing to make sur of. Then he took the revolver fro the hand that still clasped it, covere the quiet figure on the bed and stepped back into the outer room

"He—he has killed himself," he said in a low voice, closing the bedroom door behind him.

There was a moment's frightened hush; then the voice of Kendrick rang out:

"Killed himself? I don't understand. Why should he do that? Surely not because—no"— He looked questioningly into the white face of the girl at his side; she only shook her head. "Killed himself," he repeated, like a man wakened from sleep. "I don't understand."

On tiptoe the amateur hermits of Baldpate descended to the hotel office. Mr. Magee saw the eyes of the girl of the station upon him, wide with doubt and alarm. While the others gathered in little groups and talked, he took her to one side.

"When does the next train leave for Reuton?" he asked her.

"In two hours—at 10:30," she replied.

"You must be on it," he told her. "With you will go the $200,000 package. I have it in my pocket now."

She took the news stolidly and made no reply.

"Are you afraid?" asked Magee gently. "You mustn't be. No harm can touch you. I shall stay here and see that no one follows."

"I'm not afraid," she replied. "Just startled, that's all. Did he—did he do it because you took this money—because he was afraid of what would happen?"

"You mean Hayden?" Magee said. "No. This money was not concerned in—his death. That is an affair between Kendrick and him."

"I see," answered the girl slowly. "I'm so glad it wasn't—the money. I couldn't bear it if it were."

"May I call your attention," remarked Magee, "to the fact that the long reign of 'I'm going to' is ended and the rule of 'I've done it' has begun? I've actually got the money. Somehow it doesn't seem to thrill you the way I thought it would."

"But it does—oh, it does!" cried the girl. "I was upset for a moment. It's glorious news. And with you on guard here I'm not afraid to carry it away—down the mountain—and to Reuton. I'll be with you in a moment ready for the journey."

She called Mrs. Norton, and the two went rather timidly upstairs together. Mr. Magee turned to his companions in the room and mentally called their roll. They were all there—the professor, the mayor, Max, Bland, Peters, Miss Thornhill and the newcomer Kendrick, a man prematurely old, grayed at the temples and with a face yellowed by fever. He and the professor were talking earnestly together and now the old man came and stood before Magee.

"I will shoot any one who makes a move."

"Mr. Magee," he said seriously, "I learn from Kendrick that you have in your possession a certain package of money that has been much buffeted about here at Baldpate inn. Now, I suggest—no, I demand"—

"Pardon me, professor," Mr. Magee interrupted. "I have something to suggest, even to demand. It is that you and every one else present select a chair and sit down. I suggest, though I do not demand, that you pick comfortable chairs, for a vigil that you are about to begin will prove a long one."

"What do you mean?" asked the mayor of Reuton, coming militantly to Professor Bolton's side.

Magee did not reply. Miss Norton and her mother came dowsstairs, the former wrapped in a great coat. She stood on the bottom step, her cheeks flushed, her eyes ablaze. Mr. Magee, going to her side, reflected that she looked charming and wonderful and wished he had time to admire, but he hadn't. He took from one pocket the pistol he had removed from the hand of Hayden; from the other the celebrated package of money.

"I warn you all," he said, "I will shoot any one who makes a move for this bundle. Miss Norton is going to take it away with her. She is to catch the 10:30 train for Reuton. The train arrives at its destination at 12. Much as it pains me to say it, no one will leave this room before 12:15."

"You crook!" roared Cargan.

Mr. Magee smiled as he put the package in the girl's hand.

"Possibly," he said; "but, Mr. Cargan, the blackness of the kettle always has annoyed the pot."

The little professor of comparative literature stepped forward and stood pompously before Magee.

"One moment," he remarked. "Before you steal this money in front of our very eyes I want to inform you who I am and who I represent here."

"This is no time," replied Magee, "for light talk on the subject of blonds."

"This is the time," said the professor warmly, "for me to tell you that Mr. Kendrick here and myself represent at Baldpate inn the prosecuting attorney of Reuton county. We"—

Cargan, big, red, volcanic, interrupted.

"Drayton!" he bellowed. "Drayton sent you here? The rat! The pup! Why, I made that kid! I put him where he is! He won't dare touch me!"

"Won't he?" returned Professor Bolton. "My dear sir, you are mistaken. Drayton fully intends to prosecute you on the ground that you arranged to pass ordinance No. 45, granting the Suburban railway the privilege of merging with the Civic in exchange for this bribe of $200,000."

"He won't dare!" cried Cargan. "I made him!"

"Before election," said the professor, "I believe he often insisted to you that he would do his duty as he saw it."

"Of course he did," replied Cargan. "But that's what they all say."

"He intends to keep his word."

LOAN SHARK BILL PASSES SENATE

Can Charge Only 3 Per Cent on Small Loans.

SENATORS TO DINE FIELDER

Will Be Held at Atlantic City This Saturday Evening—White's Bill Exempting Traveling Salesmen From Jury Duty Passed—Children Born Out of Wedlock Can Inherit Property.

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 18.—The senate passed Senator Charles M. Egan's "loan shark" bill, which was prepared by the Russell Sage foundation. The bill makes it a misdemeanor to charge more than 3 per cent per month on loans under $300.

The senate also passed Senator Charles A. Rathbun's bill giving children born out of wedlock the right to inherit property. Senator Rathbun, who is a Republican and comes from Morris county, made an ineffectual effort to amend Senator Charles O'Connor Hennessy's concurrent resolution, which would change the state constitution so that amendments could be submitted as often as desired. Mr. Rathbun wanted a proviso that a proposed amendment once defeated could not be resubmitted for five years.

Senator White's bill exempting traveling salesmen from jury duty was passed by the senate.

The senate confirmed these nominations: Public library commissioners, Everett T. Tomlinson, reappointed, and John P. Dullard; fish and game commissioner, Bernard M. Shanley, Essex; manager State hospital, Morris Plains, Charles Hetzel, Essex; county judge of Burlington county, William D. Lippincott.

The senators' dinner to Governor Fielder will be held at the Marlborough-Blenheim, Atlantic City, this Saturday evening, it was decided.

GIRL ACCUSES RECTOR AGAIN.

Appears Against the Rev. Scott Kidder Before Grand Jury.

Jersey City, N. J., Feb. 18.—Ethel Paine, the sixteen-year-old Bayonne girl who accused her rector, the Rev. Scott Kidder of St. John's Episcopal church, of hugging and kissing her, repeated her story before the Hudson county grand jury again. Mrs. Paine, the girl's mother, and Edward M. Griffin, captain of detectives of the Bayonne police force, who said he witnessed the alleged lovemaking, also testified.

The prosecutor's office announced that it believed that a case has been made out against the rector, and, although there may be no indictment returned right away, the case will not be dropped.

The Rev. Mr. Kidder, who was acquitted in the Bayonne police court, is said to be taking the rest cure in a Long Island sanitarium.

MADERO BORN IN JERSEY.

First of Noted Family to Come Into World Outside of Mexico.

East Orange, N. J., Feb. 18.—The first member of the Madero family of Mexico to be born outside of that republic in nearly a century came into the world on Feb. 3, when a boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. Salvador Madero of this city. The boy has been named Herman. Mr. Madero, who is a wealthy mining engineer, is an uncle of the martyred president of Mexico.

So important was the event that the state board of health sent a special delivery letter to Lincoln N. Rowley, registrar of vital statistics, asking him for a certified copy of the birth certificate.

Mr. Madero was the first of the family to take up residence in East Orange following exile from Mexico. Since then six other members of the family have made this city their home.

NEWARK BANKER FALLS DEAD

William Fairlie Was Officer of Wrecked Roseville Trust Company.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 18. — William Fairlie, first vice president of the wrecked Roseville Trust company, dropped dead of heart disease in the Franklin Savings institute, of which he was a director.

It is said that worry over banking affairs broke his heart. Mr. Fairlie was head of Fairlie & Wilson, coal dealers.

AROUND THE STATE.

Because of the snow handicap many residents of Bayonne are without their usual supply of pies.

Mayor Ernest C. Hinck of Montclair has directed that all available idle men be impressed for snow removal.

A conference of the Elizabeth council and board of trade, the Hudson and Union boards of freeholders and the Bayonne chamber of commerce to further plans for the proposed bridge across Newark bay between Bayonne and Elizabethport will be held March 4.

Amos Berhans of Jersey City was a witness before Vice Chancellor Emery at Newark in an accounting suit brought by Mrs. Mary A. Baumont a daughter, with whom he lives, against Mrs. Hattie B Daumont, another daughter, wife of Benjamin Daumont of Ridgewood, and others.

HOUSEWORK, 25c an hour, wanted by handy colored man. 317 Liberty street. 10 28 tf

LITTLE TALKS BY THE WANT-AD MAN

Copyright, 1913, The Int. Syndicate, Baltimore.

No. 60.

LET'S see now: What is a Want Ad? I'm not much on definitions, but how will this do: "An announcement of something desired or something for sale, printed in the Classified columns of a newspaper.

Not a very lengthy or involved definition, that But doesn't it really define? Doesn't it about cover the object of all Want Ad. advertising.

That is all there is to Want Ad. advertising—an announcement of something desired or something for sale. I imagine I can hear you say "How about an ad. for a cook? How about if when I advertise the loss of an article, or when I advertise for typewriting to do at home?"

Well, when you insert an ad. for a cook, you want the services of a competent culinary attendant. Something desired. When you advertise the loss of an article, it is in the hope that the finder will see your ad. and restore the article. Something desired. When you advertise for typewriting work, you are offering your services. Something for sale.

There is no mystery about it. Advertising isn't hypnotism, or undue influence or black art. You write out what you want or what you have for sale—you put it in a good newspaper—the newspaper carries your message broadcast, into the homes and hearts of thousands of readers—some of those readers respond to your printed word—you sell or you acquire—and ADVERTISING has done its work.

Next time you want something or have something for sale, try a little Want Ad. The cost is trivial—the results more than worth while.

MANY EVENTS PLANNED TONIGHT

Including Board of Trade, Dutch Arms and Probasco Bible Class Banquets.

ALSO 'PEOPLE'S FORUM'

Prominent Speakers Will Be Heard At Each—Elaborate Musical Programs—Numerous Other Functions Arranged.

It will be a big night for Plainfield tonight. Dinners of various organizations, the opening of the much discussed "People's Forum," and numerous other events of lesser importance, but all of which have significance to those who will participate, are scheduled to take place.

One of the chief attractions will be the banquet of the Plainfield Board of Trade, which will be held at Columbus Auditorium at 7 o'clock. More than 200 guests have already purchased tickets and the affair will, it is believed, be one of the most successful events of the kind that has ever been given in this city. Speakers at the dinner will be Charles H. Sherrill, formerly the American minister to the Argentine Republic, Rev. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of Grace church, of New York, who is a firm believer in modern day methods of advertising to increase and hold church attendance; Congressman William E. Tuttle, Jr., who is to discuss needed postoffice legislation; Dr. William L. Saunders and Mayor Percy H. Stewart. The toastmaster will be Corporation Counsel Charles A. Reed. The menu will be unusually attractive. Guests are to be served at small tables which, it is expected, will add to sociability and permit friends and business associates to sit together. There will be songs, good stories and merry quips heard by the scores of Plainfielders who will attend the feast. The "Eureka Trio," widely-known colored musicians, will play and sing during the evening.

Elaborate arrangements have been made by the committee in charge for the fifth annual dinner of the well-known Dutch Arms, Men's Association, which will be held in Trinity Reformed church. There will be special decorations, numerous speakers will be heard and Edgar S. Sheppard will be preside as toastmaster. Music is to be furnished by Mosher's orchestra. Among the speakers will be Judge Robert E. Carey, Rev. Dr. I. W. Gowen, of Weehawken, and Rev. W. P. Bruce, of Yonkers, N. Y.

Another dinner scheduled for tonight is that of the members of the Bible class of Dr. Norman H. Probasco. This is the annual dinner of the class. It is said by those who have the dinner in charge and who have taken a great deal of pains to make it a success that it will be the best gathering of the sort that the class has ever enjoyed.

The speakers will be Arthur M. Harris John G. MacLaughlin, Charles W. McCutchen, Dr. Norman H. Probasco, J. Whitney Baker and James E. Church. Piano selections will be given by Guy Hunter, a blind musician, during the dinner and he will also sing several solos. The committee in charge of this dinner has Gay Hartley as its chairman.

It is expected that there will be a large attendance at the opening of the "People's Forum" at the Washington School, for the open discussion of leading topics of the day. Prominent speakers will address the gathering. Among them will be Dr. Thomas Cumming Hall, of New York, whose subject will be "Free Speech," and Winston Hall, secretary of the Citizens' Federation of Jersey City, and who is also president of the People's Institute of that city. The meeting will open at promptly 8 o'clock. Trolley passengers should alight from Fourth street cars at Darrow avenue.

The parish sociable of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, of which the Rev. C. H. Mallery is rector, will be held this evening in the parish house at 8 o'clock. An interesting program has been arranged. It will consist of a speech by the rector. He will speak of matters pertaining to the welfare of the parish. There will be excellent music and the members of the Women's Guild will serve refreshments. It is expected that practically every member of the parish will attend tonight's sociable.

The alumnae of Mt. St. Mary's College will hold a euchre and five hundred party this evening at the Park Club. Dancing will follow the completion of the card games and handsome prizes will be awarded those having the best card scores.

Members of the Junior Municipal Orchestra will meet this evening at 7:30 o'clock at Washington School, instead of the Franklin School, as planned.

The monthly dime social of the Brightside Circle of the King's Daughters will be held tonight at the home of Mrs. Frank W. Jones, on Mountain avenue.

APPROVED METHODS OF CHICKEN RAISING

Prof. Harry Wolsieffer Lectures Before the Local Poultry Association.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of the New Jersey Society for Poultry Improvement was held in the Exempt Firemen's Hall, last night, to hear a lecture by Professor Harry Wolsieffer, of Vineland. The speaker described the most approved methods of chicken raising and dwelt at length on the more recent inventions to aid incubation and brooding.

The lecture was based on personal experience which Mr. Wolsieffer had while trying out the various incubators and methods used by the largest breeders of this State and New York. He advocated the use of muslin as a window covering to take the place of glass thereby keeping out the moisture and admitting light and fresh air. The speaker urged that plenty of fresh air be supplied to new born chickens and that dampness be kept from the hen coops.

The speaker outlined the most approved manner of supplying needed ventilation and his experiences in an effort to produce an even temperature the year around.

Prior to the talk a short business session was held during which routine matters were discussed. The question of holding the annual show next year was brought up and although several dates were offered no definite decision was reached.

MISS MATILDA BUXTON DIES IN HER 82ND YEAR

Miss Matilda Buxton, an aunt of former Councilman Herbert Buxton, died last night at her home, at 452 West Sixth street, of bronchial pneumonia. Miss Buxton had been in poor health for several years but her last and fatal illness was of but a few days' duration. She was 82 years old and had lived in Plainfield the greater part of her life.

Miss Buxton was born on the island of Bourbon, in the West Indies, and came to this country with her parents when a child. One sister, Miss Mary Buxton, of this city, survives her. Miss Buxton was a life long member of Grace Episcopal church and was very active, in spite of her years, in work connected with that parish. The rector, the Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, will conduct the funeral services. The time of the funeral has not as yet been arranged owing to the absence from the city of Mr. Buxton, the nephew of the deceased.

SCOTCH LASSIES WILL MARCH AT CLAN'S CONCERT

One of the features at the concert which will be given tomorrow night at the Park Club by Clan Mackenzie, Order of Scottish Clans, of this city, will be the procession of Scotch lassies during the grand march which will precede the dancing. The Scotch lassies will be gowned in plaids and each will wear a Scotch bonnet. Tickets for the concert entitle the holders to dancing privileges. Many tickets have already been sold and the success of the concert is assured.

Noted artists will be heard, among them Miss E. H. Frank, soprano, of New York, who is declared by members of the local organization to be the queen of Scottish songs. Miss Agnes Ray, of Kearney, a sweet voiced contralto and elocutionist and Prof. Roderick Davidson, of Jersey City, and his Highland troupe of pipers and dancers. Besides these there will be heard William Holmen, of this city, the well-known baritone; Will Wilson, of Kearney, a Scotch comedian; J. D. Mitchell, a Scotch violinist of note; S. S. Lassen, pianist and others of prominence.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT OF MISS ALICE M. ROSS

Mrs. Louis R. Ross, formerly of East Seventh street, announces the engagement of her eldest daughter, Miss Alice Mary Ross to Frederick Beecher Colver, of Tenafly. Mr. Colver was graduated from Princeton University in 1910 and the Columbia Law School in 1913 and is now practicing law in New York city. Miss Ross is a graduate of Wellesley College, 1913, and has been prominent among the younger society set. At present Mrs. Ross and her daughter are living in Englewood.

POSTPONE SOCIAL.

The birthday social and entertainment, which was to have been held at the Monroe Avenue church, tonight, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society, has been postponed to Tuesday night, February 24.

PLEDGES LIFE TO HIS PEOPLE

P. C. Chang, An Americanized Chinese, Gives Interesting Talk of His Work.

CHINA AN ALIEN LAND

Because People Have Thought They Were Superior to Other Nations—Progress of Christianity in the Flowery Kingdom.

Pledging his life to the spreading of the gospel of Christianity among the fanatical hordes of China, and declaring that eventually the Chinese would throw off the fanaticism of Confucianism, would see that it was but a system of ethics, and in its place embrace the teachings of Christianity, an Americanized Chinese, last night, addressed a large audience at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church.

The speaker, who was listened to with the greatest attention by the audience, was P. C. Chang, who holds the degree of Master of Arts from one of the great American universities. He is a brother of Professor Chang-Po-Ling, of Tien-Tsin, China, and is at the present time in charge of Christian work among a thousand Chinese students in America. Next year he returns to China to work among the illiterate heathen of that land. Recently the speaker was one of those who took part in the rally of student volunteers held at Kansas City.

"China," he said, "has been excluded from the remainder of the world through its own policy; that of pride and conceit because of its government and its people, the idea having long been fostered that it was superior to other nations. Hence it has been, so to speak, rather much of an alien land. The modern world has now given China the opportunity to exploit itself and the country has really only just begun to awaken to a realization of this fact. Chinese are commencing to realize what things in the Celestial empire ought to be given out and as it were disseminated to the world at large and also what things should be excluded from Western eyes.

"The Chinese are of various minds as to what religion they should embrace, clinging at one time to the old Shinto faith; worshipping strange Gods, and at other times forsaking their chosen faith and following the leadership of others. In matters of religion the Chinese are as yet in their swaddling clothes. Personally, I do not believe in any attempt being made to change the religion of a race or people in a day, a month, or in a year. Such a course would be impossible.

"There are certain problems in China that must first be looked into and studied carefully before any attempt is made, if the desire is to make a success of the religious undertakings, to force Christianity upon the Chinese. The makers of history are really those who by farsighted vision resolve first of all to take people as they are and who do not unreasonably expect or hope that they will develop fast or in a surprisingly brief time. China has some great things for the world to learn and the empire as well has, in spite of its antiquity, a host of things to learn also.

"All of these things have a certain relationship to Christianity in China and people should not be unduly impatient in looking for results. There are some Chinese who today are foisting Confucianism upon their followers on the ground that such is the state religion. But time will show them their error and they will come to realize that instead of a religion Confucianism is in reality but a system of ethics. The revival of Canfucianism clearly shows that there is a consciousness in the minds of many Chinese of the great and growing need of a personal religion for the upbuilding of character in the nation. The result of the attempt to force Confucianism upon the Chinese will eventually result in their being more willing to accept and adopt the teachings of missionaries of the Christian faith. There is at the present time great need of native Chinese teachers of the Christian faith and for a church to prosper in China it must be under native control. The missionaries are working towards this end and with far more understanding than heretofore."

GRANTED A DIVORCE.

Mrs. Estelle B. Bentley, who was Miss Estelle Brooks, of this city, has been granted a divorce from her husband, Harry Bentley. Until two years ago the Bentleys lived in this city, and more recently at Elizabeth.

BASKETRY CLASS OFF.

Because of the illness of Mr. Stillman, the manual training teacher of the North Plainfield High School, the weekly basketry class which has been held under his instruction, did not meet last evening.

AN APPEAL FOR OUR FRIENDS—THE BIRDS

Right now is the time for charity.

Everyone has noticed that the meadow-larks, snow-birds, some of the thrushes, the starling and an occasional robin will remain with us all winter.

There are quail and pheasant but we seldom see these birds around the homes in the city.

When a heavy snowfall comes it covers all the seeds and young shoots of winter grains, compelling the birds to feed on the wild carrot tops and other weeds that possess but little nourishment. A few days of such feeding and the bodies of the birds become weak indeed.

Now we have a rain which falls on every exposed weed and shoot and freezes as fast as it falls, coating everything with a mantle of ice that the birds cannot break through.

Right here is the place where the birds need your help. Cast your bread upon the frozen waters and it will come back in the spring-time "buttered."

All summer the birds work for you, killing your enemies—the grubs, mosquitoes, bolt weevil ants and other pests.

In almost every family crusts of bread are wasted. Save these crusts—cut them into dice, gather up the crumbs from your table and place them where the birds can find them.

A crust of bread—what a little thing it seems—and yet it is often all that stands between a bird and starvation.

"CHARLIE" LINE WILL ENTER Y. M. C. A. WORK

Former Assistant Director of Local Association Accepts Secretarial Position.

Charles H. Line, formerly assistant physical director of the local Y. M. C. A. and a graduate of the Springfield Training School in last year's class, has taken a position in the Providence, R. I., Y. M. C. A. as social and membership secretary. Line is at present pursuing a post-graduate course in the Springfield Training School and will enter upon his new duties at the end of the school term.

In Providence Line will be a member of the corps headed by former New Jersey State Secretary Hawkins. He graduated from Springfield after taking the physical director's course and returned this year to take a term in secretarial work. While in Plainfield Line had charge of the physical work of the boys' department under George L. Listman and is widely known in this section. He was graduated from the Plainfield High School in the class of 1908.

Two years ago Line appeared here as a member of the Springfield Training School gymnastic team and made a decided hit with the local audience as a tumbler and ring performer. He was a member of the team for two years and managed the squad last season.

O'CONNOR TRIES TO PROVE AN ALIBI

Claims He Was in Atlantic City When Express Co. Money Disappeared.

SURPRISE BY DEFENSE

Case Goes to Jury Early This Afternoon—Prosecution Believes It Will Secure Conviction of Man Accused of Theft.

Elizabeth, Feb. 19.—It was learned today that the defense in the case where Edward J. O'Connor, of this city, is being charged with the theft of $500 belonging to the U. S. Express Company, that efforts were made to prove an alibi for the accused. This was brought out in the summing up this afternoon by counsel for O'Connor.

The jury retired shortly after 2 o'clock and a verdict is expected late this afternoon. Walter Hoffman, agent at the Grant Avenue station, testified on the stand yesterday that over $400 of the amount alleged to have been stolen was in checks and this puts an entirely new aspect on the case. An effort was made to show that O'Connor was not in need of funds at the time the money was taken and that he was attending a wedding anniversary in Atlantic City when the crime was committed.

When the prosecution rested its case shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Samuel Schliemer and John P. Owens, opened for the defense, and during the afternoon Chief of Police Kiely, John P. Owens, Edward T. Phillips, Andrew Saffron and Miss Florence Smalley, all of Plainfield, were examined.

When placed on the stand O'Connor denied being in town at the time the money disappeared and his wife, who proceeded him, carried out his testimony declaring that they were attending a wedding anniversary in Atlantic City. O'Connor also denied having intimate acquaintance with Miss Florence Smalley, one of the principal witnesses in the case. Chief Kiely, taking the stand in rebuttal, gave information to show that Miss Smalley and the defendant were intimate and had known each other for some time past.

Many local people were interested spectators at the trial yesterday and today and the court room was filled when the jury filed out this afternoon.

SPOUSE WOULD NOT BECOME RECONCILED TO IRON HEAVER

Mrs. Hattie Gilbert, colored, of 300 Arlington avenue, appeared in the city court this morning, as complainant against her husband, George Gilbert, charging "Gawge" with hurling a flat-iron through the door of her home and using "harsh" language to her and her young son Rastus. In defense Gilbert claimed that his harsh words consisted of threats directed at Rastus, whom he told to "get back where he wouldn't shine" and "make rapid out of the room."

The complainant refused to become reconciled to her spouse and Judge DeMeza ordered Gilbert to remain away from the Arlington avenue home in the future, under penalty of being incarcerated.

OPEN CAMPAIGN WITH LUNCHEON

PLAN TO RAISE $10,000

Prominent Women Gather to Hear Association Leaders Outline the Project—Team Captains Will Meet Daily to Make Report.

Mrs. Percy Hamilton Stewart entertained at luncheon yesterday at her home, 1107 Watchung avenue in honor of Mrs. Dave H. Morris, Miss Harriet Taylor and Miss Lena M. Farrar, of the National Board of Young Women's Christian Associations in New York city. Other guests were: Mrs. Frederick G. Mead, Mrs. John Gray Foster, Mrs. Elliot T. Barrows, Mrs. Walter McGee, Mrs. Francis deL. Hyde Miss Edith Mellick, Mrs. Frank W. French, Mrs. William D. Murray, Miss Barbara Fleming, Mrs. Lewis A. Williams, Jr., Mrs. W. C. O'Donnell, Mrs. Leslie R. Fort, Miss Edith Smalley, Miss Florence Smith, Mrs. A. V. D. Honeyman Mrs. Frederick W. Goddard, Mrs. Clifford W. Baker and Miss Sargent.

At the luncheon plans for a campaign for raising $6,000 to cover the budget of the Y. W. C. A. work for the year 1914 and to pay off a loan of $3,250 to the National City Bank were discussed, and a short address was made by Mrs. Morris in regard to the principles and methods of carrying on such a campaign. About one hundred additional guests, all of whom are interested in Y. W. C. A. work, were invited to meet Mrs. Morris, Miss Taylor and Miss Farrar at 3 o'clock.

During the afternoon Miss Taylor spoke of the three branches of Y. W. C. A. work—field, foreign and finance—and dwelt particularly upon the foreign work, which branch of the work she represents, and of its tremendous development from year to year in China, Japan, India and South America. She told of the organization of Bible classes in government schools in India and Japan, and of the financial support by the government of those countries of the educational departments of the local associations. These associations are organized on the same plan as those in this country, namely, to develop young women physically, socially mentally and spiritually. In Canton, the Chinese women have recently carried through successfully a campaign similar to that planned for Plainfield.

Following Miss Taylor, Mrs. Morris spoke of the National Board of Young Women's Christian Associations in this country, whose work is divided into the following departments: Department of conferences, which conducts ten summer conferences in different sections of the country; office department, which is a model of administrative organization; secretarial department, which maintains a training school and recommends professional women to positions in local associations; publication department; foreign department; finance department, and department of methods, which employs experts for research and consultation in all association activities, and suggests methods for carrying the opportunities of the association movement to the girl in the country, the city, the mill, village and the college or secondary school. Mrs. Morris emphasized several activities of nation-wide scope which have been initiated by the National Board, among which is the work for the immigrant through international institutes in different parts of the country where foreigners are coming in large numbers, and the program for thrift and efficiency adopted at the biennial convention, which is being promoted by the National Board through the association and other agencies. Other definite policies for which the Board is responsible are those relating to social morality and the raising of character standards. Dr. Richard Cabot has become identified with the Commission on Social Morality and his recent book published by the National Board, "The Consecration of the Affections," is one of the first products of the work of the Commission.

Tea was served at 5 o'clock. There will be an all-day meeting at the Young Women's Christian Association tomorrow, at which Miss Taylor will speak on "Other Finance Campaigns" and Miss Farrar will instruct all workers in regard to the details of the campaign for Plainfield. The dates set for the Plainfield campaign are February 24, 25, 26 and 27, and Miss Taylor and Miss Farrar will remain in Plainfield as executives until the campaign is closed.

Allen S. Williams, the "snake man," will appear in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium on Saturday morning, February 28, at which time he will adress a rally meeting of Plainfield boys. He will talk of his recent trip through South America.

HOUSE NOT TO BLAME FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE DELAY

Trenton, Feb. 19.—Accusations made that officials of the Assembly had delayed action in the Senate on the proposed woman suffrage constitutional amendment brought out a retort yesterday. The facts stated indicated that Clerk Phillips had sent the measure to the Senate one day sooner than he technically should have done.

The resolution passed the House February 3, at an hour after the Senate had adjourned. The Senate journal, under date of February 9, shows that the resolution was received there that day. The clerk should have held the resolution until the next day because any member of the House, on the legislative day next after that on which a measure is passed, has the right to move reconsideration. The Assemblymen, therefore, could have taken this action any time on February 9, and the clerk, from a technical standpoint, should have kept the resolution until February 10.

If there has been any delay in the Senate, the blame, therefore, is not on the House.

SOCIETY OF TRANSFIGURATION MEETS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

His address dealt chiefly with the devotional life of the clergy and its practical application in parish work. The speaker was listened to with close attention by the clergymen present. The news could not be confirmed by the Daily Press today.

CLASS INITIATION IS FOLLOWED BY BANQUET

Nineteen of the members of Royal Council, No. 77, O. U. A. M., went to Newark, last night, with seven candidates, who were initiated with ten others at a class initiation held at the lodge rooms of General Sedgwick Council, O. U. A. M. Former National Councilor Charles, of Hoboken, was the guest of the occasion. Following the initiatory ceremonies the lodge members enjoyed a collation. Because of the inclemency of the weather the attendance was not as large as expected. Twelve Plainfield candidates who were to have been made members of the order failed to appear.

It was a typical Dutch feast that those who attended the affair enjoyed. The chairman of the refreshment committee was Miss Agnes Ruschke. PRISON REFORMS IN JOLIET; DAY SCHOOL FOR CRIMINALS

Experiment In Illinois Penitentiary Excites Wide Interest

Many Other Changes Have Been Recently Inaugurated

A CHANGE is coming, indeed it is being inaugurated, in regard to the treatment of convicts. They are beginning to be regarded as men who are capable of being reformed and not as irreconcilable enemies of society. The old idea of protecting the community by isolating the criminal is giving way to more helpful and humane methods.

Joliet prison, the state prison of Illinois, may be looked upon as a leader in prison reform. Within the past few months it has been the scene of some drastic changes and innovations, and its new methods are attracting the attention of penal experts all over the country.

An important and interesting innovation was the establishment of a day school for the convicts. Night schools had existed before in various penitentiaries, but this is the first day school. So successful has it been already, after a few months of existence, that a similar school is about to be inaugurated at the Ohio state penitentiary.

Three hundred convicts in the penitentiary at Joliet are now going to school. Taught by fellow prisoners, these men, many of whom are gray headed, are learning, as litle children learn, to read and write and spell. Into the gray routine of prison life have crept brighter hours. There is a new chance now for the man who is expiating a crime by years of hard labor. He can, if he wishes, leave the prison better fitted mentally and morally to cope with the world than he has ever been before.

The classes are open to all the prisoners regardless of their offenses, the length of their sentences or their conduct records. About one-fifth of the prison inmates have already taken advantage of the opportunity.

There are among them men condemned to penal servitude for life. The never dying hope of liberty spurs them on. There are young fellows, serving their first sentence, eager to make a new and better start when the doors open for them. There are foreigners, unable to speak English; middle aged men entering a school for the first time.

The roll call of the classes records the names of murderers whose crimes have headlined the newspapers from one end of the country to the other. There are thieves, gun men, lawbreakers of every sort. They differ in color and creed and nationality, and they vary in ability and ambition. Only the bond of ignorance do they share in common.

Complete illiteracy characterizes many of them. Some have attended the common schools for short periods. Most of them, though, are below the fifth grade.

All day long the three small classrooms in the heart of the prison are filled with changing classes. In the halls and courtyards files of convicts pass each other going from school to work. The air quivers with the drumming machinery, the rasp of saws, the thud of many hammers and the endless echoes of prison activity. Everywhere are impassable walls, clanging iron doors and guards, the ever present factors of restraint. But the classroom seems of another world.

Here are walls hung with gayly colored maps. The desks are littered with slates and textbooks. Pupils clad in cadet gray sit behind the desks, for no one wears stripes except the disobedient. The teacher is in charge alone. An air of quiet orderliness pervades the place. Save for the iron bars at the window, it might be a classroom anywhere.

Reading, writing and arithmetic!

Massive shouldered men, who could quarry stone tirelessly, struggle, sometimely futilely, with the intricacies of the three R's. Minds corroded with the rust of idle, untrained years find almost insurmountable the difficulties that a boy of six would overcome with joyous ease.

There is here an unusually heavy percentage of mediocrity and an equally large division of the subnormal, cases of arrested development and the numberless forms of degeneracy. A few of the pupils were clever criminals. For the most part, though, they are the untaught, the unknowing, victims of heredity and environment and a thousand and one forces over which they had no control.

There are already many failures in the school and probably will be more. The chance has come too late for some of the men, and others are constitutionally unequal to their tasks. But their appreciation of the opportunity is evidenced in the sincerity of their attempts to retrace their steps even to first reader days.

But besides the day school many other reforms in prison management have taken place. Consternation prevailed among the supporters of the "good old fashioned methods" when Warden Allen abolished the restrictions and time honored customs and replaced them with the humane, progressive and constructive rules and regulations.

Unobtrusive gray suits have taken the place of stripes. As far as is possible the work exacted is suited to the previous training and ability of the prisoner. Open air work, such as road making, farming and gardening, is gradually being arranged for, and during the season the convicts occasionally get the chance of indulging in the national game of baseball.

In cells four feet wide, seven feet long and seven feet high two men were confined on every holiday and Sunday, leaving them only to march to the dining room and chapel. Now the privilege of the corridors is theirs, checkers and dominoes, books, pencils and paper are provided to temper the gray monotony of the hours, and even tinkering is permitted to the skillful.

About five months ago fifty-one men, after giving a good conduct pledge, were sent from the prison in charge of unarmed officers to do road work. This was the first experiment of this kind in the state. So far it has proved successful.

Prisoners who can do better work without the supervision of the guard than with it are permitted to do so. As yet they have taken no advantage of the confidence reposed in them. The lack of a restraining presence in the schoolroom is an example of this.

For the first time in years, perhaps in history, prisons are assuming the aspect of places of upbuilding, of helpfulness, and not alone of degradation and punishment. Criminology has become a science. Daily newer and better means of furthering the reformation of the fallen are being recognized and employed.

ASBURY PARK TO PROTEST AGAINST FREIGHT CHARGES

Asbury Park, Feb. 19.—Acting under instruction of the City Council, City Solicitor Samuel A. Paterson is preparing a complaint to be lodged with the Interstate Commerce Commission that the railroads are discriminating against Asbury Park and the north Jersey shore in fixing freight rates. Freight rates as now fixed, according to Councilman Charles Rugarber, are keeping manufacturers away from this section of New Jersey.

Mr. Rugarber, who is a tinsmith, told the Council that frequently he has occasion to purchase carload shipments in Vermont. The freight rates from Vermont to Perth Amboy, he said, are the same as the rate charged from Perth Amboy to Asbury Park.

Local shippers are subscribing to a fund to employ counsel to co-operate with Mr. Patterson.

MUNICIPAL EXTRAVAGANCE.

The City of Newark is in a legal controversy over the building of a new Centre Market. Everybody wants the market, but the good citizens are seeking to keep graft out of the job. Bids were taken for the work last May and the contract was let this month. Since then the cost of materials and labor has fallen so that responsible bidders have offered to do the work for $72,000 less than the bid made last May. Yet the officials have gone ahead and awarded the contract on bids made nine months ago, and the taxpayers of Newark must suffer.

Why is it that public officials will do such things? In their own business they would not do it. Nor do we believe that they would do it in city matters if it were not for the boss system. The boss is behind the contractors.

The cost of the municipalities of this State to the taxpayers, per year, is over $27,000,000. It is the one place where public money is spent on the largest scale and with the greatest prodigality. If there is anything crooked in our municipal governments it is in the making of contracts for public work. We are of course not now speaking of Plainfield, because here we believe we have honest and efficient management, but in many cities of this and other States that cannot be said.

Are not the citizens to blame where these things occur? The ordinary citizen pays less attention to his city than he does to State matters and less to either than to National affairs. And yet it is the city and other local governments where the most of his expenses are piled up and his taxes increased. The causes for municipal corruption, where it exists, are two; first, the unwillingness of the better citizens to accept office, and second the failure of that same citizen to keep constant watch on municipal matters and condemn any irregularities. An efficient and watchful board of trade in every community can be very helpful in all such matters.

WHY NOT A "CIVIC WEEK?"

Suggestions galore are made as to the most feasible way in which the citizens of our community might boost and advertise the city, many being practical and would, if put to an acid test, be fruitful in bringing forth an over-abundance of results. This state of affairs, however, would not bring the prize to us as a city unless the right foundation were laid, and the inhabitants at large were endowed with that same "Community Spirit" which has taken vise-like grip upon the Merchants' Association. Civic pride in our own midst should be sought for and cultivated before we attempt to proclaim to the world at large the virtues of our city, for, unless we are possessed of this spirit, any movement to push Plainfield to the front would be without permanent or lasting results. These conclusions, we believe, will be conceded by those who have given these subjects any lengthy consideration

In view of these facts we suggest to the various civic organizations that a week be set aside, in which to convert those sinners against the laws of true citizenship. This would be the first great project in laying the bulwark necessary for building up a greater and better Plainfield than has heretofore been known. In this connection we would draw the attention of the Board of Trade, the Chamber of Commerce and kindred bodies to the fact that Flag Day this year falls on Sunday and that the following Thursday (June 18) will be, in all probability, the date on which many of our merchants will inaugurate their annual custom of giving their employes a weekly half-holiday. That week is just prior to the vacation season and most of our people have not at that time departed on their summer jaunts. What a grand opportunity this presents to have civic subjects expounded from all the city's pulpits at one time? Plainfield's people, we believe, would so respond to the call that this city would experience one of the most unique "Go-to-Church Sundays" ever witnessed.

A patriotic civic mass meeting held on Monday evening to which the entire city would be invited would be appropriate occasion for such a week. A civic, industrial, and fraternal parade on Thursday afternoon, such as the Board of Trade had hoped for last fall, would be both interesting and instructive and a drawing card for those from out of town. As lodges and fraternities form so great a portion of the social life of our city, a gathering of the vast army of lodge members to be addressed on themes of a civic nature would prove to be a great power in creating that for which we all are striving so hard at present.

While these suggestions are presented to the civic societies at large in a rough state of being, it is hoped that they may be so developed that civic pride may be a realized feature of the community's life in the near future:

Mr. Taft says: "It may be that the Democratic administration will successfully carry out its present program without a panic or hard times. If so, though Mr. Wilson may lose to Mr. Roosevelt, the votes of those who do not think his administration is radical enough and he is likely to be renominated and reelected."

Indeed! How astounding. Mr. Wilson seems to be carrying out his program rather successfully. The hard times and panic does not seem to be in sight. Is it not funny how men blinded by ambition and enmity write?

Hibiscous Moscheutos and Palustris, Coreopsos Lanceolata, Digitalis Purpurea. No, gentle reader, the compositor has not made a mistake. These are the names on three packets of government seeds which our genial fellow townsman, James E. Martine sent for the editor's garden. When they grow and blossom we'll try to tell what it all means.

Suggestion to the warden of the California jail in which the colored prisoners have gone on a hunger strike: Let the kitchen department immediately begin the work of fixing up a lot of fried chicken, roast ham and candied yams. Inside of ten seconds after the aroma seeps through the bars, there'll be no strike.

Charles F. Murphy, the great sachem of Tammany Hall, pauses to remark that he will do all in his power to uplift New York's democracy. Rather magnanimous of him, when one considers that he did about three times as much as anyone else to put New York democracy where it is.

"Notes from the Labor Field" is a regular feature once a week in the Daily Press. Those which now appear are of a general character, but we would welcome similar ones regarding local labor affairs.

THE FORUM.

(The Daily Press had intended giving notice that the columns of this paper would no longer be opened for discussion of the "Menace" after tonight' issue, but the receipt of two communications on the subject, one of which is printed below, have necessitated delaying this one day. The editor believes that during the two weeks or more that the discussion has been going on the matter has been thoroughly threshed out, and that after printing such communications as are now in our hands, we have given everyone a fair opportunity to express their views. The last letter on this topic will appear with the issue of tomorrow night.—Editor.)

Editor, Plainfield Daily Press:

It is very evident to the readers of the "Daily Press" who are following up these articles that Mr. Arnold, according to his own statement, is of that frivolous unstable nature, incapable of seriously considering an important theme. We dismiss him from our minds, with apologies to the editor of the "Daily Press" for his unworthy remark, relative to the acceptance of articles from the reading public.

We wish to assure the editor of the "Daily Press" that we do understand his position aright, and we appreciate the spirit of fair-play and true American love of independence which he has evinced, not to be browbeaten by any party. The writer is authorized to expressly convey to the "Daily Press" the gratitude of scores of readers for throwing open to the public the "Forum," regardless of race or creed.

Nothing gives greater delight to Romanists than to clap a muzzle on to every newspaper in the land, and the courageous stand of the "Daily Press" is, indeed, unique in the history of journalism in America under papal influence.

For the benefit of those who are interested, and who are capable of weighing evidence when submitted on this topic, the writer produces some more data which will cover the history of the world from the rise of the papal system to our present time. The result of our researches simply staggers the mind—the more we study this system of papal corruption and abuse the more we wonder how it still carries with it untold myriads of the human race.

Wherever the Bible is found freely scattered and read there we find PROGRESS and where the Bible is not found there we see RETROGRESSION.

The writer did not think it necessary to explain the texts given which distinctly condemns celibacy as a Christian dogma. The average intelligence of Americans tells them that ministers of the Gospel are not compelled to marry but the option to do so is not taken away.

This makes a great difference. The Roman Catholic Church disqualifies candidates for the priesthood on this ground. Not a single instance is to be found in the Bible where such a celibate priesthood was ever organized. The very first high priest we learn of is Aaron and he was a married man—the whole Levitical priesthood was not trammelled by any such law of Jehovah.

The Christian dispensation also is free from it and calls it the "doctrine of devils." Even the first psuedo pap Peter was a married man. How true was Jesus when he rebuked the scribes and pharisees, saying: "Ye have made void the law by your tradition."

The author of these houses called monasteries and nunneries was a man named St. Pachomius.

Catholic Encyclopaedia, Vol. XI., page 164, reads: "Virgins vowed to the service of God at first continued to live with their families. But as early as the end of the third century there were community houses. St. Pachomius, 292-346 A. D., built a house in which a number of religious women lived with his sister. The nuns of Egypt cut their hair, a practice not introduced until later in the West.

"Monasteries of women generally were situated at a distance from those of men.

St. Pachomius insisted on this separation, also St. Benedict."

Now note the radical change which ignored the instructions of the founder of monasteries:

"There were, however, common-houses, one wing being set apart for women and the other for men, more frequently adjoining for the two sexes.

"Double religious houses, comprising communities of both men and women dwelling in contiguous establishments, under one superior, etc.

"The reasons for such an arrangement was that the spiritual needs of the nuns might be attended to by the priests."

But St. Pachomius insisted on the separation of the sexes. Now we see the evil results:

"It is not surprising that such a system was sometimes abused, and hence it was always an object of solicitude and strict legislation, etc.

"The Danish invasion of the ninth and tenth centuries destroyed the double houses and monasteries of England; and when they were rstored they were for one sex only, instead of for dual communities; this died out for awhile.

"Again revived end of the eleventh century, when Robert of Abrissel gave it a fresh lease of life.

"Again, sixteenth century destruction of monasteries. They were looked upon as the great bulwarks of the papal system.

"The monks had been called 'the great standing army of Rome.' Thomas Cromwell was appointed vicar-general to visit the monastic houses and bring them into line with the new order of things. Approximately about 3,200 monks and regular canons were expelled: friars, 1,800; nuns, 1,560. Altogether about 8,000.

"In Hungary the Benedictines were entirely wiped out.

"The Swiss monasteries were exposed to pillage and ruin during the wars of the Revolution.

"The establishment of Italian unity was fatal to religious orders.

"Cavour imposed this anti-religious policy on King Victor Emmanuel. The king finally gave his sanction to a law which suppressed in his own states alone 334 convents and monasteries, containing 4,280 monks and nuns.

"Germany 168 convents, abbeys and priories; in all 738 religious houses were suppressed in the Empire.

"In 1812 Spain suppressed the religious houses.

"In 1835 the government decree suppressed all monasteries and nunneries.

"The people of the northern provinces of Spain who are very devoted Catholics, did not associate themselves directly with the measures taken against the religions. So much cannot be said of those of the South of Spain and the large towns where the expulsion of the religions sometimes took the appearance of a population insurrection.

"Monasteries in Portugal met the same fate."

Here is a detailed history of a system which has been the curse of every nation in Europe. Remember, Catholics did the wholesale destruction.

The idea that "one priest," or "one apple" in a bunch being bad, etc., etc., is all a sham. The damaging testimony of ancient, medaeval and modern history is crushingly opposed to any such makeshift.

"Great is Rome!"

L. CRUICKSHANK.

Editor, Plainfield Daily Press:

In an editorial of the 17th inst you say, "Mr. Tuttle has represented the Fifth district for two terms, and has been a faithful, conscientious and studious member of the House of Representatives. He enjoys the confidence of his colleagues at Washington, regardless of party, and had he been left alone in the Plainfield postoffice matter would have solved the problem to the satisfaction of a large majority of the people, but of course not to the satisfaction of the disappointed seekers after the office and their friends.

"Senator Martine means right in his handling of the case, but we fear that before he gets through with the muddle that he has thrown the matter into, he will wish that he had let Mr. Tuttle settle the question in his own way."

No doubt but that the majority of voters, Democrats and Republicans, will endorse your complimentary references to Congressman Tuttle. But as a friend and constituent of Senator Martine, I protest against the injustice you do him. You must admit the injustice if you give Congressman Tuttle for sincerity, as all of us do, in his published statement yielding to Senator Martine as a matter of due courtesy the naming of the postmaster in his home town. This was not only due courtesy but a most fitting one. For surely no man is better qualified to judge of the availability of a Plainfield candidate and the preferences of Plainfield citizens than Senator Martine.

The Senator's friends and admirers feel that he is quite right in acting deliberately and in refusing to be hurried. There is an embarrassment of candidates and the Senator at this time particularly has an embarrassment of friends, each one of whom desires to tell him what to do. In this particular instance few will be satisfied with what he does, whatever he does; but all will be satisfied of his honesty of purpose.

The Congressman is to be congratulated on so gracefully retiring from the embarrassing situation of a divided responsibility and the Senator for manfully shouldering the entire responsibility.

Respectfully,
L. J. ELLIS.

Editor, Plainfield Daily Press:

Your paper is to be congratulated for the sincere interest you have manifested concerning the future of our colored youth. Many of our sons have no other meeting places but the pool room and the saloon. Believing that I express the sentiment of every colored parent in Plainfield, we do hope that some provision may be made in the new Y. M. C. A. building for our boys to meet and derive the benefits of such an institution.

Very truly yours,

The New Typewriter OLIVER No. 7

WE ANNOUNCE AN AMAZING MODEL—The OLIVER No. 7—a typewriter of superexcellence, with automatic devices and refinements that mark the zenith of typewriter progress. A marvel of beauty, speed and easy action. Typewriting efficiency raised to the nth power.

The OLIVER No. 7 embodies all previous Oliver innovations and new self-acting devices never before seen on any typewriter. A leap in advance which places The Oliver ten years ahead of its time. So smooth in action, so light to the touch, so easy to run, that experts are amazed. A model that means to the typist delightful ease of operation.

A model that means a higher standard of typewriting, longer and better service.

The No. 7 is now on exhibit and sale at all Oliver Branches and Agencies throughout the United States.

The new model has more improvements, refinements and new uses than we can even enumerate here.

The "cushioned keyboard" with "anchor keys" and the new automatic features mean less work for the hands, less strain on the eyes, less manual and mental effort.

With all of these masterly mechanical improvements we have made the machine more beautiful and symmetrical. From every standpoint The OLIVER No. 7 attains superlative excellence.

Nothing you could wish for has been omitted. The new devices, refinements, improvements and conveniences found on the No. 7 represent an enormous outlay and vastly increase its value—the price has not been advanced one penny. We shall even continue in force our popular 17-Cents-a-Day purchase plan, the same as on previous Oliver models.

The OLIVER No. 7, equipped with the famous Printype, if desired, without extra charge.

You owe it to yourself to see the new machine before you buy any typewriter at any price. Note its beauty, speed and easy action, its wonderful automatic devices. Try it on any work that is ever done on typewriters. Try it on many kinds of work that no other typewriter will do.

It is a significant fact that the typewriter that introduced such epoch-making innovations as visible writing, visible reading, Printype, etc., should be the first to introduce automatic methods of operation.

LORD WEARDALE.

Lord Weardale, Liberal politician and head of the British Peace centenary committee, was whipped and knocked down by an unidentified young woman, supposedly a suffragette. She attacked Lord Weardale with a short dog whip on the departure platform at Euston station. Spectators seeing him fall, rushed in and overpowered the woman before she could renew her attack. Travelers who crowded the station at that hour were greatly excited, and the police reserves were called out. The woman was arrested and whisked away to a police station in a taxicab. In the meantime friends helped Lord Weardale into a cab and took him to his home, where he was made presentable and resumed his interrupted journey. It was believed that the young woman mistook Lord Weardale for Premier Asquith.

FRENCH COURTS PART MR. AND MRS. MACKAY

Mutual Divorce Granted In Paris For Desertion.

New York, Feb. 19.—It was announced the French courts had granted a mutual divorce to Mrs. Katherine Duer Mackay and Clarence H. Mackay in Paris on Feb. 11 last. Mr. Mackay received the custody of the children, but Mrs. Mackay has the right to see them "at all reasonable times."

John B. Stanchfield, counsel to Mrs. Mackay, issued the following statement:

"In December last Mrs. Mackay sailed for Europe and took up her residence in an apartment at Paris which she had held under lease for a considerable period of time. She brought suit in the tribunal of the Seine against Mr. Mackay for a divorce on the ground of desertion. He voluntarily appeared in the action and interposed a counterclaim alleging desertion on the part of the plaintiff. No other charge was involved. The court, as is the practice in France, endeavored to bring about a reconciliation. Being unable to accomplish such a result, a divorce was granted on or about Feb. 11 to each of the parties. The custody of the children was awarded to Mr. Mackay, with the right to Mrs. Mackay to see them at all reasonable times."

Clarence H. Coudert, counsel for Mr. Mackay, made the following statement:

"On Feb. 11 the French courts granted a mutual divorce to Mr. and Mrs. Mackay, in an action brought by Mrs. Mackay on the ground of desertion, Mr. Mackay having interposed a counterclaim on the same ground. No other charge was involved. The decree grants the full custody and control of the three children to Mr. Mackay with the right to visit them accorded to Mrs. Mackay."

It has been known for some time that there was an estrangement between the couple. Mrs. Mackay was Katherine Alexandra Duer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Duer, Sr., and Mr. Mackay were married in 1898.

MARYLAND AGAINST SUFFRAGE

Legislators Decide, 60 to 34, Against Votes For Women.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 19.—The woman suffrage bill was killed in the house of delegates by a vote of 60 to 34, as a group of women who had worked hard for the bill looked on. The bill provided for the submission to popular vote of a constitutional amendment to give women the right to vote. It would have required a three-fifths majority to pass.

The vote disposes of the question for this session.

CASTILLO'S CASE PUZZLES THE U. S.

His Extradition to Villa Means Certain Death.

LEGAL FRACAS MAY ARISE

Deportation as an Undesirable Alien at a Point Where Rebel Leader Controls Is Now Believed to Be Intention of Washington.

Washington, Feb. 19.—A complicated problem presents itself to the authorities at Washington over the capture of Maximo Castillo and six of his band, said to be responsible for the death of fourteen Americans in a train wreck in the Cumbre tunnel. The question now is what is to be done with Castillo and how.

The war department was officially informed that Castillo had been caught on the American side of the line by an army patrol in New Mexico and that he and his followers were being sent to El Paso to be turned over to Brigadier General Scott, commanding at that point. The Mexicans were seized and are being held on the charge of crossing into the United States under arms in violation of the neutrality situation of this government.

Secretary Bryan asked General Villa to apprehend and punish Castillo for his alleged responsibility for the death of the fourteen Americans in the tunnel disaster. It now appears it would have simplified the situation for this government had Villa succeeded in capturing the bandit leader rather than that he was caught by American troops in United States territory. It is assumed that the state department, having asked for the capture and punishment of Castillo, the Washington authorities will be obliged to take steps to see that he is returned to a jurisdiction in which Villa's authority is supposed to be supreme. Villa has already announced, however, that if he gets his hands on Castillo he will kill him, and it is doubted that the administration will feel like turning even Castillo over to certain death at the hands of the rebel leader.

There are several ways in which Castillo might be returned to Mexico. The department of labor, having charge of immigration matters, might claim jurisdiction and turn him back as an undesirable alien not to be admitted into the United States. He could be deported either on the charge of having been guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude or he might be deported as a lunatic if a lunacy commission found him of unsound mind. In either event Villa's representatives would get control of his person if he were sent across the line from El Paso.

Might Claim Jurisdiction.

The state department might, on the other hand, claim jurisdiction and proceed to extradite him. It is expected that Villa will ask for his extradition. A request for extradition will raise nice questions of law, however. Requests of the Huerta government for extradition of criminals have been recognized, but the right of the rebel leaders to ask extradition under the treaty has been never recognized because the question has not yet come up.

It is believed that the state department will decide what procedure is to be adopted in his case and which department of the government is to take charge of the matter. A decision is expected in a day or two.

Castillo is in a position to raise legal difficulties, it is believed, if he obtains the services of a lawyer on the border. He is reported as denying that he caused the train disaster in which the Americans were killed and to claim also that he is not a bandit, but a representative of the Zapata cause in the north.

Villa yearns for Castillo. He announced in Juarez that he will guarantee that Castillo gets a fair trial and quick execution.

"He will be shot in public," said the rebel general. "Oh, yes; we will give him a trial—a real trial. We will charge him with the murder of M. J. Gilmartin, an American, and fifty others, and then we will shoot him."

WILSON CRITICISED ON CANAL TOLLS BILL

His Intention to Repeal Arouses Senator Bristow.

Washington, Feb. 19.—President Wilson's intention to repeal the Panama canal tolls exemption came in for its first senate debate, during which it was characterized by Senator Bristow, Republican, as an aid to transcontinental railroads. Senator Lodge, Republican, and Senator Owen defended the president's position, while Senator Chamberlain, Democrat, declined to agree with it. Mr. Bristow denied having impugned the president's motives.

Senator Bristow declared Mr. Wilson's attitude on the Panama canal plank of the Baltimore convention and on the suffrage question had "given us a line on some of the peculiar and interesting characteristics of our chief executive which may be exceedingly useful to the country in the future." He quoted the single presidential term plank and asked, "At the proper time, will the president interpret this plank in harmony with his position as to suffrage or as to canal tolls?"

"The greed of the railroads and the audacious claims of Great Britain seem far more potent with our chief executive than appeals of women," said he.

Senator Sutherland declared the most convincing argument for woman suffrage was the lack of any persuasive argument against it.

When Senator Owen took the floor to defend President Wilson the debate turned from suffrage to Panama tolls. He declared there was likely to creep into a party platform some plank not fully digested and therefore not to be regarded as conclusive upon the party.

"The question had not been decided upon by the national Democracy," said he. "I say that the conscience of no Democrat is bound by the platform, because it does not represent the sober judgment of the party."

BLEASE BLUFFER, SAYS BURNS

Barking Dog, Who Runs When He Hears "Boo," Detective Asserts.

Atlanta, Feb. 19.—Governor Cole L. Blease was denounced as "a barking dog that doesn't bite" by Detective W. J. Burns, who came to Atlanta to deliver a lecture. Burns was asked if he had come through South Carolina.

"I came from St. Louis," said Mr. Burns. "It seems there is a fellow in South Carolina—what's his name? Oh, yes, Blease—who doesn't like me because I've told the truth about him.

"However, that fellow is the least of my worries. He is a barking dog that doesn't bite. He talks and rants and blusters around and yells about what he is going to do—and then tucks his tail between his legs and runs when you say 'boo' at him.

"I have understood that for the last few years the people have been trying to clean up the United States senate, instead of besmirching it. To elect a fellow Blease to the senate would be a disgrace to American citizenship."

GOOD IDEE, SCOOP YOU FIXED IT ALL RIGHT

IN THE SPORTING SPOTLIGHT

"Sportdom Tips"

HITTING THE WOOD.

The movement to stimulate interest in the bowling game on the local Elks' alleys, while delayed, is a worthy one and this club tournament will go a long way toward popularizing the sport in these parts. There is a wealth of excellent uncovered material in the ranks of the Elks' club and this tourney will serve to bring the stars to the surface. A large number of promising pinners have entered the big event which has been put on a competitive basis and the prizes offered are both remunerative and inducive. Nine five-man teams have been entered in the tourney, thus giving forty-five wood splitters a chance to get into competition. This preliminary pinning will give those interested in the Elks' Bowling League a chance to single out material for a good team next year. This is the first season the local tribe has had a set of alleys of its own and this is the initial step to popularize the game hereabouts.

MANY GAMES PROGRAMMED.

Beginning this afternoon a week-end replete with pleasing basketball features will be ushered in for local followers of the sport to enjoy. Plainfield and North Plainfield High Schools are due to dispose of that league trouble this afternoon and tonight four Y. M. H. A. teams hurl the ball about Saengerbund Hall. The teams of the New Brunswick and Plainfield Y. M. H. A. are scheduled to meet in the big clash and the second teams of the two associations will come to gether in the "prelim." Tomorrow afternoon Plainfield is scheduled to entertain the Dickinson High School quintet, of Jersey City. Saturday night Hope Chapel will be the scene of two games, the Y. W. C. A. team will go to Trenton and there will be a pair of contests on the Y. M. C. A. floor.

FEDERALS STILL FIGHTING.

The Federals will no doubt arouse a vast deal of interest and curiosity, and they will doubtless play well, but while they will supply sufficient outlet for baseball enthusiasm they are not intrinsically good enough to draw from the other leagues' attendances. In our estimation the Federals are at jresent barking up the wrong tree and inviting heavy losses without prospect of commensurate gain. If the "Feds" have every man they say they have, or think they have, they will still be below the class of the National and American Leagues.

DOUBLE BILL AT SAENGERBUND.

The North Plainfield High School girls' basketball team will get into action tomorrow night, when it will meet a local team which is to be captained by Miss Jessie Stewart, the former Plainfield High School star. The game will be played in Saengerbund Hall. Manager Lillian Spencer has secured another attraction to go with this one. Two "kid" teams, under the names of the Somerset F. C. and Hope Chapel Seconds, will appear in a preliminary to the feminine contest. The former team is captained by Ralph Taylor. After the games there will be dancing.

DOUBLE PROGRAM.

Two basketball games of unusual interest to a certain element in this city will be staged on the Saengerbund Hall court tonight, the first teams of the Plainfield and New Brunswick Y. M. H. A. squaring the main attraction and the second quintets coming together in the preliminary.

SCHEDULED FOR TONIGHT.

KINGSLEY TROUNCED WESTFIELD QUINTET

Home Five Ran Away From Visitors in Loosely Played Game.

Members of the Kingsley School, of Essex Fells, scored an easy victory over the Westfield High School quintet in a game of basketball played at the former school's gymnasium yesterday afternoon, the final score reading 47 to 12. Gus Schwartz, the Essex Fells lad who has been signed by the Baltimore International League club, refereed the contest and performed his task in a creditable manner.

Kingsley, though minus the services of its regular centre, Gingham, who is out on account of illness, displayed excellent ability at caging field goals, the net being whisked by the winners on twenty-three occasions. The guarding of the visitors, too, was a feature, the Westfield aggregation getting but one field goal during the second session. The playing of Frost and Tremaine for the winners and Day for the visitors featured.

MANY FINE FEATURES FOR ALL SPORTSMEN

Coming Event at Madison Square Garden Has Many Great Attractions.

All lovers of the great outdoors will find the Sportsmen's Show in Madison Square Garden next week, February 21-27, well worth a visit during their stay in the big city. For more than twenty years the Sportsmen's Show has been one of the stellar features of the Garden's season and to judge by the diversity of the program this year's show will go on record as the best of them all.

Everything from a baseball bat to a full camping equipment will be included in the exhibits of the great sporting goods, firearms and camp outfitting. The whole display will be staged in an outdoor setting redolent of the pine clad hills and breeze swept lakes of the wilderness. To lend additional verisimilitude to the scene a group of Indians will pitch their tepees at one end of the enclosure while here and there the camp fires of guides from the Adirondacks and Maine woods will gleam as the veterans of forest and stream swap yarns over their bacon and coffee.

The program of events includes three trap-shooting contests of wide interest: the Amateur Indoor World's Championship, in which more than 300 of the best gun-club men in this country, Canada and England will compete; the Professional Indoor Championship, with such men as Neal Apgar, of the Peters' Cartridge Company; W. B. Barton, of the Marlin Fire-Arms Company, and Jack Fanning, of the Dupont Powder Company, as contestants; and the Woman's Indoor Championship in which a score of the best known women gunners from all parts of the country will compete.

In addition there will be a big program of water sports conducted under the A. A. U. The tank will be 60x30 feet and deep enough to permit lofty diving competitions. All the crack swimmers of the East will take part in the races, which will range from 50-yard sprints to one mile.

WINLESS FRESHIES SCORED ONE AT SOPHS EXPENSE

Although the Freshman class basketball team of the North Plainfield High School did not win a game in the interclass league, it defeated a picked team of Sophomores this yesterday afternoon, in Saengerbund Hall. The final score was 6 to 18. The Sophs used three of their regulars but their opponents could not be stopped from scoring. The first half ended with the score standing 26 to 6.

Force started the second period with six field goals in succession. While the second year men were making an even dozen points their rivals were piling up a total of forty two. Force and Denny led all the players in the scoring line, each making twenty points, and Hebert was a close second with eighteen. For the losers, McDonough was the mainstay.

LOCAL SCHOOL TEACHER RESIGNS TO JOIN INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE TEAM

Carl Johnson, assistant manual training instructor in the local public schools has tendered his resignation which will take effect March 1 when he will leave for the South as a member of the Jersey City team of the International League. As told exclusively in this paper last fall, Johnson was given several tryouts last season with the "Skeetertown" team and made good as evidenced by the fact that he has been recalled for the spring training trip.

Mr. Johnson has been assured of a berth on the International League team and gave up a responsible position in this city to take up professional sport. While he has never appeared as a participant in the national pastime in local circles he has been a star in other sections of this State and Pennsylvania and his ability as a ball tosser has attracted wide attention.

The Plainfield instructor came to the local schools two years ago when he was graduated from Drexel Institute in Philadelphia and has been engaged in work here since that time. During the summer months he played with the Hopewell semi-professional team, Hopewell being his home, and he is widely known throughout that section as a ball tosser. While engaged in teaching here Mr. Johnson spent Saturday's at his home in Hopewell and appeared in week-end attractions at that place. He played for three years with the Drexel Institute team and was captain of the college aggregation in 1911, his last season of amateur ball.

After coming to Plainfield Mr. Johnson assisted in coaching the grammar school nines in this city and has been active in the schoolboy athletics locally. The signing of a Jersey City contract made it necessary for him to severe his connections with the Plainfield schools and in the future he will devote his entire time during spring, summer and fall months to organized baseball.

Late last season Johnson appeared in a Jersey City uniform and made a big hit from the outset. His regular position is behind the bat but his versitality extends over every position in the infield and outfield. It is understood that the Jersey City management will make a backstop out of him this season and the fact that that club is badly in need of good battery men makes his place on the club nine almost a certainty. Besides being a clever infielder and fast baserunner Johnson is a terror with the stick and his batting was a big feature of the contests played by the Hopewell semi-pros last year.

Mr. Johnson is still engaged in his manual training work here and will continue in that capacity until his contract expires on March 1. He will then go directly to Jersey City and join the players who will be his future club-mates. Since coming to Plainfield he has become widely known among the boys of the public schools and has been widely sought as a coach for school boy teams.

SPRINGFIELD SENIORS WILL ATTEND EXHIBIT

Gymnasts Will Perform in Local Y. M. C. A. Before Large Audience.

According to announcement received in a letter from "Hub" Stine, this morning, the faculty and alumni body of the Springfield Training School has sanctioned the appearance of the college gymnastic team in this city, March 14, and the presence of the wonderful crew of trained gymnasts is now a certainty for that date in the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. Secretary Parker of the association, announced a few days ago that the Springfield athletes had been tentatively engaged but the communication received from Stine, who is a member of the student body of that institution, sets at rest any uncertainty about the event being held.

"Hub," in his letter, also reviews the baseball situation at Springfield and from present appearances it looks as though Plainfield would have another representative in the collegiate baseball game this season. He states that preliminary work on the diamond is coming along fine and there is a big squad out for the battery positions. Stine is trying for the catcher's job and from information garnered from those who have been in touch with Springfield athletics we learn that the Plainfield athlete is practically sure of his job as backstop this season.

The Springfield gym team will accompany the seniors on their annual eastern invasion and a large group of the fourth year men will be on hand at the local association March 14, when the gym. team shows here. The seniors hold their annual meeting with the alumni in New York the night previous and they will probably come to Plainfield en masse to witness the exhibition given by their schoolmates.

According to "Hub" the team is one of the best the college has had in years and exhibitions given in Newark and Newburgh have been marked successes. Stine will return to Plainfield for a ten days' vacation March 20, the Easter recess.

THE PLAINFIELD THEATRE

The minimum wage question and recent agitation thereupon play an important part in "Within the Law," which will be seen at the Plainfield Theatre, Monday afternoon and evening. The heroine of Bayard Veiller's melodrama is a poor shop-girl underpaid and underfed, who after serving three years' term in prison for an offense that she did not commit, and trying vainly to obtain decent employment, becomes the head of a band of "crooks" and with their assistance takes her revenge upon society. As the leader of "Joe Garson" the forger, "English Eddie Griggs" a thief, "Aggie Lynch" an amusing little blackmailer and other confederates, "Mary Turner" obtains enormous sums of money, but manages always to keep "Within the Law." She even hires a lawyer to help her evade wrong-doing which is punishable. It is curious to learn, as one does in this play, that there are many forms of crime which are practically legal. Another interesting feature of the drama is the introduction of a Maxim silencer, which is shown in this play for the first time on any stage. It is a device by which a revolver may be fired without producing a report of any kind. How "Joe Garson" makes use of this formidable gun is a point of pivotal interest in working out the plot. "Within the Law" is in four acts and there are more thrills to the situations of the act than were ever before written into one drama by any author. Among the well-known names of players who will be seen here in Mr. Veiller's absorbing play are Catherine Tower, George A. Wright, Marie Fitzgerald, Rockcliffe Fellowes and Harold Hartsall.

PUPILS GIVE RECITAL.

The following pupils took part in the Valentine recital given by Miss Grace Powell Karr at her studio in the Babcock Building: The Misses Edith Shotwell, Ruth Carver, Margaret Endress, Eleanor King, Gertrude Rittenhouse, Charlotte Fowler and Herbert Hooker, Kenneth Burtis. The pupils played in excellent form, with precision and expression, showing that class lessons develop the love of music as well as personality while at the same time promoting musical temperament. At the close of the recital valentines were distributed and a musical cupid guessing game was played in which both guests and pupils took part.

WRITING EXPERTS FIGHT OVER WILL

Bitter Contest Is Promised In $2,000,000 Estate.

LAWYERS READY TO AID

Substitution and Erasures Studied In the Runkel Instrument — Other Irregularities Noticed In the Document of Orange Man—Griggs Is Counsel.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 19.—Handwriting experts are examining and photographing the William Runkel will in the surrogate's office. Noted counsel were on hand with the experts in a preliminary examination of the instrument.

The appearance of the experts and counsel marks the beginning of the preparations for what will be, it is believed, a bitterly fought legal battle over the estate.

Runkel lived in Orange. He was in the iron manufacturing business. In his will he disposed of an estate of $2,000,000, largely to friends and charity. To his brother, Harry G. Runkel of Plainfield, his only near relative, he left the income of a trust fund of $250,000 and the residue of the estate after all bequests are paid. The residue would be about $500,000, it is estimated.

Albert S. Osborn of New York was one of the handwriting experts who has inspected the Runkel document. Former Governor John W. Griggs of Paterson and William J. Kinsey of Nutley, another handwriting expert, also viewed the will. They visited the courthouse, accompanied by Harry G. Runkel, brother of the testator, who has filed a caveat against the will.

Osborn, it is said, was appearing in the interests of McCarter & English of this city, attorneys for W. E. R. Smith, the Runkel executor, of Orange. Several New York attorneys associated with Mr. Griggs were also present.

The points of doubt that have arisen over the will are caused by the apparent substitution of the first page of the document. There are several erasures on the other pages of the will.

Under the edges of the fasteners that bound the pages together are remnants of what was supposedly the first page originally. The first page as produced was whole and was not torn at all at the parts where the fasteners should have come.

Besides this, the writing is apparently in a different ink. The wording of the first page and the succeeding page do not join properly, a repetition of words being in evidence at the beginning of the second page.

The alleged erasures are on the name of the executor and in the cancellation of a bequest of $25,000 to a friend.

The morning will be given over to renewing old acquaintances, while in the afternoon he will march in the alumni parade to University field to watch the baseball game between Princeton and Yale. CHAUFFEUR ACQUITTED.

Tried For Manslaughter For the Killing of Young Girl.

Mays Landing, N. J., Feb. 19.—Thomas Williams, a chauffeur in the employ of Wilbert Brumont, a wealthy contractor of Atlantic City, was placed on trial here on an indictment charging him with manslaughter and was acquitted by the jury. The state claimed that Williams was responsible for the death of Rose Amorosi, the seven-year-old daughter of Louis Amorosi, a bandmaster employed on the million dollar pier. Witnesses testified that when he ran over the little girl with the heavy auto he had made no attempt to avoid her and had given no warning of his approach.

The defense claimed that the girl had stepped from the curb directly in the path of the car, and the chauffeur did not see her until the machine struck and went over her.

ICE JAM IN HUDSON; SUPPLIES CUT OFF

Impassable Roads Also Add to Hardship.

New York, Feb. 19.—With water transportation practically cut off from the wharves of North and East rivers by the ice, the city is threatened with a serious shortage in its supply of fuel and provisions. Country roads are impassable in many places and truckmen and dairymen have difficulty in getting even a small part of their shipments to the railroads. The unprecedented ice jams in the rivers have multiplied the hardships to which the snowfall, as yet only slightly cleared away, has put the suffering city.

Captain J. F. Wild, in charge of the revenue cutter service in this district, reported that the revenue cutter Manhattan, exploring the Hudson under orders from Washington, was unable to get above One Hundred and Sixty-second street with any certainty of getting out again. The river for twelve miles above is solidly packed with an ice jam.

Officials of the American sugar refineries at Yonkers and Mayor Lennon had appealed to Representative Ogden for government help to prevent the shutting down of the refineries, throwing 1,100 men out of work.

One more revelation of New York city's childlike helplessness in a winter storm emergency was made when Captain Wild said it would probably become necessary to borrow an ice breaker boat from Boston, Baltimore or Philadelphia to break the ice jams which block the North and East rivers and shut off the city's supply of coal and provisions.

Four days after the breaking of the storm found twenty-five miles of streets out of the city's 250 miles sufficiently cleared from snow to allow traffic to move along them with comparative freedom.

EXONERATE GORE IN WOMAN'S SUIT

Decision Is Reached Within Three Minutes.

CROWD CHEERS VERDICT.

Courtroom In an Uproar When Jury Announces Its Decision—Mrs. Bond Remains Impassive — Demonstration Continues For Fifteen Minutes—To Take Appeal.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Feb. 19.—United States Senator Thomas Pryor Gore was exonerated of charges of improper conduct by a verdict in his favor returned in the district court here in the suit for $50,000 damages instituted by Mrs. Minnie E. Bond of Oklahoma City.

The jury retired for its deliberations at 5:30 o'clock and in ten minutes had filed back into the courtroom and taken their seats. The packed courtroom was silent as Judge Clark read the verdict. At his final words, "in favor of the defendant," those near the front of the room heard Mrs. Gore utter a stifled cry as she leaped from her chair, grasped the hand of Senator Gore and whispered something into his ear. When she turned and shook hands with Henry Carpenter, the foreman of the jury, tears were streaming down the eyes of both she and the aged farmer. Senator Gore merely smiled.

Simultaneously with the cry of Mrs. Gore a great cheer arose from the spectators. Hats were thrown to the ceiling, and the courthouse rang with the name of Gore. Women laughed and cried.

The demonstration continued unchecked for fifteen minutes, when Judge Clark rapped for order and dismissed the jury.

The Verdict.

Following is the verdict returned:

"We, the jury impaneled in the case entitled Minnie E. Bond versus Thomas Pryor Gore, find that the evidence is insufficient upon which to predicate a suit and that said evidence wholly exonerate the defendant, Thomas Pryor Gore. And we further find that in our opinion the facts in the case were entirely insufficient upon which to base a suit. And we unanimously state that at the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, had the defendant at the time announced that he desired to introduce no evidence in his behalf and rested his case, our verdict would have been the same in that event with the one which is returned by us—to wit, in favor of the defendant Thomas Pryor Gore."

During the reading of the verdict there was no perceptible change in the expression of Mrs. Bond's face. From the time the jury left the room until the demonstration began she sat leaning on a table and scribbling on a piece of paper. She seemed in no haste to leave the room until she was approached by her attorneys, when she arose and walked out with them and her husband.

Following the dismissal of the jury the crowd again began to cheer as it filed out of the courthouse. For several minutes Senator and Mrs. Gore lingered in the courtroom accepting the congratulations of friends.

A carbon copy of the verdict was presented to Senator Gore. The senator announced that he will remain in Oklahoma City until Saturday. He will speak before the state convention of the Young Men's Democratic club Thursday. From here he and Mrs Gore will go to Hot Springs, Ark., for a few days of rest and will then return to Washington.

"We were all just aching to get our hands on that woman," declared one of the jurors after dismissal while referring to Mrs. Bond. None of the jurors hesitated in exclaiming their admiration of the conduct of Senator Gore and Mrs. Gore and their counsel during the trial.

E. J. Giddings, attorney for Mrs Bond, announced that he will appeal the case to the state supreme court on the ground that the jury was influenced by the applause.

MORE CLASHES IN HAITI.

Rebels Engage Government Troops at Grande Riviere.

Cape Haitien, Haiti, Feb 19.—Government troops and rebels engaged in a sharp battle at Grande Riviere, fifteen miles from here. Davilmar Theodore, the rebel leader, was so hard pressed that he sent urgent calls for re-enforcements.

The Haitien battleship Nord Alexis bombarded Cagnetto, on the coast, and another force of government troops invaded Limbe.

The foreign consular corps here and the commander of the United States battleship San Francisco advised Senator Theodore to retire from the city, but he refused.

ABANDONMENT COMMISSION FAVORS PARKWAY ALONG CANAL

The parkway and boulevard plan for the old Morris Canal right-of-way is receiving an unexpected but valuable support. The Morris Canal Abandonment Commission, through its individual members, has expressed itself in favor of the idea, and the Commission is the most powerful factor in the situation. The Commission, it is also understood, will recommend strongly that the canal be abandoned, and will report to the legislature to that effect as soon as the terms of abandonment are decided upon by the members of the Commission.

This has raised the hope of the public-spirited citizens who have been fighting for the parkway scheme without any support aside from their own enthusiasm and the advantages which the plan obviously possesses. It has given the parkway movement new life. What it needs now is the co-operation of the cities and towns along the line of the canal, and the intelligent support of the people of the State as a whole.

The supporters of the parkway plan argue that it is the only feasible thing to do. The Abandonment Commission has agreed that the canal ought to be abandoned and that will probably settle the most important question of all. It now remains to be determined what is to be done with the right-of-way after the abandonment. If it is not taken in hand it will lose all value in a short time. But, if it is changed into a parkway, it will become a permanent asset to the State and will form one of the greatest highways in the country. It will open some of the most beautiful stretches of country in New Jersey to people seeking country estates that are easily reached, and will make a driveway that will not be equalled in picturesqueness.

Money goes a long ways towards creating beautiful things, but money cannot create the quaint, old-fashioned charm of the Morris Canal. All this will be lost if the parkway plan is not taken advantage of, and, once lost, all the money in the State will not be able to restore it. That is why the advocates of the plan are so active this spring in an effort to make the legislature see the necessity of carrying out the parkway plan at the same time that the canal is abandoned.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad, which leases the Morris Canal, and has not been able to use it profitably for over forty years, has under its agreement kept the canal in working order at a heavy annual expense, and this obviates the necessity for any restorative work. The canal is in working order all the time, although as a means of transportation it is so hopelessly out-of-date that no one ever uses it. When it comes to carrying out the parkway plan, all the money the Lehigh Valley Railroad has been compelled to spend uselessly to keep up the canal, will save the State a heavy expense in restoring it to a condition that will make it available for parkway purposes. The State will only need to construct the highway, leaving the canal and tow-path much as they were, but using less water, of course, on account of the permanent closing of locks.

TO DARKEN HAIR APPLY SAGE TEA

Lock Young! Bring Back Its Natural Color, Gloss and Thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.—Adv.

GLASS OF SALTS CLEANS KIDNEYS

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Drink Lots of Water.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which every one should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.—Adv.

TWO SMART COLLARS IN THE NEW JAPANESE DESIGNS

A fresh, new embroidered collar can do wonders for a plain frock of serge or any heavy washable material and often such a collar is the only trimming necessary for a utility dress to wear to school, business, or at home. Last year the Bulgarian note predominated in embroideries for collars and dress trimmings. This season the Japanese designs promise to influence our clothes.

Pattern 14668, includes two Japanese designs for embroidering collars and also a dainty Medici collar with reverses to be worked on fine net or organdie. Any of these are appropriate for wear with separate blouses or with dresses of serge, crêpe de Chine, wool or cotton ratine. For instance, a frock of blue ratine would be very attractively finished with the first collar embroidered on white cotton ratine in the three shades of old blue, characteristic of the Japanese designs. A dress of lavender cotton crepe might be finished with the collar of white crepe voile or cotton ratine embroidered in three shades of wistaria. The girdle and tie might be of wistaria colored charmeuse or taffeta making a distinctive afternoon frock at very little expense.

Either of these designs might be used for embroidering the pretty collars of net and organdie that are so expensive when priced in the shops. In this case the work could be done entirely in white in solid work. Don't try to stamp the net, but baste the pattern to the under side of the material, embroidering over the paper which will give a firm foundation while doing the work and can easily be torn away when the embroidery is finished.

Such collars as these are appropriate for trimming the school girl's frock of wool or cotton material, and will give a smart touch to an otherwise very plain dress.

Hot iron, transfer pattern 14629 which includes designs for three collars, will be supplied to readers on receipt of price, 15 cents. The Embroidery Book, illustrating over 500 designs for embroideries of all kinds and suggesting many new ideas for your spring clothes, will be sent on receipt of mailing price, 8 cents.

Practical Fashion Hints

Three Designs For Guest Towels.

Dainty little towels of the finest of huckaback are now among the necessary linens of every housekeeper. These are for the guest who comes to lunch or dinner or tea after a set of tennis and needs a towel which will be used only once. There are plain and fancy weaves of huckaback for making these little towels, and you will find stripes, pretty little all-over figures, as well as the plain qualities at the linen counter. The 15 or 18-inch widths are most practical, for although you can buy the 12 and 14-inch widths these towels are almost too small to be useful. If you expect to finish the ends of the towels with one-inch hemstitched hems, cut the material in 28-inch lengths, while if scalloping is to be used on the ends, it may be cut in 27-inch lengths.

The pattern includes designs for stamping three towels and scalloping for finishing both ends of all three. A set of these towels would be an appropriate gift for the bride's linen shower, and if you are planning to make something for the Easter church fair these will surely be salable. Towels such as these can be made to sell for about one dollar and a half each, according to the amount of work.

Initials may be used for marking these towels and you will find either the one-inch script or block style appropriate. The embroidering of the design on the towels should be done in solid work which may be combined with punched work or French dots. Directions and diagrams for the stitches are given on each pattern envelope.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Guaranteed hot iron transfer patterns for stamping three towels, No. 14629, can be supplied on receipt of price, 10 cents. Fill out the coupon and enclose stamps or coin to the Pattern Department of this paper.

Some Cookery Suggestions

HINTS FOR COOKING HADDOCK.

DINNER MENU.
Clear Soup.
Haddock au Gratin.
Mashed Turnips. Potatoes.
Tomato Jelly Salad.
Cheese. Crackers.
Chocolate Pudding.
Coffee.

HADDOCK is in season all the year and is one of the most popular fish we have. It has an excellent flavor. The fish seldom weighs more than three or four pounds, and the largest fish are the best.

Baked Quickly.

Haddock au Gratin.—Skin, bone and flake a dried haddock, sprinkle it with pepper, a little cream or sour milk, a pinch of chopped parsley and tarragon and some fine bread raspings. Have ready a well greased fireproof dish, arrange the fish, etc., over this, moisten with a little stock, cover with breadcrumbs, put a little butter over the top and bake in the oven for about twenty minutes.

Baked Haddock.—Take one fresh haddock, one teaspoonful breadcrumbs, one tablespoonful chopped parsley, one teacupful chopped suet, salt and pepper, pinch of nutmeg and one egg. Wash and clean the haddock, prepare the forcement by mixing the crumbs, suet, parsley, seasonings and egg together. Press this into the inside of the haddock and sew up the fish. Truss it in the form of an S and place in a greased baking tin. Bake for twenty minutes and dust with browned crumbs when cooked. Dish and serve immediately with parsley sauce.

Well Seasoned Fish.

Haddock Creole Style.—Take a two to two and a half pound haddock, a cup of tomatoes, two tablespoonfuls of chopped onion, a teaspoonful of salt and cornstarch, a dash of pepper and of paprika, three cloves, three allspice, a bay leaf, a tablespoonful each of butter, chopped parsley and caramel. Split the haddock and remove the center bone, cut away the small bones along the edge on top of the fish; wash and dry between pieces of cheesecloth. The fish must never remain in water after it has been scalded and washed. Put the onion and drippings in pan and cook until onion is tender, but not brown; shake pan constantly; add the tomato, salt, pepper, paprika, cloves, allspice and bayleaf. Cook slowly ten minutes. Strain, add the cornstarch, wet with a little cold water and the parsley. Cook one minute and pour over the fish, which has been put in a bakedish; brush the pan with drippings and put the fish in cut side down. Bake twenty minutes in a hot oven.

It Was an Outdoor Party.

Daddy's Bedtime Story —

Dollie Allie Bah's Unique Birthday Celebration.

"THERE is one kind of bush," said daddy, "that looks prettier in the winter than in the summer, and that is the old fashioned snowberry bush. It is quite a large sized bush with thin spreading branches, but it is not very tall. In the spring and summer it has little wee pink buds on it, but as soon as the cold weather comes all these small pink buds turn into little white berries, which completely cover the bush, making it look almost as though it were covered with snow.

"There was once a little girl named Peggy, who lived with her grandmother and granddaddy. They were dear, quaint old people. They lived in a big rambling old fashioned white house, and back of the house was a garden. In the winter time the garden always looked very lovely because there were a number of snowberry bushes that had been planted there for years and years.

"Now, Peggy had a great many dolls, but she had one favorite whose name was Alice Gustava Ariel Star Jewel Bright Carol Carmen. Now, that was a pretty long name for one doll and also a pretty long name for Peggy to use every time she spoke to her pet doll, which was very often. So for short she called her Allie Bah.

"Allie Bah was a rag doll with a beautiful painted face, and she had a great many fine clothes. It was the day before Allie Bah's fourth birthday, when Peggy decided she would have a birthday party for her. Peggy thought a doll's snowball party would be just the thing. Peggy invited several of her little friends and told them to be sure to bring their dolls with them. The day was a glorious, clear, cold one, and all the dolls were well wrapped up, for Peggy had said it was to be an out of door party.

"All the children held their dollies' hands and made them throw snowballs back and forth at one another. The snowballs were apt to break on the china dolls' faces, so in the end the rag dolls won. That pleased Peggy, for, as her favorite doll was a rag doll, she was delighted to have the rag dolls win. And then, too, it was Allie Bah's birthday party and given all in her honor.

"After they had all become rather cold and had pulled off so many snowberries that the bushes looked quite bare all the little girls took their dollies and followed Peggy, carrying Allie Bah, into the house. Peggy's grandmother had a most delicious supper awaiting them of creamed chicken and hot chocolate and apple dumplings. But, best of all, was a surprise of which Peggy knew nothing about, for her grandmother had arranged it.

"In the center of the table was a cake with pink icing and in white letters was printed, 'Allie Bah—Fourth Birthday.'"

CHAPTER XX.

The Professor Sums Up.

THE mayor of Reuton slid into the shadows.

"As I was saying, Mr. Magee," continued the professor, "Mr. Kendrick and I came up here to secure this package of money as evidence against Cargan and—the man above. I speak with the voice of the law when I say you must turn this money over to me."

For answer Magee smiled at the girl.

"You'd better go now," he said. "It's a long walk down the mountain."

"You refuse?" cried the professor.

"Absolutely. Don't we, Miss Norton?" said Magee.

"Absolutely," she repeated bravely.

"Then, sir," announced the old man crushingly, "you are little better than a thief, and this girl is your accomplice."

"So it must look on the face of it," assented Magee. The girl moved to the big front door, and Magee, with his eyes still on the room, backed away until he stood beside her. He handed her his key.

"I give you," he said, "to the gods of the mountain. But it's only a loan—I shall surely want you back. I can't follow ten feet behind as I threatened—it will be ten hours instead. Good night and good luck."

She turned the key in the lock.

"Billy Magee," she whispered, "yours is a faith beyond understanding. I shall tell the gods of the mountain that I am to be—returned. Good night, you—dear."

She went out quickly and Magee, locking the door after her, thrust the key into his pocket. For a moment no one stirred. Then Mr. Max leaped up and ran through the flickering light to the nearest window.

There was a flash, a report and Max came back into the firelight examining a torn trousers leg.

"I don't mean to kill anybody," explained Mr. Magee—"just to wing him. But I'm not an expert—I might shoot higher than I intend—so I suggest that no one else try a break for it."

"Mr. Magee," said Miss Thornhill, "I don't believe you have the slightest idea who that girl is nor what she wants with the money."

"That," he replied, "makes it all the more exciting, don't you think?"

"Do you mean," the professor exploded, "you don't know her? Well, you young fool!"

"It's rather fine of you," remarked Miss Thornhill.

"It's asinine if it's true," the professor voiced the other side of it.

"I hope every one is quite comfortable," remarked Mr. Magee, selecting a seat facing the crowd. "It's to be a long wait, you know."

In Upper Asquewan Falls the clock on the old town hall struck 9. Mr. Magee, on guard in Baldpate's dreary office, counted the strokes. She must be halfway down the mountain now. Tonight there would be no need of a troubadour to implore "Weep No More, My Lady." William Hallowell Magee had removed the cause for tears.

It was a long vigil he had begun, but there was no boredom in it for Billy Magee. He was too great a lover of contrast for that. As he looked around on the ill assorted group he guarded he compared them with the happier people of the inn's summer nights, about whom the girl had told him. Instead of these surly or sad folk sitting glumly under the pistol of romantic youth he saw maids garbed in the magic of muslin flit through the shadows. Lights glowed softly. A waltz came up from the casino on the breath of the summer breeze. Under the red and white awnings youth and joy and love had their day—or their night. The hermit was on hand with his postal carded romance. The trees gossiped in whispers on the mountain.

And, too, the rocking chair fleet gossiped in whispers on the veranda, pausing only when the admiral sailed by in his glory. Eagerly it ran down its game. This girl—this Myra Thornhill—he remembered, had herself been a victim. After Kendrick disappeared she had come there no more, for there were ugly rumors of the man who had fled. Mr. Magee saw the girl and her long absent lover whispering together in the firelight. He wondered if they, too, imagined themselves at Baldpate in the summer; if they heard the waltz in the casino and the laughter of men in the grill room.

Ten o'clock, said the town hall pompously. She was at the station now. In the room of her tears she was waiting—perhaps, her only companion the jacky of the "See the World" poster, whose garb was but a shade bluer than her eyes. Who was she? What was the bribe money of the Suburban railway to her? Mr. Magee did not know, but he trusted her, and he was glad she had won through him. He saw Professor Bolton walk through the flickering half light to join Myra Thornhill and Kendrick.

It must be half past by now. Yes from far below in the valley came the whistle of a train. Now she was boarding it—she and the money. Boarding it—for where? For what purpose? Again the train whistled.

"The siege," remarked Mr. Magee, "is more than half over, ladies and gentlemen."

The professor of comparative literature approached him and took a chair at his side.

"I want to talk with you, Mr. Magee," he said.

"A welcome diversion," assented Magee, his eyes still on the room.

"I have discussed matters with Miss Thornhill," said the professor in a low voice. "She has convinced me that in this affair you have acted from a wholly disinterested point of view. A mistaken idea of chivalry, perhaps. The infatuation of the moment for a pretty face—a thing to which an men with red blood in their veins are susceptible—a pleasant thing that I would be the last to want banished from the world."

"Miss Thornhill," replied Billy Magee, "has sized up the situation perfectly—except for one rather important detail. It is not the infatuation of the moment, professor. Say, rather, that of a lifetime."

"Ah, yes," the old man returned. "Youth—how sure it always is of that! I do not deprecate the feeling. Once long ago, I, too, had youth and faith. We will not dwell on that, however. Miss Thornhill assures me that Henry Bentley, the son of my friend John Bentley, esteems you highly. She asserts that you are in every respect, as far as her knowledge goes, an admirable young man. I feel sure that after calm contemplation you will see that what you have done is very unfortunate. The package of money, which in a giddy moment you have given into a young lady's keeping, is much desired by the authorities as evidence against a very corrupt political ring. I am certain that when you know all the details you will be glad to return with me to Reuton and do all in your power to help us regain possession of that package."

And now the town hall informed Mr. Magee that the hour was 11. He pictured a train flying like a black shadow through the white night. Was she on it—safe?

"Professor Bolton," he said, "there couldn't possibly be any one anywhere more eager than I to learn all the details of this affair—to hear your real reason for coming to Baldpate inn and to have the peroxide blond incident properly classified and given its niche in history. But let me tell you again my action of tonight was no mere madness of the moment. I shall stick to it through thick and thin. Now, about the blonds."

"The blonds!" repeated the professor dreamily. "Ah, yes. I must make a small confession of guilt there! I did not come here to escape the results of that indiscreet remark, but I really made it—about a year ago. Shall I ever forget? Hardly. The newspapers and my wife won't let me. I can never again win a new honor, however dignified, without being referred to in print as the peroxide blond advocate. On the night when Mr. Kendrick and I climbed Baldpate mountain I remarked as much to him. And so it occurred to me that if I found any need of explaining my presence here the blond incident would do very well. It was only—a white lie."

"A blond one," corrected Mr. Magee. "I forgive you, professor."

"To begin with," continued the professor, "I am a member of the faculty of the University of Reuton, situated, as you no doubt know, in the city of the same name. For a long time I have taken a quiet interest in our municipal politics. I have been up in arms—linguistic arms—against this odd character Cargan, who came from the slums to rule us with a rod of iron. Every one knows he is corrupt; that he is wealthy through the sale of privilege; that there is actually a fixed schedule of prices for favors in the way of city ordinances. I have often denounced him to my friends. Since I have met him—well, it is remarkable, is it not, the effect of personality on one's opinions? I expected to face a devil, with the usual appurtenances. Instead I have found a human, rather likable man."

Mr. Magee smiled over to where the great bulk of Cargan slouched in a chair.

"He's a bully old scout," he remarked.

"Even so," replied the professor, "his high handed career of graft in Reuton must come to a speedy close. He is of a type fast vanishing through the awakening public conscience. And his career will end, I assure you, despite the fact that you, Mr. Magee, have seen fit to send our evidence scurrying through the night at the behest of a chit of a girl. I beg your pardon—I shall continue. Young Drayton, the new county prosecutor, was several years back a favorite pupil of mine. After he left law school he fell under the spell of the picturesque mayor of Reuton. Cargan liked him and he rose rapidly. Drayton had no thought of ever turning against his benefactor when he accepted the first favors, but later the open selling of men's souls began to disgust him. When Cargan offered him the place of prosecutor a few months ago Drayton assured him that he would keep his oath of office.

"It was in me, remember," he went on, "that Drayton confided his resolve to serve the public. I was delighted at the news. A few weeks ago he informed me his first opportunity was at hand. Through one of the men in his office he had learned that Hayden of the Suburban Electric was seeking to consolidate that road, which had fallen into partial disrepute under his management during the illness of Thornhill, the president, with the Civic. The consolidation would raise the value of the Suburban nearly two million dollars—at the public's expense. Hayden had seen Cargan. Cargan had drafted ordinance No. 45 and informed Hayden that his price for passing it through the council would be the sum you have juggled in your possession on Baldpate mountain—$200,000."

"A mere trifle," remarked Magee sarcastically.

"So Cargan made Hayden see. Through long experience in these matters the mayor has become careless. He is the thing above the law, if not the law itself. He would have had no fear in accepting this money on Main street at midday. He had no fear when he came here and found he was being spied on.

"But Hayden—there was the difficulty that began the drama of Baldpate inn. Hayden had few scruples; but, as events tonight have well proved, Mr. Magee, he was a coward at heart. I do not know just why he lies on your bed upstairs at this moment a suicide. That is a matter between Kendrick and him and one which Kendrick himself has not yet fathomed. As I say, Hayden was afraid of being caught. Andy Rutter, manager of Baldpate inn for the last few summers, is in some way mixed up in the Suburban. It was he who suggested to Hayden that an absolutely secluded spot for passing this large sum of money would be the inn. The idea appealed to Hayden. Cargan tried to laugh him out of it. The mayor did not relish the thought of a visit to Baldpate mountain in the dead of winter, particularly as he considered such precautions unnecessary. But Hayden was firm. This spot, he pointed out, was ideal, and the mayor at last laughingly gave in. The sum involved was well worth taking a little trouble to gain."

Professor Bolton paused and blinked his dim old eyes.

"So the matter was arranged," he continued. "Mr. Bland, a clerk in Hayden's employ, was sent up here with the money, which he placed in the safe on the very night of our arrival. The safe had been left open by Rutter. Bland did not have the combination. He put the package inside, swung shut the door and awaited the arrival of the mayor."

"I was present," smiled Magee, "at the ceremony you mention."

"Yes? All these plans, as I have said, were known to Drayton. A few nights ago he came to me. He wanted to send an emissary to Baldpate—a man whom Cargan had never met—one who could perhaps keep up the pretense of being here for some other reason than a connection with the bribe. He asked me to undertake the mission, to see all I could and if possible to secure the package of money. This last seemed hardly likely. At any rate, I was to gather all the evidence I could. I hesitated.

"I had loudly proclaimed my championship of civic virtue, however, and here was a chance to serve Reuton. I acquiesced. The day I was to start up here poor Kendrick came back. He, too, had been a student of mine, a friend of both Drayton and Hayden. Seven years ago he and Hayden were running the Suburban together under Thornhill's direction. The two young men became mixed up in a rather shady business deal, which was more of Hayden's weaving than Kendrick's. Hayden came to Kendrick with the story that they were about to be found out and suggested that one assume the blame and go away. I am telling you all this in confidence as a friend of my friends, the Bentleys, and a young man whom I like and trust despite your momentary madness in the matter of yellow locks. We are all susceptible.

"Kendrick went. For seven years he stayed away in an impossible tropic town, believing himself sought by the law, for so Hayden wrote him. Not long ago he discovered that the matter in which he and Hayden had offended had never been disclosed after all. He hurried back to the states. You can imagine his bitterness. He had been engaged to Myra Thornhill, and the fact that Hayden was also in love with her may have had something to do with his treachery to his friend."

"This snow imprisons me, my foolish feet
Refuse to wander in these slippery ways,
And I am prone to sigh for summer days;
But when I hear the children on the street
Shouting with laughter in their winter's glee,
My soul is glad that not alone for me
Were all things made: Else might the children lose
Half their year's joy—if it were mine to choose."

In the January number of the Child-Welfare Magazine, page 199, is an article written by Grace P. Cain, of Tacoma, entitled, "Parent-Teacher Association — It's Possibilities — An Experiment in School Luncheons in a Tacoma School." It contains a description of how that particular association established school lunches in a school, their methods, which are similar to those of the Plainfield Association of Mothers, the co-operation of the parents of the school children, whether they were members of the association or not, and the results. One week of service was asked of each mother during the lunch hour. Many of these mothers had never been in the school before. They always intended to go, but somehow the time never seemed propitious but when once they served a week they realized that they should know and at first hand, too, if they wanted to be really able to chat with Johnnie about the things that naturally interest Johnny the most. One of the best results of school lunches under Mother's Association supervision is the bringing of the parents in close touch with the school their children attend. After a test of just one month this article states all were unanimous in their praise and thanks. The teachers said that whereas before the morning session was not always a joy, the afternoon session was always a drag, but not so after lunches were served. They told of different cases every week of boys and girls who were no longer listless and inattentive but who were wide-awake and ambitious to know, whose lives were coming forward and occupying the place that the Master intended that they should, whose cheeks were gaining a solid roundness with a healthy color and whose self-control was constantly improving. Surely the work is worth the effort. Visit the school lunches in the Bryant School and know what your own city is doing. If you approve of what you see, join the Mother's Association and help the good work along.

"If girls, when they begin to go out from the home, were properly armed and safeguarded with a scientific knowledge of themselves; if they were informed of the marvelous presciousness of the jewel of virtue, which holds sacred the power entrusted to them by their Creator—the wonder of motherhood—dishonor would be an almost unheard of thing. Knowledge is not only a power but is also a tremendous safeguard against the perils of ignorance. The campaign of sex hygiene and sex instruction now sweeping over the civilized world, which promises to tear off from society its mask of prudery and false modesty and to start youth and maiden out in life with pure, clean scientific knowledge of their own bodies, which will safeguard their health, their homes and future families, is destined to bring more good to the human race than any other modern movement of the times. It is a terrible thing to send girls out into the world and especially into the business world, where they come into close contact with men, without posting them in regard to the temptations and the awful dangers they will encounter. If any human being in this world is to be pitied it is an ignorant unsophisticated girl exposed to its perils. We are slowly awakening to these facts. The age-old crime of silence in regard to sex matters is at last broken. It is time that parents realized their duty to their children and saved them from the pitfalls that await unsuspecting innocence."

NEW DEVICES TO GUARD MINERS

Even the Element of Human Fallibility Provided For.

CONCRETE REPLACES WOOD

Underground Precaution to Eliminate Danger of Fire—Rescue Cars Kept In Readiness—Emergency Hospitals at Foot of the Shafts—Instruction In First Aid—Motors Displace Mules.

A representative of some of the leading mine owners and operators in the anthracite field, describing the chief features of the measures recently adopted to prevent accidents, said the Pennsylvania coal mines were now as safe as it was possible to make them.

"For example, that most terrible of dangers, the fire peril, has been reduced to the minimum by the removal of all wood and combustible materials from the inside of the working mines and the substitution of concrete," he said. "The same is true of fan houses, hoisting engine houses and all other buildings on the outside which contain machinery and the destruction of which by fire would affect in any way the safety of men underground."

Among the other improvements introduced or extended since the big disasters and loss of life in the anthracite regions are included the signal systems and mine telephones, so that calls for help can be quickly made and responded to. The latest scientific and practical rescue apparatus has been supplied, consisting of oxygen breathing helmets, pulmotors, first aid appliances and field telephones.

Rescue Car In Readiness.

"All necessary medicines and paraphernalia are now kept at convenient central points in the groups of collieries. One company has a special rescue car, equipped after the fashion of the car approved by the government bureau of mines, which may be rushed to any danger point at a moment's notice.

"Inside the mines," went on the mining man, "are fire cars equipped with special pipes, hose, extinguishers and every device likely to be of use in an emergency. Similar cars are kept on the surface so that they may be hurried to the point of danger at a distance and have their wheels constructed in such a fashion as to be adjustable to the tracks of any mine.

"Regular training schools and drills are carried on at the mines in first aid work, and instruction in the use of the appliances and rescue corps are now permanent features of the new order of things. At the bottom of every shaft emergency hospitals are placed. Many of the slopes, pump houses and stables inside the mines are now lighted by electricity. Safety devices are provided to prevent overwinding the cages in the shafts.

Not a Single Danger Overlooked.

"Yes, we have eliminated every danger to the point of human carelessness and the fallibility of the mine worker himself, and even that is guarded against despite the individual. Even the danger from the kick of a mule is being obviated by replacing these animals with compressed air locomotives and electric motors. To eliminate to the utmost the element of human fallibility some of the companies have safety and efficiency committees.

"Everything is done to impress upon the mine workers a sense of responsibility, not only for their own safety, but for the lives of others. Records of the character of every accident and the conclusions of experts are studied, and synopses of the results are circulated among the workers to teach them how to avoid like accidents."

ALASKAN RAILWAY PROJECT.

Professor Martin Says Route He Discovered Eliminates Glacier Menace.

Professor Lawrence Martin of the University of Wisconsin, an authority on glaciers, in a communication to the National Geographic society, substantiates his claim to the discovery of a new railway route to Alaska.

A government bulletin coincides with the report of Professor Martin to the effect that the new route, by use of a tunnel about two miles long, will avoid glaciers and offer other advantages.

"We feel certain," says Professor Martin, "that, including the cost of the long tunnel, a railway only eleven or twelve miles long and practically sea level could have been built from Passage canal to Turnagain arm for much less than the $5,000,000 used in the construction of the sixty-five miles of the Alaska Northern railway from Seward to Turnagain arm. This would have resulted in an elimination of nearly all of the glacier complications which still threaten the Alaska Northern railway. If the government purchases and extends this railway it may still be cheaper to adopt the Passage canal terminal, as could possibly be done with the shortest route and the longest necessary tunnel for less than $2,000,000."

Movies to Teach Women to Vote.

Moving pictures will be used in the campaign for educating prospective Chicago women voters for the spring elections, according to announcements by several woman's citizenship committees. The films will demonstrate how to register and how to vote and will make a plea for all women to register for the election.

LITTLE TALKS BY THE WANT AD MAN

Copyright, 1913, The Int. Syndicate, Baltimore.

No. 60.

LET'S see now: What is a Want Ad? I'm not much on definitions, but how will this do: "An announcement of something desired or something for sale, printed in the Classified columns of a newspaper.

Not a very lengthy or involved definition, that But doesn't it really define? Doesn't it about cover the object of all Want Ad. advertising.

That is all there is to Want Ad. advertising—an announcement of something desired or something for sale. I imagine I can hear you say "How about an ad. for a cook? How about it when I advertise the loss of an article, or when I advertise for typewriting to do at home?"

Well, when you insert an ad. for a cook, you want the services of a competent culinary attendant. Something desired. When you advertise the loss of an article, it is in the hope that the finder will see your ad. and restore the article. Something desired. When you advertise for typewriting work, you are offering your services. Something for sale.

There is no mystery about it. Advertising isn't hypnotism, or undue influence or black art. You write out what you want or what you have for sale—you put it in a good newspaper—the newspaper carries your message broadcast, into the homes and hearts of thousands of readers—some of those readers respond to your printed word—you sell or you acquire—and ADVERTISING has done its work.

Next time you want something or have something for sale, try a little Want Ad. The cost is trivial—the results more than worth while.

DETAILS ARE EXPLAINED

Miss Lena M. Farrar and Miss Harriet Taylor Address Workers at Association Building—List of Captains and Teams.

Final plans for conducting a systematic campaign to raise $10,000 for the Young Woman's Christian Association were farmulated today. Those women on the various teams to solicit subscriptions met at the association building, listened to a spirited address by Miss Lena M. Farrar, executive secretary of the campaign, had luncheon, and this afternoon heard Miss Harriet Taylor, executive secretary of the foreign department of the National board of the Y. W. C. A., speak concerning other financial campaigns which have been successful. The table decorations were yellow. Large bouquets of jonquils and yellow shaded candles added to the color scheme.

No one in Plainfield will be solicited twice for a subscription towards the $10,000 fund which it is planned to raise. Lists are now being made of townspeople who are to be visited by members of each team. The work will be carefully planned and will be done in a thoroughly systematic manner. There will be no confusion. Active work in canvassing will be started next Tuesday, February 24, and will continue up to and including Friday, February 27.

PROBASCO BIBLE CLASS BANQUET

Popular Organization Enjoys Fourth Annual Event at Y. M. C. A.

INTERESTING SPEECHES

W. D. Murray, C. W. McCutchen, A. M. Harris, J. E. Church and Rev. Dr. P. B. Strong Respond to Toasts—Dr. N. H. Probasco, Toastmaster.

Suggestion that an organization similar to the Congress of the United States should be effected by the members of Dr. Norman H. Probasco's Bible class, and that committees should be appointed to report on conditions of local, national and world-wide interest, and thus keep abreast with modern times, was made at the fourth annual dinner of that well-known organization held last night. The dinner was held in the Y. M. C. A. building, ninety-two being present.

Introduction of each speaker was made by Dr. Probasco, and he emphasized the fact that every member of the class meant much to each of his fellow members. Not a speaker but laid particular stress upon the fact that there was a great debt of gratitude due Dr. Probasco. He, together with C. William Bingeman, were declared to be the right sort of leaders for such a flourishing organization.

W. D. Murray spoke on Bible study and pointed out the value of understanding the Scriptures through close concentration under such efficient leadership as the members of the class were able to avail themselves of. Charles W. McCutchen spoke of the wishes of himself and others that all of those men who are under the leadership of Dr. Probasco and Mr. Bingeman should be men in whom others believe.

Arthur M. Harris declared that public speaking was one of the finest accomplishments that any man could have. It was he who suggested the organization of such a body as the United States Congress for the purpose of having a discussion of topics of importance from time to time.

Francis Anderson also spoke. "Today," he said, "civilization is a milestone in the history of the world. Inventions and progress of all kinds are constantly going on about us and in this progress there are three things which are essential for success, both spiritually and materially. Every man should aim to act in harmony with others; to end discord and dissention; and to enter into all things which have the social approval of all classes and to enter into all things for the best success, especially that which is of social service and social service is the doing for others as we would have others do for us."

James E. Church, another speaker, said he had but one short message to deliver and it was this: "Be happy with your job." This was the very keynote of a man's success, he declared, and showed a man to be a man.

The pastor of the church, Rev. Dr. Philip B. Strong, a personal friend of every member of the class, was the last speaker. He said:

"The day in which we are living is the century of standards. We have set certain marks in all fields of endeavor and can by these marks change the value to some extent of all that we do. We are particularly blest that we are under the protection of the Stars and Stripes. No other banner, no other emblem of any nation can compare in any way with the emblem of our nation and it flies over every public building and over many homes,—a constant reminder of the blessing of living under this protection. Life today is a matter of margin. Upon this one vital point depends success. If we go on and do our daily work merely as a job to be completed we cannot expect the greatest or best success to be with us. If we, however, enter into the spirit of our work and every day do just a little bit more, a little bit better than we have done before, we are laying and building the margin that makes for success."

During the evening Guy Hunter, a blind musician, gave popular selections.

NOVEL METHOD OF CLEANING CROSSWALKS

Four colored men, wearing white duck coats on the back of which was stenciled "Proctor's Brigade, Moving Pictures, 5 and 10 cents," were about the city all yesterday clearing sidewalks. The idea was originated by Harry S. Sanderson, and was a clever scheme for advertising the playhouse, as well as being highly beneficial to pedestrians.

OPENING OF 'PEOPLE'S FORUM'

Successful Inauguration of Lecture Course by Dr. T. C. Hall and Winston Paul.

C. L. RILEY CHAIRMAN

Speakers Discuss "Free Speech" and Use of Public Schools for Education of the Masses—Review of Movement.

Inaugurating the People's Forum, in the Washington School, last night, the good attendance under adverse weather conditions indicated that the new project will be the success anticipated. Many actively engaged in community work and women interested in suffrage, anti-suffrage and women's work attended the initial meeting. The speakers were Dr. Thomas L. Hall, of New York, and Winston Paul, of Jersey City.

Champlin L. Riley as chairman, told of the objects of the Forum, and explained the various activities of the Public Recreation Committee, of which it is a part, and which are well known. He said in part:

"The committee began active work less than one year ago and since last May, when a record was begun, 12,186 people have attended the activities mentioned. At the present rate the attendance will amount to fully 20,000 people in the first year. The cost is therefore about five cents per person per meeting.

"When it is realized that an efficient supervisor is hired and the expenses of all these groups paid by the expenditure of only five hundred dollars by the City Council and five hundred dollars by the Board of Education, it is clear that the people themselves want these things and are willing to help pay them.

"The committee considers its most important work the organization of clubs rather than the mass activities. In the club the young people become better acquainted and the organization is more firmly knit together than in the larger groups. The supervisor has an opportunity to observe the capacities of each member and get a personal hold upon each.

"With the mass activities, on the other hand, the difficulty lies rather in their excessive growth. A small entrance fee of five or ten cents provides money enough for their needs and the officers of the clubs soon learn to maintain order with very little help from the members of the committee."

Winston Paul said that the schools should be the polling places and told of the work of community workers in Jersey City, where the public schools are fast becoming the capitals of the neighborhoods and can be effectively used for safe-guarding and promoting health, sociability, recreation, discussion and voting. There should be a compulsory dental and medical examination of children in a clinic established in the public schools and later this service should be extended to adults.

"Public schools should be opened for discussional purposes," he said, "for nowhere else can politics better be talked about than in our schools, where the logical basis of discussion is 'the highest good to the greatest number.' There would be a large financial saving in turning our public school buildings over for these purposes as the rental of polling places is high and the quarters are frequently cramped."

Dr. Thomas C. Hall took for his subject, "Free Speech," and said that schools and churches should be used extensively in the efforts of the community to democratic civic work. They should be turned over to societies that promote free speech and discussion and should be used as the public's instrument. Speech is the greatest of all faculties. It puts all things in action and is back of all enterprise.

"The Forum," he said, "is to supply an appropriate place for open discussion and free speech. How are you going to sort out what you are going to say and discuss in this Forum? Everything that pertains to the nation, State or city is open to discussion and that is what you are going to do in your Forum. Discussion will unravel difficulties and spread the true impression among the people."

H. W. Overstreet, instructor in philosophy in the City College of New York, will speak at the meeting on March 5. His subject will be, "An Outgrown System of Political Philosophy." William S. Tyler will preside

DIME SOCIAL.

A dime social under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of Hope chapel was conducted at the home of Mrs. Thomas G. Hendry, of West Fourth street, last night. Seventy-five people were present and enjoyed the informal program of song and recitations. Refreshments were served at a late hour.

O'CONNOR FREED OF THEFT CHARGE

Following a deliberation of one hour and forty minutes the jury in the case of Edward J. O'Connor, accused of embezzling $500 from the United States Express Company office in this city, returned a verdict of not guilty, late yesterday afternoon.

O'Connor was placed on the stand yesterday and denied everything that he had said in his confession to the local police here the first part of November. Counsel for the defense endeavored to prove an alibi claiming that the accused was in Atlantic City when the deed was committed.

CLAN MACKENZIE TO HAVE A GALA NIGHT

The Scots will have a gala time to night at their concert and dance, to be held at the Park Club. The skirl of the pipes will be heard and numerous Scotch songs will be sung, including several comic selections. There will be violin and piano solo and recitations as well as a most interesting exhibition of fancy dancing by the champion dancers of the eastern States. After the concert there will be dancing.

TAKES CARBOLIC ACID TO END HER LIFE

Brooding over family troubles and being tired of life, Mrs. Eugene Phillips, colored, attempted suicide at her home on East Second street, last night, taking a large dose of carbolic acid. Her husband, who was in an adjoining room, found his wife writhing in a chair. Sizing up the situation at a glance Phillips notified Dr. Pratt who administered antidotes. The promptness with which the patient was dealt probably saved her life, for today she is considered to be practically out of danger.

MT. ST. MARY COLLEGE ALUMNAE ENTERTAINS

Under the auspices of the Plainfield alumnae of Mt. St. Mary's College, a card party was held last night at the Park Club. About 200 guests were present and awards were made to seventy-five players. Following the games there was dancing. Music was furnished by Paroubek. Ice cream and punch were served during the evening.

The committee having the card party and dance in charge was composed of Miss Mary R. Sullivan, chairman; Miss Irene Duschene, Miss Berna Bette, Miss May Duschene, Miss Muriel Collins, Miss Marie Louise Sullivan, Miss Katherine Redican, Miss Sadie Lee, Miss Grace Rafferty, all of this city, and Miss Maud Chamberlin, of Raritan, and Miss Theresa Snyder, of Somerville.

MOTORCYCLE CLUB GIVES BEEFSTEAK DINNER

An old fashioned beefsteak party was given by the Plainfield Motorcycle Club in its rooms in depot park, last night, tables being made out of large dry goods boxes, chairs out of smaller boxes, and fingers being used as forks and knives. The annual election resulted as follows: President, Ralph Auerbach; vice president, James Conway; recording secretary, "Bud" Klein; financial secretary, Alexander Herlich; treasurer, Leslie Hampson; road captain, Jack Horner; first lieutenant, Fred Rich; second lieutenant, Lester Renninger. A committee composed of A. G. Bowlby, Fred Rich, Warren Groff and E. S. Bird was appointed to arrange for a dance to be held during the month of March.

BIRTHDAY RECEPTION.

Mrs. Solon Mabins, of Plainfield avenue, gave a party at her home, last night, in honor of her husband, who celebrated his birthday anniversary, yesterday. There was music by J. A. Toney and W. K. Knight. Dancing and whist were features of the affair, and during the evening refreshments were served. C. E. Epps assisted in arranging the affair.

ATTEND A BANQUET.

DUTCH ARMS' ANNUAL BANQUET

The Men's Association of Trinity Reformed Church Give "Ladies' Night" Affair.

EXCELLENT SPEAKERS

Rev. Isaac W. Gowen, Rev. Dr. W. P. Bruce and Rev. J. Y. Broek Respond to Toasts—Judge Robert Carey Detained by Illness.

Rev. Dr. Isaac W. Gowen, of New Durham; Rev. Dr. William P. Bruce, of Yonkers, N. Y., and Rev. John Y. Broek, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, were the speakers at the fifth anual banquet of the Dutch Arms, men's association, of Trinity Reformed church, last night. Judge Robert Carey, of Jersey City, who was to have been the principal speaker was unable to be present because of illness.

During the serving of an excellent dinner a stringed orchestra played. Edgar F. Sheppard made an admirable toastmaster, his merry jests and stories putting everyone, including the speakers in the best of good spirits. His fresh supply of stories were exceedingly appropriate and convulsed the audience with laughter. It was "ladies' night."

Arthur B. Cole, as president of the Dutch Arms, made a few preliminary remarks after Rev. Dr. E. G. Read pronounced the invocation, and introduced Mr. Sheppard as toastmaster. The latter gave a brief review of the Dutch Arms' work, commenting on the band and the fact that there are ten in the beginners' class. The band has filled twenty-seven engagements and gave one concert, and the speaker said the "band is the biggest noise in the religious world of Plainfield today," complimenting E. D. Young as leader.

Dr. Gowen, the first speaker, was the target for many jests by reason of his experiences one Sunday last summer, when because of an automobile accident, he failed to keep a preaching engagement at Trinity church, and Mr. Sheppard quoted some original verses of poetry appropriate to the incident.

Dr. Gowen spoke on the subject, "Be Good for Something," in which he urged men to go beyond the church club and get into the church. He emphasized the importance of Christian ideals, the church as the school of patriotism and great religious and moral power in the country. He said that the reason that motion pictures and shows are censored today is that men want to make merchandise out of these things. In conclusion Dr. Gowen said that the church is coming to a great time in the "mixing pot" of the life of today, and it will be the Christian life of America transferred into service that will count.

"Keep moving," was the topic assigned to Rev. Dr. Bruce. He spoke in a humorous vein, and concluded his remarks by impressing upon all the importance of everyone being active in church work, from the minister to the youngest member. He declared that every effort of a minister is for saving lost souls and every Christian should have the same concern. He disputed Webster's or even Shakespeare's definition of a man, adding that according to Scripture, "Man was made in God's image." Closing his remarks, Dr. Bruce gave some helpful suggestions.

Rev. Mr. Broek was the last speaker, and he took occasion to congratulate the Dutch Arms for excellent work being done.

The officers of the Dutch Arms, who arranged the successful affair, are: President, Arthur B. Cole; vice-presidents, Fred S. Cutter nd Lindlau M. Leek; secretary, Charles Beiter; treasurer, George E. Volk. The rooms were attractively decorated by Laggren & Greene.

ARGENTINA, CHURCH METHODS AND POSTOFFICE TALKS TO DINERS

Annual Banquet of Board of Trade Last Night Truly a "Feast of Reason and Flow of Soul"—Sherrill, Reisner, Tuttle and Stewart Speakers.

REED AS TOASTMASTER

Two Hundred Business Men Hear Inspiring Addresses, Interspersed With Bright Stories—W. L. Saunders Unable to be Present.

Well cooked viands, excellently served, the attendance of those men who are prominent in the business, civic and social life of this community, and the "feast of reason and flow of soul," enjoyed through the oratorical efforts of distinguished guests, all went to make last night's dinner of Plainfield's Board of Trade a highly successful affair. It was the night of nights for the business men of Plainfield. The occasion was a gala one. It will be long remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be present as one of the best dinners, considered from its every aspect, and from all viewpoints, that residents of this city have ever enjoyed.

It was a most enthusiastic gathering. Lowering skies and a heavy snowfall did not avail to depreciate the number of merry diners to any appreciable extent. Good fellowship and the utmost sociability reigned throughout the night. The "Do It For Plainfield" spirit was much in evidence at the dinner. Plainfield's business folk; those men who stand shoulder to shoulder in the strife that the Board of Trade is waging, as a representative civic body of this city, to advance the interests of this municipality in every possible way, were the guests at the dinner of last evening. They were representative citizens; men from almost every walk in life. The gathering might well be said to have been a spontaneous tribute of affection for Plainfield, the city of their adoption, whether by birth or otherwise, or, in other words, a veritable outburst of civic pride without which few if any cities, it is said, can thrive.

Evidence of that much to be desired "community spirit" was shown in the seating arrangements which the committee had made for the guests. They were served at small tables, rather an unusual innovation in affairs of this sort, but a novelty which was praised and commended by many diners. Close friends in social and business life were by this plan permitted to sit together, which quite naturally added to their enjoyment of the evening's festivities. Mrs. Lena Hellstrom was the caterer and her work was commended on all sides.

Corporation Counsel Charles A. Reed presided at the dinner, in his usual gracious manner, as toastmaster, interspersing between his introductions of the several speakers airy persiflage and witty sayings which were the cause of much merriment among his hearers. Speakers heard were Congressman William E. Tuttle, Jr., of Westfield, who spoke on "Postoffice Legislation," Charles Hitchcock Sherrill, formerly the American minister to the Argentine Republic, under the administration of former President Taft, who responded to the toast, "Foreign Trade and Our Present Need For It;" Rev. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of Grace Methodist church, of New York, who talked of "Church Publicity," and Mayor Percy H. Stewart, of Plainfield. Dr. William L. Saunders, who was to have also spoken, was unable to be present. He sent a letter of regret stating that the Board of Trade under the direction of President William Jeffery had become dynamic; a concentrated essence of radium.

Columbus auditorium, where the dinner was held, was handsomely decorated. Large American flags were draped and festooned about side walls and gallery. Bouquets of carnations and yellow jonquils graced each table and palms and other greenery enhanced the vivid coloring and beauty of the American flags which hung above the stage and back of the long table at which sat the distinguished guests of the evening. The Eureka Trio, colored entertainers, of New York, played piano, mandolin and guitar selections during the dinner and sang the latest popular songs. The diners joined lustily in the choruses, for which some versatile Plainfielder had written clever parodies. A. C. Wilmerding gave an exhibition of tambourine playing which was a surprise to those of his friends who were not aware of his accomplish-

GIVE RECEPTION TO REV. C. H. KUES

Members of Holy Cross Church Extend Welcome to New Rector.

The kettle drum social, another one of the series, held at Holy Cross church, last night, was combined with a reception to the new rector, Rev. Charles H. Kues, who recently assumed the duties of the parish. Despite the stormy weather more than fifty members of the parish attended the affair. Mr. Kues was given a cordial reception, there being a marked expression of confidence and good wishes. Mr. Kues made a brief address.

The parish house was tastefully decorated with flags, and there was more than one hundred portraits of men of prominence placed about the room, those present being requested to guess the names, and make up their own catalog. There was an informal program during which William R. Thiers sang a solo in a pleasing manner. A social time with refreshments followed. The affair was held under the auspices of the vestry and women's guild.

MRS. E. GERTRUDE QUICK GIVES CHARMING FUNCTION

Mrs. E. Gertrude Quick, of Central avenue, gave a bridge party and tea at her home, yesterday afternoon, followed in the evening by an informal dance for some of the young people who assisted at the afternoon affair. The delightful entertainment was enjoyed by a large number of guests, there being about fifty women at the bridge and tea, and the hospitality of the hostess was a marked feature. Honors were awarded the winners at each table.

Mrs. Quick was assisted at the tea by Miss Helen Renskrof, of Somerville; Miss Marie Boice, of Fanwood; Mrs. E. M. Storms, of New York; Miss Dorothy Quick, Miss Monica Sharretts, Mrs. J. P. W. Taylor, Mrs. C. E. Arens and Miss Ruth Timpson, of this city. Mrs. Storms poured. Following the afternoon affair, the young people assisting and a few other friends remained to enjoy a dance.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF MY SON

HAROLD LAWRENCE BURLINGAME MULFORD

Born January 30th, 1891; Passed on February 20th, 1910.

"His life here was but a brief span but how filled with loving thoughts of others from boyhood up."

Another year has gone, four in all, since my dearly loved son passed on to his Heavenly Home.

And from the first I did not entertain a fear but what all was well with him whom my soul holds most dear.

I felt no harm could come to one who had been so good, loyal, loving and true while here for are we not all in God's loving tender care here and everywhere.

So I pray each morn and night since first he went away to our Heavenly Father to bless and guide him, to free his soul from all care, and to make him so happy there with his own dear Father, SAMUEL POTTER MULFORD, and all the loved ones gone on before, that he does not miss me, but thinks of me, and prays for me, as I do for him.

God love and bless you my dear loving devoted Son is my daily prayer.

God took care of and blessed you here, and I firmly believe he is loving and caring for you there.

God love you and bless you my darling precious Son, 'tis such a comforting phrase, it brings the tears yet helps me to bear the pain of separation, helps me to be brave without you here, helps me to hold firmly to the hope we shall meet again on that other shore that your going on first is only for a time "Good-bye."

Lovingly and Devotedly,

Mother

Dunellen & Vicinity

A shanty has been placed at the Prospect avenue railroad crossing to take the place of the tower that was knocked over by a derailed car last Sunday morning and destroyed by fire which started from the overturning of the stove used in the tower for heating purposes. Within a few days the gates will be repaired so that they can again be placed in operation.

Ronald Dunbar, of Piscataway township, who delivers milk and has a route through town, met with an accident in the northwestern section of town yesterday. In turning from Washington avenue into Second srreet, the rear axle snapped right at the edge of the hub and let the body of the wagon drop in the snow. Owing to the great depth of snow at the corner none of the bottles of milk in the wagon were broken. Mr. Dunbar unhitched his horses and after stationing someone to watch his supply of milk returned to his home and procured another conveyance in which he loaded his supply and finished delivering to his customers.

Clarence Voorhees, the North avenue butcher, will close his meat market Monday morning at 10 o'clock on account of Washington's Birthday.

Thomas Frescoln, of New Market road, assisted by Peter Benson, of Columbia street, erected a stage and placed footlights for the performance of the comedy, "Oak Farm," which was given for the benefit of the Baraca Class in the chapel of the Presbyterian church, last night. The affair was a success.

Peter Benwood the night gateman at the Washington avenue railroad crossing, is detained at his home in Bound Brook, by an attack of grip.

Jack Rhinehart and Edward Quin, both of North avenue, spent Wednesday with friends in Bound Brook.

Mr. and Mrs. Burr A. Robinson have removed from the old Kirby house on Dunellen avenue, to New York city, where Mr. Robinson is engaged in business.

Joseph Ahearn, of New Market, has taken a position at William H. Taylor's hotel, on North avenue, Dunellen.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Russell and family are now residing in the flat above the National Beef Company's store on North avenue.

The Board of Trade Banquet

Last evening was a great success—the dinner was good and speakers exceptionally instructive. Those who were fortunate enuf to attend left with a feeling of gladness, of inspiration and a spirit of good-fellowship.

It is to be regretted that some of our local ministers did not hear Rev. Christian F. Reisner talk on "CHURCH PUBLICITY." They would have been so enthused that Plainfield would have a "Go-to-Church" campaign that would crowd the churches to the doors.

The Rothberg Store offers its advertising space on Saturdays (subject to the rules of the newspaper) to any Church, Charity Society, Recreation Committee, Civic Body or an organization that is interested in doing things to help make this world a better place or Plainfield a better city.

'Plains & Fanwood.

Mrs. Samuel Hollingsworth and Miss Lulu Hollingsworth, gave an entertainment at the Parish House Wednesday afternoon for the enjoyment of the young girls who are members of the association.

A gang of men under the direction of several of the township officials were set at work yesterday opening up the gutters through the main streets of town, so that in case of a heavy rainstorm on the top of the great depth of snow that is now on the ground the surplus surface water can be disposed of without flooding the streets.

Miss Gertrude Smalley, of Front street, who has been detained at her home for the past few days by a severe illness, is again able to be out.

Mrs. H. C. Meyers, of Front street, who has been ill since Christmas, was removed to the Muhlenberg Hospital Wednesday afternoon upon the advise of the attending physicians. Mrs. Meyers has been suffering from a severe case of jaundice.

The People's Ice Company, who have been harvesting the ice on Seely's Pond on the mountains for the past few days, have reported that all three of the houses owned by that company are nearly filled and that with another day's cutting and packing the three houses should be filled to the roof. The ice averages between ten and fourteen inches, with at least a ten inch thickness of clear ice. It is estimated that 1,250 tons have been harvested by the company within the past few days.

The dance to have been held by the Parish House basketball team in Meyer's Hall tonight, has been indefinitely postponed.

The strawride that was arranged by Miss Edith Jahn to have been held last night was postponed on account of inclement weather.

Martin Herman, of South Bound Brook, is detained at home by illness

Mrs. Ellis D. Thompson, of Philadelphia, was a visitor with her mother, Mrs. George LaMonte, at the "Evergreens," on Monday.

Alexander Galloway, of New Bound Brook, who was formerly employed by the Saurer Motor Truck Company at Clinton avenue, has secured a position in New York city.

John A. Cromarty, of New York city, was a visitor with friends at Watchung Estates, yesterday.

A PERILOUS CROSSING.

They Got Safely Over and Then Came a Curious Climax.

Mrs. Exe stood on a crowded corner when the traffic was at its height, staring at the thick, tangled come and go of motorcars and drays and cabs, and not daring to venture in among the dangers of that moving mass.

"May I cross the street with you, madam?"

She turned and saw an elderly stranger with lifted hat and gallant smile.

"Oh, thank you!" said Mrs. Exe. And the stranger grasped her arm with a firm grip, and together they plunged boldly into the wild crush of vehicles.

In and out, right and left, up and down, they zigzagged, at imminent peril of life and limb. Pedestrians on the sidewalk stopped and looked at them. Drivers and chauffeurs shouted and swore at them. It was plain to all that they were in unusual danger.

The escort of Mrs. Exe, still wearing his gallant smile, still grasping her arm firmly, seemed to make no effort to avoid the oncoming vehicles. He darted erratically and yet calmly this way and that.

At last by a miracle the other side was reached. Mrs. Exe then jerked her arm away from her escort's grasp, and, with a look of scorn, she said:

"It's no thanks to you that we were not both killed. Why, the way you positively courted danger one would think you were blind!"

"Madam, I am blind," he replied. "That's why I asked if I could cross with you."—New York Tribune.

VILLA ADOPTS AMERICAN TACTICS IN CAMPAIGN.

First Mexican to Prepare For Feeding a Main Army In the Field.

The purchase by General Pancho Villa of $25,000 worth of army provisions for the Mexican army for the move on Torreon is declared to be the first instance in Mexican history when preparations were made for feeding a main force in the field. Each Mexican soldier heretofore, especially with the federals, has been required to secure his own food.

Villa has been studying the American plan of preparing for a campaign, and is following in the Torreon campaign American methods. He is also adopting for his men the American manual of arms.

Armored automobiles are to be used by the rebels in the Torreon and southern campaigns. An experimental armored automobile equipped by Villa's order has so pleased the rebel chief with its possibilities that twelve other machines are being similarly equipped for immediate use.

The automobiles are protected with heavy sheets of steel and will carry machine guns so mounted that they may be fired in several directions through portholes, which may be closed or opened at will. Ordinary five and seven passenger cars are converted into armored cars by the steel sheets, and Villa thinks that they will be proof against rifles and machine guns.

LARGEST STAGE EVER BUILT.

That For St. Louis Pageant Will Have Area of 91,000 Square Feet.

The largest stage ever built will be constructed at the foot of Art Hill, in Forest park, for the pageant and mask of St. Louis, to be held in May.

The area of the pageant stage will be 91,000 square feet, or the equivalent of a rectangular stage with 364 feet front and 250 feet depth. These will not be the exact proportions, as the stage will be of irregular shape. The length will be more than 400 feet, and the depth at the center more than 300, while at either end the stage will become narrow, to conform with the general shape of the map of the city of St. Louis.

Two thousand to 2,500 persons will be on this great stage, and 60,000 spectators will be seated on the Art Hill slope.

The stage will be built, in part, over the waters of the park lagoon, and the stream in front of the stage will represent the Mississippi river in front of St. Louis. The arrival of Marquette and Joliet in their canoes, the coming of Pierre Laclede and Auguste Chouteau and later the appearance of the General Pike, the first steamboat, will thus be shown with the utmost realism.

Darkness and music will form an interlude between the pageant and the masque of St. Louis, which is to be produced by artificial light.

MEN'S FROCK COATS MUST GO

Cutters Decree an Inch Trousers Braid For Evening Dress.

By an edict of the International Association of Custom Cutters the frock coat must go.

Hereafter, according to the association, the ceremonial dress of the daylight hours will be the cutaway, or morning coat.

Incidentally it is decreed that men appearing in evening dress without at least an inch wide trousers braid are really not quite proper. They might as well appear in nightshirts, say the cutters.

It is also rumored that slit trousers will be de rigueur for the spring. A silk and wool mixed suiting will be another of the spring innovations.

Rubber Plating For Warships.

An invention for rubber plating battleships is being experimented with by the British admiralty, according to the London Globe. The process consists of sandwiching sheets of rubber between layers of toughened steel. The inventors declare that a wall of rubber will have the same effect on cannon shells as sand bags have on rifle bullets.

FEATURE PHOTO-PLAYS.

"The Pale of the Prejudiced," "An Evil of the Slums," "Mike and Jake," "The Medicine Show at Stone Gulch," the Mutual Weekly, "A Robust Romeo," and a big Tannhauser production, "Frou Frou," with Maude Fealy, will be the feature pictures at Proctor's tomorrow. On Monday, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle will appear in their society dancing pictures, including all the latest steps.

DEPUTY SHERIFF FRANK T. ROSS A BENEDICT

Deputy Sheriff Frank T. Ross and Miss Katherine Jarges were married by Rev. Richard T. Ryan at the rectory of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, yesterday morning. Owing to the illness of the mother of the bridegroom, the marriage was a quiet one. Mr. and Mrs. Ross went immediately to their newly furnished home on East High street. The bride, who resided on Union avenue, east of the borough, has a wide circle of friends.

The bridegroom is widely known as a public official and business man. He served one term as sheriff and is now serving a second term as deputy sheriff. He is also engaged in the brick manufacturing business in North Somerville. He is a son of the late William Ross, Jr., in his time one of the most Democratic officials in Somerset county.

PERSONAL.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Perrine, of Westfield, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Elsie Perrine, of North Plainfield, to Frank B. Parrette, of Scotch Plains.

Kenneth Giddes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Giddes, of Grove street, who has been critically ill, is improving and is now considered out of danger.

Y. W. C. A. CAMPAIGN

the officers of the association at the Young Woman's Christian Association building at 5 o'clock every afternoon for tea, a short prayer service and discussion of the progress of the campaign.

For the year 1913 the work of the Young Woman's Christian Association in this city has needed, in addition to its income of $2,530, from rentals and from the educational, religious work and membership departments, the sum of $4,386.25. In order to provide for the natural growth and development of these activities and to enlarge the facilities and increase the influence of the work, an additional sum is required, raising the budget, exclusive of the $2,530, referred to above, to $6,000. The association buildings now stand free from encumbrances, but in order to protect the interests of the Y. W. C. A. and to secure the land on which at some time to build a much-needed new gymnasium, it was thought wise to purchase the property at 218 East Front street, adjoining the present buildings, which entailed a loan of $3,250 from the City National Bank. It is earnestly desired to pay off this indebtedness to the bank at this time and to those friends of the Young Woman's Christian Association who are willing to help remove that burden, an appeal will be made for the amount of $3,250, and the amount of the budget, $6,000.

REFUSE IN OTHER CITIES.

Officials of the Board of Health as well as nearly every one else in Plainfield interested in the collection and disposal of garbage by the municipality are keeping close watch on the system in vogue in other cities. All hope that very soon some system will be found that will meet the situation here.

Trenton collects its garbage and refuse mixed, the former being drained, wrapped in paper, and burned in a crematory. Wagons used in making collections are of wood. They hold about two tons of ashes, or from 3,000 to 3,500 pounds of garbage. These vehicles cost, it is said, about $235 each and last on an average six years. The present crematory has been used for 12 years. The cost of operation is said to be but 48 cents a ton. This is considered a comparitively low figure. There are said to be no objectionable features about the plant. The ashes are disposed of by dumping on low lands.

The City of Schenectady, is now completing a garbage reduction plant which will dispose of the garbage of its 73,000 citizens. It is designed to handle 40 tons of garbage in ten hours and will recover the grease and tankage which will be sold. This is the same system now in use in Cleveland. Steam is used in the digesters to dry the material.

In Springfield, Ohio, City Manager Ashburner expects to save $2,000 this year through a new system of garbage collection. The city is to be divided into four districts, and a contract let to one man for the collections in each district. Last year the city spent $5,700 for garbage collections.

THE SCHOOL CITY.

The duty of the public school is to train as well as to instruct. If there is to be a preference, training is the more important of these two objects of education. In the school city, this training is to be found at its best—in the practical training of future citizens in self-government by the actual practice of juvenile city, town or county government, as the case may be, in the schoolroom.

Plainfield schools may do a great service for this city in building up a trained and intelligent citizenship imbued with greater interests and purposes of the true public spirit, if the educational authorities will turn their atention to this "laboratory plan" of building citizenship. The question of the school city rests with each individual city, but communities have been slow in adopting so useful a manner for very materially benefiting themselves.

The first school city was established in 1897 in New York city to train 1,100 immigrant children in American citizenship, and today the method is in use in individual schools in many parts of the world, having been officially sanctioned in several different countries, but the plan strangely enough, has not been generally adopted in the United States. In New York city there are thirty schools employing the method, while in Cuba, the Indian schools of our country and the schools of Alaska, the method has been used with excellent results. So valuable in fact is it considered, that it has been the subject of investigations by special commissions of education from various countries of Europe, Asia, Africa and South America. It is used even in a number of the Chinese schools.

But the fact remains that the school city ought to be generally employed everywhere. The system is simple. Each school room is a city, village or county unit, in which the pupils themselves name their own city, town or county officials. The pupils are taught to make their own laws carry them into execution, adjudicate difficulties and hold elections. The entire school may be organized into a state with state government and legislators from each room. All schools in the city or district may be formed into a national government with a congress.

The results pay. They pay decidedly in making future citizens and better ones and in arousing interest in the schools themselves. The promotion of the idea here is worth attention. For schools are nothing more nor less than an agency for better cities.

The Daily Press has received complaints about the dangerous condition of a piece of property on the east side of Liberty street, between the railroad and West Third street. The lot level is considerably above the sidewalk and an old house incumbering it seems to be ready to collapse at any time, due to the fact that all of the earth has been excavated from the south side. The north wall also shows a very noticeable bulge. The building is unoccupied and the property has been a favorite romping place for children of the neighborhood ever since the earth was removed last summer for the erection of a building which has not materialized. The place is undeniably a menace and the officials empowered to protect life and limb should lose no time in taking the necessary precautions.

For two weeks or more a discussion has been going on through the columns of the Daily Press, in which local people have taken much interest. We refer to the letters regarding the "Menace." It has always been the rule of this newspaper to print communications to which names were signed, regardless of the topic chosen, so long as nothing libellous appeared. We believe, however, that nothing is gained by carrying on any longer a written debate on the topic under discussion, and as it has been pretty thoroughly thrashed out, no more letters on the subject will be printed after tonight. We feel sure that all will admit that the Daily Press has given everyone who has sought it full opportunity to express their ideas on the subject.

The Cranford Board of Trade has just issued an illustrated booklet about that triving town which is one of the finest pieces of work of the kind that has ever come to our desk. Excellent half tone pictures, offset by line drawings in tint show the beauties of the place, and if any better method can be suggested to bring new residents, we have yet to see it. The members of this active and hustling civic body deserve great commendation for their enterprise, which will undoubtedly tend to attract many suburban homeseekers.

Is not the suggestion that a State tax for State purposes may be necessary just a little subtle? Watch it. You will see the Legislature adjourn without doing it, and the point of this talk will be developed when the party in power say to you, "See how we saved a State tax by economy." There is no need for a State tax. Governor Fielder is a prudent man.

Mrs. Frederick G. Mead has written the contributed editorial for tomorrow's Press. In it she tells of the splendid work being done by the local Y. W. C. A. The article is especially timely in view of the finance campaign which the Association begins next Tuesday.

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

James P. Conway and Percy Allen are the two men who successfully passed the examination for positions on the police force, and it is expected that they will be appointed at the March meeting of the Common Council. Twenty-four other applicants failed to pass the examination.

THE FORUM.

Editor, Plainfield Daily Press:

In reference to the discussion now running in the "Forum" of your paper, I would advise the interested readers to take the book and pages as given and read the context—the before and the after of the quoted lines to see the mind of the book-author in contradiction to the mind of the article-author.

I appreciate the spirit of fairness that opens the columns of your paper to dignified discussion, where that is possible, but where the trend seems to be toward foulness and bitterness, it would seem a pity that your generosity should be abused and the general good will and confidence of citizens endangered.

Truth fears no honest quotation and intelligent readers should not have deductions therefrom ready-made for them.

In regard to the question, "Why is not the 'Menace' prosecuted?" I would say that general slander is not amenable to prosecution. Specified charges have always evaded prosecution because their principals have never existed outside the "Menace" office, such as the now famous mythical K. of C. oath proves.

If not intruding too much upon your courtesy, the writer asks space for the following statement of the ease of "celibacy" from the most eminent Catholic authority in America. It will be found on page 387 of the volume "Faith of Our Fathers" by Cardinal Gibbons.

"The Church requires her Priests to be pure in body as well as in soul, and to 'present their bodies a living victim, holy, well-pleasing unto God.' (Rom. xii. 1.)

"Our Savior and His Apostles, though recognizing matrimony as a holy state, have proclaimed the superior merits of voluntary continency particularly for those who consecrate their lives to the sacred ministry. 'There are eunuchs who have made themselves such for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake. He who can take it, let him take it.' (Matt. xix. 12.) Our Lord evidently recommends here the state of celibacy to such as feel themselves called to embrace it, in order to attain greater perfection.

St. Paul gives the reason why our Savior declares continency to be a more suitable state for His ministers than that of matrimony: "He who is unmarried careth for the things of the Lord—how he may please God. But he who is married is solicitous about the things of the world—how he may please his wife—and he is divided.' (I. Cor. vii. 32, 33.)

"Jesus Christ manifestly showed His predilection for virginity, not only by always remaining a virgin, but by selecting a Virgin-Mother and a virgin-precursor in the person of St. John the Baptist, and by exhibiting a special effection for John the Evangelist, because, as St. Augustine testifies, that Apostle was chosen virgin and such he always remained.

Not only did our Lord thus manifest while on earth a marked predilection for virgins, but He exhibits the same preference for them in heaven; for the hundred and forty-four thousand who are chosen to sing the New Canticle and who follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth are all virgins, as St. John testifies. (Apoc. xiv.)

The Apostle of the Gentiles assures us that he led a single life, and he commends that state to others: "I say to the unmarried, and to the widows it is good for them if they so continue, even as I." (I. Cor. vii. 8.)

There is no evidence from Scripture that any of the Apostles were married except St. Peter. St. Jerome says that if any were married they certainly separated from their wives after they were called to the Apostolate. Even St. Peter, after his vocation, did not continue with his wife, as may be inferred from his own records: "Behold, we have left all things, and followed Thee." (Matt. xix. 27.) Among "all things" must be reckoned the fellowship of his wife, for he could hardly say with truth that he had left all things if he had not left his wife. Our Savior immediately after enumerates the wife among those cherished objects, the renunciation of which, for His sake, will have its reward. (Ibid., xix. 29.)

St. Paul declares that "a Bishop must be sober, just, holy, continent." (Tit. i. 8.) And writing to Timothy, whom he had consecrated Bishop, he says: "Be thou an example to the faithful * * * in charity, in faith, in chastity." (I. Tim. iv. 12.) In another place, he enumerates chastity among the virtues that should adorn the Christian minister: "In all things let us exhibit ourselves as ministers of God in much patience, * * * in chastity." (II. Cor. vi. 46.)

Although celibacy is not expressly enforced by our Savior, it is, however, commended so strongly by Himself and His Apostles, both by word and example, that the Church felt it her duty to lay it down as a law.

The discipline (which, of course is not a dogma) of the Church has been exerted from the beginning in prohibiting Priests to marry after their ordination. St. Jerome observes that "Bishops, Priests and Deacons are chosen from virgins or widowers, or, at least, they remain perpetually chaste after being elevated to the priesthood." (Ep. ad Pammach). To Jovinian he writes: "You certainly admit that he canot remain a Bishop who begets children in the episcopacy; for, if convicted, he will not be esteemed as a husband, but condemned as an adulterer." (Ad. Jovin. lib. 1). Again he says: "What will the churches of the East, of Egypt and of the Apostolic See do, which adopt their clergy from among virgins, or if they have wives, they cease to live as married men." (Adv Vigilantium).

St. Epiphanius declares that "he who leads a married life is not admitted by the Church to the order of Deacon, Priest, Bishop or sub-Deacon." (Haeres, 59, c. 4.)

In the primitive days of the Church, owing to the scarcity of vocations among the unmarried, married men were admitted to sacred orders, but they were enjoined, as we learn from various canons, to live separated from their wives after their ordination.

This discipline, it is true, was relaxed to some extent in favor of a portion of the clergy of the Oriental Church, who were permitted to live with their wives if they happened to espouse them before ordination, and this custom still prevails; but, like the Priests of the Western Church, the Eastern clergy were forbidden to contract marriage after their ordination. It is important also to observe that the unmarried clergy of the East are held in much higher esteem by the people than the married Priests.

It cannot, indeed, be denied that at certain epochs of the Church's history, especially in periods of disordered society, there were too many instances of the violation of clerical celibacy. But the repeated violations of a law are no evidence of its non-existence. Whenever the voice of the Church could be heard it always spoke in vindication of the law of priestly chastity.

Let me now call you attention to the propriety and advantages of clerical celibacy.

First—The Priest is the representative of Jesus Christ. He continues the work begun by his Divine Master. It is his duty to preach the word, to administer the Sacraments, and, above all, to consecrate the Body and Blood of Christ and to distribute the same to the faithful. It is not becoming that a chaste Lord should be served by chaste ministers?

If the Jewish Priests, while engaged in their turn in offering the sacrifice of animals in the Temple, were obliged to keep apart from their wives, should not the Priests of the New Law, who offer daily the sacrifice of the Immaculate Lamb, practice continual chastity?

If David and his friends were not permitted to eat the bread of Proposition till he had avowed that for the three preceding days they had refrained from women, (I. Kings xxi), how pure in body and soul should be the Priest who daily partakes of that living Bread of which the bread of Proposition was but the type; and if the people at Mount Sinai were forbidden to come near their wives for three days before receiving the Law, (Exod. xix), should not they whose office it is to preach the Law at all times abstain altogether?

Thorndyke, an eminent Protestant Divine, in his work entitled, "Just Weights and Measures," makes the following observation: "The reason for single life for the clergy is firmly grounded by the Fathers and canons of the Church, upon the precept of St. Paul, forbidding man and wife to depart unless for a time, to attend unto prayer (I Cor. vii. 5). For, Priests and Deacons being continually to attend upon occasions of celebrating the Eucharist, which ought continually to be frequented; if others be to abstain from the use of marriage for a time, then they always." (Page 239)

Second—Writers frequently discuss the secret cause of the marvelous success which marks the growth of the Catholice Church everywhere in spite of the most formidable opposition. Some ascribe this progress to her thorough organization; others to the far-seeing wisdom of her chief pastors. Without undervaluing these and other auxiliaries, I incline to the belief that, under God, the Church has no tower of strength more potent than the celibacy of her clergy. The unmarried Priest, as St. Paul observes (I Cor. vii.), is free to give his whole time undivided to the Lord, and can devote his attention not to one or two children, but to the entire flock whom he has begotten in Christ Jesus, through the Gospel; while the married minister is divided between the cares of his family and his duties to the congregation.

Third—The world has hitherto been converted by unmarried clergymen, and only by them will it continue to be converted. St. Francis Xavier and Sa. Francis de Sales could not have planted the faith in so many thousands of souls if they were accompanied on their journeys by their wives and children. Of all the gems that adorn the priestly diadem, none is so precious and indispensable in the eyes of the people as the peerless jewel of chastity. Without this pearl the voice of a Hyacinthe "becomes as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal;" with it, the humblest missioner gains the hearts of multitudes.

Everybody is aware of the numerous conversions to Christianity effected by St. Francis Xavier in Japan in the sixteenth century. After the lapse of many years from the death of St. Francis, when a French squadron was permitted to enter the Japanese ports, a native Christian, named Peter, having learned that French Priests were on board, put their faith to the test by proposing to them these three questions: "Are you followers of the great Father in Rome? Do you honor Mary, the Blessed Virgin? Have you wives?" The French priests having satisfied their interrogator on these points, and especially on the last, Peter and his companions fell at the missioners' feet, exclaiming with delight: "Thanks, thanks! they are virgins and true disciples of our Apostle Francis." (Annals of the Propagation of the Faith, March, 1868.)

A contemporary writer has wittily remarked that "perhaps the most ardent admirer of hymeneal rites would cheerfully admit that he could not conceive St. Paul or St. John starting on a nuptial tour, accompanied by the latest fashions from Athens or Ephesus, and the graceful brides whom they were destined to adorn. They would feel that Christianity itself could not survive such a vision as that. Nor could the imagination, in its wildest moods, picture the majestic adversary of the Arian Emperor attended in his flight up the Nile by Mistress Athanasius, nor St. John Chrysostom escorted in his wanderings through Phrygia by the wife of his bosom arrayed in a wreath of orange-blossoms. Would Ethelbert have become a Christian if St. Augustine had introduced to him his lady and her bridesmaids?" (Marshall, Comedy of Convocation).

We frequently hear of unmarried Bishops and Priests laying down their lives for the faith in China and Corea and imprisoned in Germany. Heroic sacrifices such as these are, however, too much to be expected from men enjoying the domestic luxury and engrossed by the responsibility of a wife and children.

But does not St. Paul authorize the marriage of the clergy when he says: "Have we not power to carry about a woman, a sister, as well as the rest of the Apostles?" (I. Cor. ix. 5). The Protestant text mistranslates this passage by substituting the word wife for woman. It is evident that St. Paul does not speak here of his wife, since he had none; but he alludes to those pious women who voluntarily waited on the Apostles, and ministered to them in their missionary journeys.

It is also objected that the Apostle seems to require that a Bishop be "the husband of one wife." (I. Tim.

iii. 2). The context certainly cannot mean that a Bishop must be a married man, for the reason already given, that St. Paul himself was never married. The sense of the text, as all tradition testifies, is that no candidate should be elected to the office of Bishop who had been married more than once. It was not possible in those days always to select single men for the Episcopal office. Hence the Church was often compelled to choose married persons, but always with this restriction, that they had never contracted nuptials a second time. They were obliged, moreover, if not widowers, to live separated from their wives.

Others adduce against clerical celibacy these words of St. Paul: "In the last times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to spirits of error, * * * forbiding to marry." (I. Tim. iv. 1-3). This passage, however, alludes to the Ebionites, Gnostics and Manicheans, who positively taught that marriage is sinful. The Catholic Church, on the contrary, holds that matrimony is not only a lawful state, for those who are called to embrace it, but that it is also a Sacrament, and that the highest degree of holiness is attainable in conjugal life.

Some go so far as to declare continency impracticable. Our dissenting brethren in the ministry are so uxoriously inclined that, perhaps, for this reason they dispute the possibility, as well as the privilege, of Priests to remain single. But in making this assertion they impugn the wisdom of Jesus Christ and His Apostle, who lived in this state and recommended it to others; they slander consecrated priests and nuns, and they unwittingly question the purity of their own unmarried sisters, daughters and sons. How many men and women are there in the world who spend years, nay, their whole lives, in the single state? And who shall dare to accuse such a multitude of incontinency.?

Nor should any one complain of the severity of the law of clerical celibacy, since the candidate voluntarily accepts the obligations after mature consideration.

Finally, it cannot be urged against celibacy that it violates the Divine precept to "increase and multiply;" for this command surely cannot require all marriageable persons to be united in wedlock. Otherwise, bachelors and spinsters would also be guilty of violating the law. The number of men and women consecrated to God by vows of chastity forms but an imperceptible fraction of the human family, their proportion in the United States, for instance, being only one individual to about four thousand. Moreover, it is an incontrovertible fact that the population increases most in those countries in which the Catholic clergy exercise the strongest influence; for there married people are impressed with the idea that marriage was instituted not for the gratification of the flesh, but for the procreation and Christian education of children.

Regarding abstinence from meat on Friday's by Catholics, and the quoting of St. Paul as calling this "the doctrine of devils" (I. Tim. iv. 1-3), I will quote the following from Father Conwey's "Question Box," page 256:

"Catholics abstain from meat on Friday in honor of our Saviour's death on that day. St. Paul refers to the early Manichean heretics, who absolutely condemned the use of meat, because they held that all flesh was from an evil principle. It is true that the mere eating of meat is not sinful, but the deliberate disobedience to the Church, which stands in the place of Jesus Christ with a real, divine power of command, is undoubtedly a grievous wrong."

The present writer presents the above citations from a source of information on Catholic doctrine, not in any hope that it may be acceptable to the writer of last evening's communication, nor to any of the vast army of followers whom he claims as glorying in his brilliant leadership. His mind is so filled with the one subject of immoralities, that subject which St. Paul says should "not be mentioned among men"—that should a refusal to enter into controversy be considered an acknowledgement of defeat, he and his following are welcome to their victory. The mind that stoops to such insinuations cannot be a fit companion in decent discussion. There are, however, among your readers, Mr. Editor, those to whom silence might be regretfully indicative of defeat. To such, who in genuine Americanism wish, merely as a matter of unbiased honesty, to read the Catholic side of this and other religious matters of interest, I can assure a revelation which will be a source of satisfaction to those that want to now. I shall be glad to mail, gratis, books of such character to any address given me and can safely say that nowhere in them shall vulgarity or ridicule be found in reference to any man's religion. It is needless to add that such requests will be held in strict confidence. And to those who do not want the truth on this subject, argument is wasted energy.

Last evening's writer has indeed, unconsciously, served a good purpose. He has made known to citizens of Plainfield that in their well-conducted library they may find the Catholic Encyclopedia, whose fifteen volumes are open to fair as well as foul minds. They will find matters of Catholic History and Doctrine presented as they should be by Catholic writers; they will also find there matters of Protestant History and Doctrine presented as they should be by Protestant authorities. The Catholic Church awaits the judgment of intelligent readers, as it ever has been and ever shall be the subject of hatred and misconstruction by vulger readers.

They will find Dr. Jas. J. Walsh's "The Thirteenth, The Greatest Century" and Cardinal Gibbon's "Faith of Our Fathers" and other standard Catholic writers awaiting as they do in all the best libraries of our country, the gratitude of common enlightment, as they shall also endure the sneers of the vulgar.

The Catholic Church on earth is made up of men, not angels. From Pope to peasant they are human in their weaknesses. That the human element within her, has, it is true, alas, but too often brought shame upon her, is honest Catholic history. Yes, the Mother Church has suffered enough to bring destruction upon any merely human institution. That she still survives, that she lifts her head and looks the world in the face with courage for every new onslaught of minds or hearts, is but the confidence born of her Divine Founder. "Behold," says He, "the gates of hell shall not prevail against you." How well she can afford to welcome honest contest, how supreme her contempt for vileness.

Editor, Plainfield Daily Press:

Although no longer a resident of Plainfield, I left there so recently that I may be pardoned my intrusion upon this occasion.

Mr. Cruickshank makes some misstatements which need rectifying. In the first place, celibacy is not a dogma of the Catholic Church, but "an obligatory law imposed with a view to the dignity and duties of the priesthood." Jesus Christ Himself was a virgin, born of a virgin (St Luke, Chap. I) and in many instances He commands that state. (See Matt. XIX, 11-13 ver.) And there are many proofs that its practise is derived from the very foundation of Christianity, notwithstanding Mr. Cruickshank to the contrary, who quoted a few texts from St. Paul and overlooked some others. For instance, the first epistle to the Corinthians, Chap. VII, 6, 9, 27, 37, 37, 40 verses, particularly ver. 32, 33, 35.

To quote another source, "The Question Box," that wonderfully enlightening book on Catholic doctrine by the eminent Paulist, Father Conway: "Celibacy originated by Christ's appointment and flows naturally out of the Christian sense of the dignity of the priesthood; and voluntarily entered upon in Apostolic times, it became the law for the Western Church in the beginning of the fourth century. Pope Gregory VII in the Roman synod of 1074, merely revived the old laws and enforced their observance under the severest penalties."

After all, why all this acrimonious religious discussion? If any one really wants to knew the true doctrines of Catholicity he will not go to the "Menace" for them, a paper which surely by its very insinuations and want of real charity, condemns itself.

Really true Christian Catholics, whether pope, priest or lay-man, need no apologies for their lives which are the embodiment of the highest ideals of American manhood and womanhood, and all the "Menaces" in the world cannot detract one iota from the purity and beauty of these lives which are shining examples to their fellow men. Therefore, it behooves us all to be charitable, for to quote St. Paul once more (1st to the Cor. Chap. VIII, 1-13 ver.), "Charity is patient, is kind; charity envieth not, dealeth not perversely; is not puffed up.

"Is not ambitious, seeketh not her own, is not provoked to anger, thinketh no evil;

"Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth with the truth.

"Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. We see now through a glass darkly; but then face to face. Now I know in part but then I shall know even as I am known.

"And now there remain faith hope and charity: these three, but the greatest of these is charity."

GERTRUDE BRODHEAD.

Editor, Plainfield Daily Press:

Will you kindly allow me to correct a statement made in your editorial column of Wednesday, in regard to the "penny lunches." It is "the committee, having the matter in charge, has gone a step further now, and is giving a bowl of soup each noon to many young people who have no pennies to pay for it." I do not know who is responsible for this statement, for it gives an entirely wrong impression.

The luncheon committee in this town, as well as in New York and other cities where these lunches are served, is strongly opposed to the giving of free lunches. We do not consider that we are running a charity, nor do we wish to pauperize the children, as people who oppose this work are apt to accuse us of; so I felt that in justice to the luncheon committee, and the Plainfield Association of Mothers, I must make the following explanation:

Three or four children, by clearing the tables, wiping dishes, and if necessary, helping at the penny table, are allowed to earn their lunches, thus paying for what they receive by their services.

Some kind people, at different times, have given money to buy a daily lunch for some needy children. Miss Griffin investigates the cases and the children are given the penny and come and buy their bowl of soup just like the other children. No one knows, or is supposed to know, whether the child brings his penny from home or receives it at school.

This whole matter lies with Miss Griffin, and the committee has nothing whatever to do with it. I am sure Miss Griffin would be very glad to have money for this purpose, but the great need of the committee is for funds to carry on the whole work in general.

JACK LONDON, AUTHOR OF

The Abysmal Brute

Life among two fisted men is Jack London's text, and he sticks to it.

He tells of existence and of men as he has found them—from the Bering sea to the south sea islands.

The experiences of his characters have been his own. That is what makes them real men.

Add to his contact with life and his capacity of keeping vivid impressions of it a power to make his readers feel with him and you catch hold of the secret of his great power over his readers.

Few living men equal London in "getting down to facts." He has the ability of making the word fit the scene, of telling a story in a phrase of revealing a life in a chapter.

When you finish a London story you have lived with the characters. They are not men and women of straw, set up to fill out an idle hour.

They are living, breathing, feeling, suffering, triumphant human beings.

Jack London is only thirty-eight years old. In twenty years he has crowded more real life than most men do in a long lifetime.

He left college to go to the Klondike, and his farewell to book schools was permanent. Since then he has learned his lessons before the mast, in Japan, seal hunting in the arctic, tramping through the United States and Canada and as a war correspondent in the Russo-Japanese war.

Thousands of men and women have heard him lecture and have felt as they heard his strong, sincere voice that they were listening to a real man among men.

In "The Abysmal Brute" he has chosen a novel theme and handled it with an art that holds the reader's interest from first word to "finis."

PAMPHLET BY SAUNDERS.

A careful synopsis and analysis of the various aspects of the anti-trust legislation which has so recently engaged the attention of Congress as well as business men from one end of the country to the other, has been published in pamphlet form, under the title of 'Reveries of a Business Man.'" Former Mayor W. L. Saunders, of the borough, is the author.

Among the sub-topics, which are discussed in a masterly way, are "The Sherman Law," "A Trade Commission," "Interlocking Directorates," "The Trust Form of Organization," and "Holding Companies."

NORTH AND SOUTH POLE.

Owing to the failure of the street department to remove huge piles of snow from in front of the stationery store of William H. Olmstead, on Watchung avenue, that enterprising merchant has placed an American flag on top of each peak which he, as well as his customers, facetiously refer to as the North and South Poles.

Members of the Church of the Heavenly Rest held a reception in the parish house last night, and a program of music and games supplied entertainment for a large number of people. It was decided to repeat the reception next Tuesday evening.

THE "STOLEN AUTO EDITOR" LANDS ANOTHER GOOD STORY

IN THE SPORTING SPOTLIGHT

GREAT DISPLAY OF MOTOR CARS

Newark's Seventh Annual Show Will Open Tomorrow Night in Armory.

SOME GREAT EXHIBITS

Cars Entered Include American and Foreign Manufacturers—Vehicles of Every Size—Some of the Advantages the Show Has to Offer.

Greater in size, completeness and brilliancy than any of its predecessors, Newark's seventh annual automobile show will be opened in the First Regiment Armory, Sussex avenue, Hudson and Jay streets, at 8 o'clock tomorrow night. State Motor Vehicle Commissioner Job H. Lippincott will press the button to turn on the flood of electric lights that will mark the formal opening of the show and the refulgence of their beams will be reflected by the highly polished bodies of one of the greatest displays of motor cars and trucks ever seen in this State, and one that will take rank with the best in the country.

Every available foot of room in the huge armory, which is the largest in the State, has been contracted for. More than forty different makes of passenger cars, eighteen different makes of commercial vehicles, and close to half a hundred exhibitions in the accessory department will be on display. The estimated aggregate value of the exhibits has been placed at $1,000,000, and the show has been called Newark's Million Dollar Exhibition. Some of the booths will display only standard models, while others have contracted for several spaces so that they may be able to show entire lines, from the runabout to the stately limousine. There will be cars to meet every purse, from the little Saxon, selling at $395 to the luxuriously upholstered and magnificently equipped Pierce-Arrow enclosed cars that sell for six and seven thousand dollars each. And there will be a host of medium priced models between these two limitations.

Then there are the cycle cars, the latest recruits to motordom. Several different makes of these are promised, and with Jersey's famous roadbeds, quite a business should be developed for these little brothers of the auto. There is much curiosity over the cycle cars, and it is safe to say that they will attract as much attention as the larger models.

The entire west side of the armory has been set aside for the housing of the commercial vehicles. The demand for space in this section of the show was so great that the management found it necessary to change its plans at the last moment, and provide additional room for the display of the business vehicles. The fact that the pleasure cars and commercial vehicles are shown under one roof and at the same time, makes the Newark show of especial interest to the Jersey business man. He can take his wife and family, and after looking over the passenger car displays, will be able to hie himself to the west side of the building and look over the power-propelled wagons and trucks, get his information about costs of transportation, depreciation, upkeep, etc., and do it all in the one trip. Small wagons, suitable for the corner store grocer, department store delivery wagons, trucks from one to ten-ton capacity, tractors and trailers, two-wheel and four-wheel drives, fire engines, self-dumping coal wagons, ambulances, and a host of other models will be spread out for inspection.

Among the different makes that will be on display in both the pleasure car and commercial sections are the following:

Passenger cars—Marmon, National, Krit, Reo, Velie, Briscoe, Hudson, Jeffery, Studebaker, Hupmobile, Abbott-Detroit, Maxwell, Regal, Pathfinder, Havers, Pierce-Arrow, S. G. V., Simplex, Oakland, Haynes, Buick, Chalmers, Saxon, Kline Kar, Winton, Cole, Stevens-Duryea, Cadillac, Peerless, Overland, Willys-Knight, Oldsmobile, Grant, Pullman, Mitchell, Paige, and half a dozen more still to be nominated. The Imp, Mercury, Scripps-Booth and Le Vigne cycle cars will also be shown.

Commercial vehicles—Buick, Walter, Morton, Peerless, Overland, Adams, Velie, Pierce-Arrow Koehler, Selden, Reo, Stewart, Garford, Willys Utility.

The fact that Newark is the metropolis of New Jersey, where there are vast manufacturing establishments centered, and in addition draws on the wealthy suburban population of more than two million people in the Oranges, Montclair, Chatham, Madison, Summit, Bernardsville, Nutley and Elizabeth, makes the Newark show particularly attractive for the man who has cars to sell. Then, too, there is the dealer with State rights, who is anxious to make sub-agency connections, and for the latter purpose the Newark show is ideal. While many Jerseymen attend the big show in the metropolis, it is generally with the view of making a merely cursory examination of the cars displayed, and getting advance information, catalogues and other data. These are mulled over pending the arrival of the Newark show, and then the enthusiast is ready to place his order with his own local dealer, where he will be assured of prompt and efficient service should it be needed from time to time.

Manager Horace A. Bonnell is particularly optimistic about this year's show. The advance indications point to a record-breaking attendance, similar to what has been experienced by all of the other shows held this year. He has just returned from a trip through the West, after attending the Chicago show, and says that everybody is talking "good business" out there, and that those who are in a position to know predict that there will even be a shortage of cars this season if the present heavy demand keeps up.

The Newark show is being held under the management of the New Jersey Automobile Exhibition Company, which is made up of the dealers in this section of the State. The entertainment committee has outdone itself this year in providing features for the show. There will be "something doing" every night. In addition to the formal opening address by the State Motor Vehicle Commissioner, men prominent in the city's and State's official and social circles will be the guests of the management during the week. On Monday, on account of the celebration of Washington's Birthday, a special musical program of patriotic airs will be staged for both the afternoon and evening session. Tuesday will be club night. All of the automobile clubs in the northern part of the State have been invited to be present, and it is estimated that no less than five thousand of these will be in attendance, in addition to the regular visitors to the show. Governor's night will be on Wednesday, when Governor Fielder and his staff have been invited to be present. This night has generally been known as Society Night, and it is expected that the social set of Newark and its environs will be out in force. Gold lace and handsome gowns make a pleasing picture, and with the display of beautiful cars as a background the sight should be one long to be remembered.

Commercial Car Night has been set for Thursday. Special invitations have been extended to the business men of the State to attend the show that night. In addition, as a mark of appreciation for the good work that has been done for the industry by the New York Motor Truck Club, the members of that organization have been invited to attend in a body. As the New York truck show was passed up this year, the Newark display will be the only exhibition of commercial vehicles to be held in the metropolitan district this winter.

Mayor Jacob Haussling will be the guest of the management on Friday night, and will act as host to the Mayors of the Oranges, Irvington, Montclair, Bloomfield, Harrison, Belleville, Kearny, West Hudson, Elizabeth and other surrounding towns. Headquarters will be established in the smoking room at the north end of the main floor.

Something absolutely novel in the way of musical features has been arranged. It will be orchestral in character, and will be furnished by the Bostonia Women's Orchestra, under the leadership of Miss Belle Y. Renfrew, who will also have charge of the concerts that are to be given at Asbury Park during the coming summer. Miss Mae Sutton, of New York, a soprano soloist who is well-known in metropolitan musical circles, will appear at both the afternoon and evening sessions. The program which will be different for each day, has been selected with great and varied taste, with a liberal sprinkling of popular classics with songs and musical hits of the day. The entertainment committee in making its selection of the music, were compelled to decide between orchestral and band concerts. "We talk cars, sell cars, show cars, and of course the cars are the thing at the show," said the members of the committee. "If we can do this to the strains of an efficient orchestra which merely suggests itself and never intrudes, we have gone a long way toward adding to the real pleasure of a spectacular but, after all, strictly practical function." Many of the elite of this vicinity run in frequently for an afternoon to enjoy the concerts, and the entire balcony has been reserved for their comfort and convenience. The decorations, which will be in gold and white, of the Louis XVI period, will surpass anything that has been seen at previous shows, which is saying a great deal, for Newark has gained an enviable reputation for having the most beautiful of any of the leading motoring displays. As a fact, many of the minor shows held throughout the country have copied their decorating schemes from those first made successful here. The piece de resistance of this year's show will be an immense electrical fountain, located in the center of the main floor. Vari-colored electric lights will be reflected on the splashing waters, while goldfish will disport themselves in the palm-fringed pool below.

The Newark show is one of the few affairs of that kind that have not been marred by complaints, and much of their success in this respect has been due to the fact that the manager and his assistants, as well as the members of the various committees handling the affair, are all experienced showmen. The general manager of the show is Horace A. Bonnell, who has been chief executive at all of the local shows ever since hey were worthy of the name. Mr. Bonnell is a national figure in automobiling circles, and the local dealers are particularly fortunate in having a man of his calibre at the helm. Much of the detail work of the show is handled by the assistant manager, Claude E. Holgate, executive manager of the New Jersey Automobile Trade Association, and long prominent in Jersey's motoring circles.

The members of the various committees are:

NORTH PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL WINS THE INTERSCH OLASTIC CHAMPIONSHIP

North Plainfield High School basketball players copped the third and final handle on the Abrams trophy offered for the Interscholastic League basketball championship by defeating Plainfield High School with a score that was twenty-three parts victory and six parts opposition, in the Y. M. C. A. gym yesterday afternoon. Returning to the form that won the initial game for them, the boroughites put up an article of basketball that was practically unbeatable and the Plainfielders were completely outclassed in every department of the game.

The winner's score of 23 to 6 was totaled up by superior passing, clever guarding and accurate shooting, and after the issue once get well under way the Plainfielders never had a chance to cop the victory and all that went with it. Playing before a gallery of enthusiasts such as never before packed the association gym the players were noticeably under a severe strain and during the first three minutes of fighting neither side scored.

The fact that the boroughites held the Plainfielders to a pair of field goals and that the locals could make good on but two out of their many penalty throws is considered remarkable. Close guarding on the part of Abrams and Burner featured the boroughites' defensive play, while Dunning and Love contributed to the offensive work in brilliant style. Van Mater, although he got no goals, played a wonderful defensive game. Unlike the previous contest when the Plainfield guards were left uncovered, this issue was an exhibition of tight guarding and little shooting.

North Plainfield set the pace from the start and the Plainfielders were contented to lag as close as possible in the rear. Many "hard luck" shots were credited to the locals and Peacock and Hetfield had considerable trouble in getting the ball into the air.

While every man on the losing side fought tooth and nail for victory their efforts were practically futile as far as keeping the score close was concerned. The P. H. S. guards clung like leeches and the boroughites made many a phenomenal shot. In the second half the Plainfield team changed its forwards, ending in a small and untried substitute, but this put new life in the aggregation and for a time the team took on a scrappy aspect.

The contest was remarkably clean for one with so much at stake and the fouls that were called were of the unintentional nature. Both sides were weak on cashing the one point scores and few were made during the contest.

VICTORS CELEBRATE BASKETBALL TRIUMPH

Many Borough Students Make Merry Over Interscholastic Title Match.

What it meant to the members of the North Plainfield High School varsity team to win the interscholastic championship was shown last night when a crowd of enthusiasts celebrated. The start was made from the Somerset School and the first stop was made at Collier's store on Front street, where the coach was given an ovation. Abrams' Store, The Ritz and the Y. M. C. A. were invaded and cheers were given at each.

The march was then resumed for Plainfield High School, but a stop was made at Park and North avenues long enough for the entire score to be counted. The city school building was bombarded and the large placard on which the score was placed was left stuck in the front door.

They returned to The Ritz, where there were speeches by members of the team and the school song was sung. The affair was under the direction of Manager Dacios Van Mater, who was assisted by other members of the team.

ORANGE ELKS MAY BE SUSPENDED AT ONCE

The Orange team, of the Elks' Bowling League, which was scheduled to meet the New Brunswick Elks on the latter's alleys, last night, failed put in appearance. The Brunswicks rolled and will put the matter before the league officials for disposition, putting in a formal claim for three victories.

LOCAL CHAMPIONS STILL UNSATISFIED

N. P. H. S. Team Now Wants the Somerset County Title and Will Play Tomorrow.

The North Plainfield High School basketball team will go after another championship tomorrow afternoon, when it invades Bernardsville to play for the county title with the High School team of that place. Manager VanMater has chartered two large sleds and a big crowd of rooters will make the trip and cheer the local team on to another title.

The Bernardsville team expects to give the boroughites a hard fight. If the locals win tomorrow they will have repeated the feat that the team of 1912 accomplished, that of winning two championships in one season. Herman Abrams will be out of the lineup in tomorrow's game and Newkirk will be put in his place.

HELD DEMONSTRATION.

In connection with the Washington's Birthday exercises held in the auditorium of the North Plainfield High School this morning, the members of the basketball team and their fellow students gave a wild demonstration to celebrate the interscholastic victory of yesterday afternoon.

P. H. S. WILL PLAY Y. M. C. A.

The Plainfield High School basketball team will play the local Y. M. C. A. quintet on the latter's floor tomorrow night. Changes will be made in both teams.

LAST OF THE SHOGUNS.

Holder of a Once Powerful Office In Japan Buried With Funereal Pomp.

Prince Tokugawa, last of the Japanese shoguns, has been carried to his final resting place with all the pomp and ceremony of old Japan. This marks the passing of what was once the real power behind the throne in Japan. In fact, the shogunate was for some time the de facto ruling power in the country. Originally the title signified the general commanding each of the four divisions of the empire in early times. In 1192 Yordomo was made the chief shogun and became the virtual ruler of the land and laid the foundation of the feudal system in Japan.

In the hands of the Tokugawa family the shogunate acquired still greater power and the mikado became a mere shadow. The shogun was sometimes known to foreigners as the tycoon. After existing for nearly 700 years the office of shogun was finally abolished in 1868. Prince Tokugawa was the last holder of a title now extinct.

NO COMPROMISE, SAYS PRESIDENT

Wilson Firm on Panama Toll Question.

WILL INSIST ON REPEAL.

Leaders Want a Message—Underwood Will Not Oppose—Chief Executive Talks With Members of Both Houses and Receives Assurances of Support.

Washington, Feb. 20.—President Wilson let it be known that he is confident the free tolls provision of the Panama canal act will be repealed at this session of congress.

This confidence on his part has resulted from a series of conferences with house and senate leaders. Among the men with whom the president conferred were Senator Kern, the majority leader of the senate; Chairman Henry of the house rules committee, Chairman Simmons of the senate finance committee and Chairman Overman of the senate rules committee.

It was evident from things the president said to callers that he will insist upon the outright repeal of the objectionable provisions and will refuse any compromise that may be evolved with a view of retaining the free tolls provision for American coastwise vessels.

This became known when the president's attention was called to a compromise plan which has been suggested among the house members. This provided for the extension of the privilege of free passage to coastwise vessels of all nations—in other words, to Canadian vessels plying between the east and west coasts of Canada and to the South American countries whose ships might come under the provision.

Leaders Want Message.

House leaders desire some announcement or message to congress from the president before reversing themselves on the tolls question, so as to be able to make clear to constituents that international circumstances had required a change.

Representative Underwood, it is understood, while still believing in tolls exemption, will not organize any opposition to the president.

Representative Palmer, chairman of the Democratic caucus, said that, while he had voted against exemption, he would work actively for its repeal.

Henry Offers Assistance.

Chairman Henry of the house rules committee went to the White House and offered the president his help to expedite both the tolls question and trust bills.

He said he believed both house and senate would repeal the exemption clause within sixty days, and he expected the trust bills to be out of the house within a month.

Senators Simmons and Overman talked with the president and, although both voted for the exemption, they said they would change their positions, because they believed our foreign policy required it. Senator Shively of Indiana took the same stand.

FOR BIGGER COMMERCE BOARD

Kenyon Bill In Senate Provides For Sixteen Members.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Senator Kenyon introduced in the senate a bill to reorganize and enlarge the interstate commerce commission.

The bill increases the number of commissioners from seven to sixteen. It proposes to retain the present members and to extend their terms and authorizes the president to appoint nine additional commissioners.

The Kenyon measure divides the country into five divisions for the purpose of administering the interstate commerce act. It provides that the central headquarters shall be at Chicago instead of in Washington. Three commissioners are to be appointed from each division, but are not to be assigned to work in the respective division from which they are chosen.

This distribution of the personnel of the proposed commission will provide for fifteen members of the commission. The sixteenth member, who is to be chairman, will be appointed from the country at large.

ALL ABOARD FOR AERO EXPRESS ACROSS OCEAN, ROUND THE WORLD

Rodman Wanamaker Flight Will Have Vital Bearing on Exposition Race.

Experts Differ on Chances of Success In Winging Way Over Atlantic.

THE greatest conquests in the history of aviation are to be undertaken this year and next. Topping the ambitious aerial program are the transatlantic flight, which will be attempted in the early summer, probably in June, in a 200 horsepower flying boat paid for by Rodman Wanamaker of Philadelphia and designed by Glenn H. Curtiss, and the ninety day race around the world in May, 1915, under the auspices of the Panama-Pacific exposition to be held next year in San Francisco.

In connection with the forthcoming Anglo-American exhibition in London a prize of $5,000, together with a trophy, is offered by Mrs. Woodhull Martin, on behalf of the Women's Aerial league, to the first aviator flying across the Atlantic.

The competition is open to aviators of all nations. There are no restrictions regarding the type of flying machine.

The Wanamaker-Curtiss flight from Newfoundland to the Irish coast—1,900 miles—is to be essayed by an English army officer and a United States navy flier.

To Fly 10,000 Feet High.

The flying boat is expected to make the trip at an altitude of 10,000 feet in sixteen hours or less.

The attempt to cross the ocean will be under the auspices of the Aero Club of America.

The flight will be made "in the cause of science and in the interest of world peace," says Mr. Wanamaker. "The crossing of the Atlantic in one flight of an air craft is to my mind as important to aerial navigation as was the voyage of Columbus to transportation by water. Once the Atlantic is crossed in a single flight of an airship there will soon follow regular transatlantic trips and a fixed, safe transatlantic passenger air line."

Although the purpose of the flight as announced by Mr. Wanamaker has nothing to do with prize winning, the air voyagers, if successful, will win the Lord Northcliffe prize of $50,000.

Lieutenant Porte, a skillful English flier, was one of the first to be taken into the secret, and it is understood that he will be one of the fliers. He has been practicing with one of the Curtiss flying boats for several months on the English channel. One of the United States navy officers mentioned as the possible companion for Lieutenant Porte is Lieutenant John H. Towers, who holds the world's hydroaeroplane distance and duration record with a nonstop over water flight of 392 miles in six hours and ten minutes.

The machine for the over ocean flight will be known as the Rodman Wanamaker transatlantic flier and will resemble a very large Curtiss flying boat. A tractor screw in front of the machine will be used instead of the usual propeller.

Will Float if It Drops.

The hull is torpedo shaped and almost entirely inclosed, so that in case of accident it will float without swamping for days. The motor will be installed in the bow and will be readily accessible to the operators, who will be able to make adjustments during the flight. All the controls will be in duplicate so that the machine may be handled by both men in unison or by either one.

There is a theory that during the summer months a steady wind prevails in the North Atlantic, blowing about forty-five miles an hour from Newfoundland toward Ireland. With the aid of this wind it is estimated that the airship will make 100 miles an hour and negotiate the distance in sixteen hours, or between dawn and dusk of a long summer day of the north latitudes.

On paper the time required will be nine and a half hours, several hours less than the announced estimate, yet to provide against chance of failure to find the estimated wind velocity the fuel supply to be carried will be based on the requirements for making the entire distance at the actual flying speed of the machine.

That is, there will be enough gasolene aboard to fly the machine at sixty miles an hour for more than thirty hours.

Wireless For Fliers.

Soon after leaving the coast of Newfoundland the fliers will be in the regular track of Atlantic liners, and it is thought that they will at no time be out of sight of vessels. If the motor should stop at the 10,000 foot level the machine will have a gliding radius of fifteen miles in any direction. A wireless telegraph will be carried which will put the fliers in touch with any liner within 100 miles.

One of the men will fly the boat while the other attends to the navigation. It will scarcely be necessary for the navigating officer to look over the side of the cockpit in the flight between the two continents, so complete will be the equipment to tell the altitude, angle of flight, speed, direction and position.

Both the governments of Great Britain and the United States will be asked to send vessels to various points on the course. The navigator of the air craft will be furnished with a chart showing the location of these vessels and the approximate location of every transatlantic liner. It is also proposed to make the flight a yachting event in which the owners of private yachts will view the flight from midocean.

"The chances for success are about nine out of ten," Mr. Curtiss told Mr. Wanamaker. "It is largely a question of mathematics and money."

Can Man Fly Across Ocean?

The flight across the Atlantic is conceded to be the most difficult part of the aero race around the world.

Aviators have demonstrated the practicability of every stage of the trip excepting the flight over the Atlantic ocean. Atwood flew from Chicago to New York. Another airman flew from New York to the Pacific coast. In Europe a remarkable trip was made from Paris to Warsaw and return by Brindejonc de Moulinais, while Jules Vedrines flew from Paris to Cairo. A flight was made from Florida to Havana and a flight has been made across the Mediterranean by Garros.

The question of a flight across the Atlantic has been discussed by De Moulinais and by Roland Garros, both of whom are expected to try it. Vedrines also plans to make the flight. Orville Wright thinks that the feat can be accomplished.

While many experts are skeptical as to the success of the undertaking, Henry P. Woodhouse, managing editor of Flying, says that all the American aeroplane constructors believe the flight possible and will undertake the construction of transatlantic fliers on order.

"The difficulties of the trip," says Mr. Woodhouse, "so far as the flying part goes, are three—mountains, deserts and oceans. Aviators have flown back and forth many times over every high range of mountains in Europe. Vedrines declares that he found on his flight to Cairo that the desert was ideal flying ground, and Garros has twice crossed the Mediterranean."

Cortlandt Field Bishop, first vice president of the Aero Club of America and first vice president of the International Aeronautical federation, is confident that the race of motor driven air craft as planned by the directors of the Panama-Pacific exposition will be a success.

Mr. Bishop recently returned from abroad, where he witnessed many aviation events. What he saw there inclines him to the belief that nothing is too big for the aviators to accomplish today.

Alfred J. Moisant and aviators associated with him are of the opinion that a 200 horsepower motor is not powerful enough to propel an airship across the Atlantic. They assert that 500 horsepower is necessary.

Doubt Trip Possible Now.

English air men are inclined to regard an aeroplane trip around the world unfeasible in the present stage of aerial development. It is pointed out that in order to cover the distance in the stipulated time it would be necessary to fly at the rate of more than 200 miles daily for three months.

Vedrines was five weeks in accomplishing the 3,500 miles from Paris to the Pyramids, flying an average of only 100 miles daily.

"The exhibition committee's offer," says the Daily Mail of London, "indicates remarkable confidence in the future of air craft, though there is little prospect of the feat being accomplished by the proposed date. But it is merely a question of time before an air man puts a girdle around the world."

C. C. Grey, the editor of Aeroplane, a London publication devoted to aviation, says:

"Even considering the wonderful progress in the past, I cannot see how aeroplanes can be made within twelve months' time which will do the feats required in this flight."

The president of the United States, the king of Great Britain, the president of France, the German kaiser, the emperor of Russia, the emperor of Japan and the premier of British Columbia will be asked to name an international commission consisting of commissioners from each of the countries on the route of the race. This commission will be scientific and advisory, and its duties will be to suggest the route and offer counsel on geographic, meteorologic and scientific problems.

Captain Matthew A. Batson, president of the Batson Air Navigation company and inventor of the Batson triple motored hydroaeroplane, has announced his intention of entering the around the world race.

"It is just the sort of trip I have had in mind all along," says Captain Batson. "I consider the transatlantic flight and that over the Rocky mountains the hardest stages of the route. The machine that can cross the Atlantic can go around the world.

"The machine that can remain in the air the longest will have advantage. I expect to win the race. It will be a great trip."

Beckwith Havens of New York who, last summer, piloted an aeroplane from Chicago to New York by way of Detroit and Buffalo, has announced his intention to enter the world encircling race. Raymond V. Morris of New Haven, Conn., has also given notice that he has begun the plans for a new machine for transatlantic flight and will enter the competition. Word received from Los Angeles is that Lincoln Beachey will be a competitor.

SHACKLETON'S NEW ROUTE.

Change Decided on After Consulting Well Known Geographers.

Sir Ernest Shackleton has decided to abandon the route originally chosen for his journey across the antarctic continent.

This decision is announced in an article in the Geographical Journal, in which he writes that he has determined not to pursue the original route inside the Victoria chain of mountains. He consulted with the president of the Royal Geographical society and other well known geographers, and is prepared to adopt their opinion that more benefit would ensue if he took another route over to the eastward of Amundsen's track or between the Beardmore glacier route and the Amundsen glacier route.

Thus the entire ground would be new.

State Statue to Phil Kearny.

With the approval of Secretary Garrison, New Jersey has arranged to erect an equestrian statue of Major General Phil Kearny over the grave of that officer in the Arlington National cemetery. It will be the first monument of that character ever erected in the cemetery, as heretofore no permit has been given for an equestrian statue.

Getting Even With the Parson.

Parson Wheeler was invited out one afternoon for a motorcar ride with one of his friends. The minister, who enjoyed all outdoor sports, was very enthusiastic over motoring, so he was allowed to drive the car. While speeding along he was stopped by a constable and ordered to the station house.

"Well," said the captain, after listening to their story, "you say you were going at only fifteen miles an hour, but the constable declares you were traveling at forty. Now, I don't like to doubt the word of either of you. Can you think why he insists you were traveling at that rate of speed? Is there any grudge he owes you?"

MYSTERY IN THEFT OF THREE BODIES

Robbers Take Remains of Lawyer's Relatives.

WERE IN VAULT 30 YEARS

Owner Puzzled to Find Motive For the Crime—Second Attempt Is Successful as Soon as Watchman Is Removed From Vault—Cemetery Is Oldest In New Jersey.

Secaucus, N. J., Feb. 20.—Grave robbers forcibly entered a tomb of the family of Abel I. Smith of the New York and New Jersey bar, and the robbery from it of the bodies of three children, all of whom died more than thirty years ago, startled the authorities of Bergen county. The robbery of the tomb here is the result of persistent and crafty efforts which have failed at least once before.

The cemetery itself is one of the oldest in New Jersey and was set aside as a resting place for the dead more than 200 years ago.

Not only have the police been unable to find the slightest clew to the malefactors or any hint of the motives which led them to steal the dust and bones of the children who died within a few years of each other after the end of the civil war. They have nothing to help them determine when the crime was committed. It may have been done at any time since a watchman who had been employed to watch the vault was dismissed two weeks ago.

The vault was owned by Abel I. Smith of Manhattan. It was built fifty years ago and has contained seven coffins, though it has room for twenty-four.

Entering the vault, Doyle saw that three of the coffins which had once obviously held the bodies of children had been disturbed. They were those of Prudence Cary Smith, who died in 1865; Irene Smith, who died in 1870, and another.

Mr. Smith said that ever since the first effort to violate the tomb he has racked his mind to find a reason why anybody should want to break into a burial vault of his family and has been unable to get a satisfactory answer.

Hackensack, N. J., Feb. 20.—After a bittter contest James Norton, editor of the Bergen News, a Hackensack daily, has been confirmed for the second time to succeed Postmaster William Jeffers who has served eight years. The salary is $3,200.

After Congressman A. C. Hart of Hackensack named Norton and had the appointment confirmed a citizens' committee composed of friends of Postmaster Jeffers preferred charges against Norton in connection with a printing contract, and Senator Smoot caused the confirmation to be held up pending a hearing.

STRIKE FOR NEW TEACHER.

Pupils From District Quit School—Only Outsiders Attend.

Branchville, N. J., Feb. 20.—The Frankford board of education is running the Myers school, in charge of Miss Alice D. Walsh, without a single pupil from the district. The only pupils attending are from Hampton township. Expenses are $50 a month. All the income the board gets is $5 a month for each pupil.

The local pupils went on strike because they did not like the teacher. Seven of the striking pupils have gone to Longbridge to attend school, but the board of education of that place has given orders that they must return to their own school.

EX-TAX COLLECTOR IN COURT

Osborne Pleads Not Guilty to Charge of Embezzling $19,194.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 20.—Ex-Tax Collector A. Howard Osborne of Belleville pleaded not guilty in the court of quarter sessions to an indictment charging him with embezzling $19,194. There are five other bills against him, and the amount will be increased when he answers to them. Judge Martin set his trial for March 16.

Mr. Osborne succeeded his father as tax collector. He held the position for more than twenty years and no irregularities were discovered until after his defeat for re-election.

SENATOR KERN.

Majority Leader of Senate Active on Canal Agitation.

President Wilson is much encouraged by conferences he held with members of congress on the repeal of the tolls exemption provision of the Panama canal act. Senator Kern, the majority leader of the senate, was consulted as to the method to be pursued in getting the repeal through the senate and the probable time that would be required for such action. It developed from this conference that the bill to repeal probably will be taken up by the senate in advance of its consideration in the house.

CASTILLO IN STEEL CELL AT FORT BLISS

Bandit Hides His Head; Under United States Escort.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 20.—Maximo Castillo, charged with many crimes of murder and banditry in Mexico, was escorted by United States soldiers from a train and locked in a steel cell in a guardhouse at Fort Bliss.

Hundreds of curiosity seekers crowded the vacant space in front of the depot when the El Paso and Southwestern train arrived from Hachita, N. M. Company I, Twentieth United States infantry, formed a double file from the entrance to the station to two big automobile trucks that stood in front. "United States Quartermaster's Department" blazoned on the sides. In the trucks were some empty boxes from the commissary storehouse.

Through this file of infantrymen Castillo and his party, five men and a woman, were marched through the station to the waiting automobiles. The interior of the station had been cleared by the police and the local sheriff's force. Castillo rather crouched than walked, as if he expected assassination as soon as he faced the crowd, but there was not even a jeer. The man accused as his latest offense of wrecking a passenger train two weeks ago and sending fifty-one people to their death in the Cumbre tunnel walked out completely surrounded by about twenty negro troopers of the Ninth United States cavalry.

Under command of Major Greene, the soldiers stationed themselves about the bandit leader and his associates on the automobile trucks, their guns loaded and cocked, and as the trucks moved through the streets the negro soldiers kept their eyes constantly on the crowds, ready to shoot at the first move to harm their prisoner. Castillo's head hung low on his breast, and he tried hard to keep from the gaze of the people who had crowded the streets to get a glimpse of him.

FOUR DIE IN CRASH.

Thirty Are Hurt and Many Injured For Life.

Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 20.—The thirty-one persons injured in the street car accident near the Virginia avenue viaduct, in which four men were killed, were reported to be in an improved condition at the various hospitals. It was believed the death list would not be increased, although some of the injured will be maimed for life.

The four dead are James Horan, fifteen; Jacob H. Hardy, forty-eight; Fletcher Roark, fifty-two, and Harry Oliver, twenty-six.

Slippery rails, due to the snow and rain, are given as the cause of the accident, which resulted when a heavy Indianapolis and Cincinnati traction freight car ran into an English avenue car that was blocked by a Greenwood local interurban car. The city car was badly crushed between the two heavier interurban cars.

Providence, R. I., Feb. 20.—Arthur C. Mack allege" to have beaten his wife to death, was sentenced to six years' imprisonment. He was tried on a charge of murder, but the jury found him guilty of manslaughter.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys if Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

PARODIES SUNG AT THE DINNER LAST NIGHT

(Air—There's a Girl in the Heart of Maryland)

Especially dedicated to each one of the 57 aspirants for the local post office job.

There's a job lying loose in this here town,
It's a job that should come to me.
When I first fell into line, Mr. Tuttle said 'twas mine
Now he is way up a tree.
Then Martine, he said, "Hully Gee, it's been promised to just twenty-three"
Just the same I'm a darn good Democrat, and the job sure belongs to me.

(Air—In My Harem)

Dedicated to Mayor Newton B. Smalley, and the new county of Washington).

In my county, my county,
I'll have the laugh on Union, and there's never be a minute
That Somerset is in it,
Jobs for this one, jobs for that one, jobs most all the time,
Lots of fine improvements that will hardly cost a dime
In my county, my county, there'll be no "ring-a-rosy"
And the things I'll do, will make you glad that you
Are in the county of Washington.

(Air—That's How I Need You)

Arranged to be sung in duet form by Messrs. Findlay and Gloekler.

As the copper needs his night stick, as the rarebit needs its cheese,
As the beefsteak needs its gravy, as the ice man needs a freeze,
As the corn beef needs its cabbage, as the oyster needs the stew,
Oh! my long lost, precious license, that's how I need you.

(Air—I Wish I Was in the Land of Dixie)

We'd like to know, we'd like to know,
When they'll put up that new post office?
It was ordered many years ago, but Washington moves so doggoned slow.
We'll all be dead, we'll all be dead,
Yes, long before the ground is broken
If they don't start quick, they can all go to
H-E-L—We won't just care to spell it,
But they can, you bet they can, for we're all mad through and through.

(Air—Take a Little Tip From Father)

Take a little tip from Jeffrey, take a little tip from Bill,
Boost, always boost, for your beautiful town
Each little speech means a greater Plainfield.
Start today, right away, do it with a will
Then join the Board of Trade next meeting
And help your town grow quicker still.

BOARD OF TRADE BANQUET

ment until they heard him play last night. Just before dinner was served a flashlight picture was taken of the gathering. President William Jeffery and Leslie R. Fort, chairman of the dinner committee, occupied seats at the speakers' table, as did Toastmaster Reed.

REED FACETIOUS AS HE INTRODUCES C. H. SHERRILL

Introduced by President Jeffery, Toastmaster Reed spoke briefly.

"It is with the greatest pleasure," said he, "that I assume the office of toastmaster and let me assure you that I consider it a great privilege to address such a galaxy of beauty as I see here before me. Everyone seems to be here except the fire department, it seems to me. It is one of the greatest pleasures of my life to be in the minority and I am very sure that Congressman Tuttle, whom we have here with us tonight, will agree with me as to that."

Then graciously, and with felicitous greetings, Toastmaster Reed introduced Charles Hitchcock Sherrill, saying that while American minister to Argentina, Mr. Sherrill had increased the foreign trade of the United States some $25,000,000 and that evidently the word "Argentina" meant the land of gold.

"I can see very readily that Mr. Reed is a Republican," said Mr. Sherrill, smilingly, "as he seems to think the word 'Argentina' means gold. Both Congressman Tuttle and Mr. Bryan will tell him that it means silver. There are, I understand, three church dinners being given here in Plainfield tonight and I am certainly pleased to meet here, the heathen residuum. Its a good town that can run a three ring and stage circus at once as the late P. T. Barnum might have said.

"Before I went to Argentina I knew but little about South America. It is a shame to think of the small amount of trade that the United States gets from that country. The reason we do not get it is simply that we do not go after it. The trade is there, the money is plentiful and we can get it if we want it and will only go after it.

"I have spoken on this topic within the last year or two before 177 bodies in this country and I can see that the manufacturers of the country are at last beginning to awaken to their opportunities as regards foreign trade. It is really not half so difficult as it seems. The greatest fields for foreign trade are Europe, the far East and South America. In South America the foreign trade that other nations secure amounts to enormous sums. In one year the trade of Argentina amounted to $900,000,000, the foreign trade in Brazil to $500,000,000, and that of Uruguay to $80,000,000. Other South American countries also contributed their share.

"Few people in the United States apparently know much about South America. They are amazed to find that the city of Buenos Ayres has a population of more than 1,500,000, and that in every way it is far superior to any city in this country. We have not one city that can approach it. In Buenos Ayres the people have everything. In the two years that I was there I can truthfully say that I never saw a beggar on the street, nor did I ever seen a drunken man in the streets. For the most part the city is built of concrete. The climate is ideal. In the coldest weather the temperature never reaches the freezing point and the thermometer in summer does not exceed ninety degrees. Although the city is 125 miles from the ocean, yet it is situated on a river that is 30 miles in width. The soil is a rich alluvial deposit and the wealth of the country comes largely from agriculture and its by products, and the raising of cattle. In some cases five crops a year are raised. The country is flat, there are but few trees, no coal, no power and no manufactories. Buenos Ayres is probably the most expensive place in all the world to live. It is even more expensive than is St. Petersburg. As an example let me say that the initiation fee of an exclusive club in New York is $300. In Buenos Ayres the initiation fee is $1,500 in gold.

"Italians from the north of Italy and Spaniards as well go to South America as immigrants, and as many as 250,000 a year are received. In one year immigrants to this large number were distributed to 1,111 different points. One is surprised when one is told that Argentina has a gold reserve of $242,000,000. It covers an area about as large as the State of New York. There were in Buenos Ayres when I was there 40,000 English, 35,000 Germans, 30,000 French and only 315 Americans. Money is no object to the South Americans. In three weeks, during the city's centennial celebration, the enormous sum of $3,000,000 was spent on street lighting alone. Borrowing the municipal architect of Paris, France, Buenos Ayres razed eight city blocks in five and a half weeks' time and created a magnificent public park, with trees planted and fountains playing. Three battleships are now being built for Argentina at a cost of $23,000,000 which is being paid out of the current revenues of the country."

MAYOR STEWART SAYS BOARD OF TRADE CAN DO GREAT GOOD

Mayor Percy H. Stewart spoke very briefly. He was received with great and enthusiastic applause. In part he said:

"I consider it a great compliment that there are so many of you left after hearing from Mr. Sherrill how easily money can be made in South America. When this meeting first started I noticed that it was introduced with song, which was most delightful. I feared at first that we might be going to follow the example of Billy Sunday, the evangilst, who, I understand, always opens his temperance meetings with song. I am glad to see such a large gathering as this here tonight.

"It is an organization such as the Plainfield Board of Trade, which can do a great deal of good for a city such as this. We are in need of good, clear eyed, right thinking business men, who can let us know their feelings on all public questions such as we are called upon to consider and to solve. There are many things the city ought to have; many things that we need and that we should all like to see but which we realize we cannot now have.

"We are facing a tax rate that is mounting year by year. It costs money to get improvements. We must exercise self restraint in our public expenditures just as we are called upon to do in our private affairs. Here we have a great body of citizens which have only recently begun to start activities towards civic betterment. The public and the people of this city generally want to know and be kept informed as to how laws affect their interests. I thank you all for attending here tonight and on behalf of myself and all of us thank the distinguished guests for being with us here tonight."

Chairman Leslie R. Fort, of the dinner committee, read a letter of regret which he had received from W. G. Besler, who was to have been present.

The departure of the cook or maid does not prostrate the lady who knows the efficiency of Press want ads.

And want ad-reading servants are of the desirable class.

REISNER FORCEFUL IN TALK ON MODERN CHURCH METHODS

Rev. Christian F. Reisner pleased the audience by his witty remarks, his forcefulness and the virility of character shown by him in his utterances regarding the need of furthering church activities and increasing the attendance through present day advertising methods. Mr. Reisner said:

"Church publicity is the modern method of compelling people to come into the church. There must be a real gospel spread. People do not want merely fine music, stately ritual, or orderly procedure. There must be truth, heart-warm and flavored with friendliness. There must sinner, comfort for the sorrowing, be spurring for the lazy, hope for the strength for the weak. Religion must be made reasonable, normal and up-to-the-minute in adaptability. Sinners will be converted, Christians will be convinced, doubters will be transformed. We must when this case exists open the eyes of people. The church can have the biggest things in the community.

"Special services must be made notable. The Y. M. C. A. in Denver planned a series of men's meetings. Not a single notice was read from the church pulpit, but normal publicity was employed as diligently and variously as by a business house. Four thousand men gathered at the first meeting and more than one-half of them were of the class who never went to church. That was getting new business. A similar plan was employed when Gypsy Smith came to Denver, and 12,000 people greeted him at the first service.

"Laymen in Seattle promised three down-town pastors to do publicity work for their union revival service. They hired a brass band. Four hundred of them marched behind it through the streets, and when it stopped on the corners to play they went among the crowd to invite them to the service. They burned red lights on the street corners to attract people to the meeting. One thousand people signed cards during the three weeks the meetings continued, and that without a special evangelist.

"The newspapers' co-operation must be secured. J. Wilbur Chapman's great New England campaign would have been impossible without this. Billy Sunday would lose much of his potency if the papers did not print remarkable stories about his work. The United Presbyterian church needed twelve thousand dollars to send out some new missionaries. Space was purchased in papers and in a few days nineteen thousand dollars had come in as a result of advertising the facts concerning the needs of the foreign field and the workers ready to go. Newspapers are friendly and if given full help will co-operate. The church has the best possible human interest stories. They must be shaped up and dressed so that the newspapers will recognize it. The church can have no better helper than the daily newspaper.

"Mr. Brown, in Chicago, sent one hundred dollars to buy space for the printing of a passage from the Bible in the Chicago Tribune. The next day two business associates told him they had been converted as the result of reading that scripture. What would happen if eight or ten of the best business men of the town would buy a page in the daily papers here and give their religious experience and sign their names to it? Men would recognize a vital state and a tendency to give God the glory for a fruitful life. In short, church publicity is a real, vital, thrilling, throbbing church, alert, up-to-date, using every possible means to get a hearing and to enforcing its message. Church publicity brings a harvest. Russia has hired a publicity agent as did Japan before her. Canada took one hundred thousand families from the United States last year by publicity work. John Wanamaker took in $24.75 the first day he was in business. Immediately he bought $21 worth of space in the daily papers. He now buys pages every day. The Anti-Tuberculosis Society spent nearly two million dollars last year for publicity purposes, but they increased their income forty-nine per cent.

"We must, through publicity, establish the need of religion. Business men think they need golf and the automobile on Sunday, but that does not bring them the real refreshment and strengthening they require. What they really need is the peace of God, the thrill of His indwelling, the happiness of His leadership. They keep keen and strong by church attendance. The church will give them what they really need and we must show that to them. Publicity helps establish that. Church publicity is sensible. Jesus performed miracles, not to establish His power, but to get a hearing. Curiosity brought the crowds. Then He alone preached the truth. Paul preached in a prisoner's dock, and even in prison, and went about Rome preaching chained to a soldier. Wesley, shut out from his father's church, preached on a tombstone, hired a foundry and then sent out illiterate men. He employed every possible thing of his day to get an audience, whether people called him sensational or not. Gypsy Smith tells in his biography that he was preaching to a little crowd until he got a brass band and after that he preached to five thousand.

Of Interest to Women and the Home

NEEDLEWORK

By MARGARET LAWRENCE

A PATTERN FOR THE BABY'S SACK

Pretty warm little sacks of cashmere, albatross or crêpe de Chine are always acceptable gifts for the new baby. Pattern 14639, includes both the cutting outline and embroidery transfers for one of these useful little garments. The collar may be omitted and the neck finished with a rolled hem featherstitched if one likes, but the turn-over collar is very pretty. You will notice that this little sack is more shaped and fitted than the circular or square sacks, and for this reason it is appropriate for out-of-doors wear in the summer time when a long coat is uncomfortably clumsy. The pattern should be stamped very quickly on white wool material, with an iron laundry heat. If the iron is allowed to stand in one place it may scorch the fabric, so iron it over very quickly. If the sack is to be lined with China silk, embroider the flower sprays first with twisted or filo silk, then baste the China silk lining to the outside and buttonhole the two materials together.

Guaranteed, hot iron transfer pattern 14639, can be supplied to readers on receipt of price, 15 cents.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

Separate skirts are cut on more attractive lines this season than for some time. As most of them are slightly high waisted, a pretty blouse of chiffon in the same shade will give the effect of a dress; in this way the skirt that has done service for business with a plain waist may quickly be transformed into a smart little dinner dress.

No. 7855 is a three piece skirt with a slightly raised waistline and a deep, shaped trimming band giving the effect of a tunic.

Duvetyn, serge, cloth or any favored material may be used for this skirt.

Size 24 requires 3¼ yards of 42 inch material.

The pattern is cut in 5 sizes; 22 to 30.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, passing the tape tightly around the smallest part of the waist and loosely around the widest part of the hips.

It may be obtained by filling out the coupon and enclosing 15 cents in stamps or coin to the Pattern Department of this paper.

Some Cookery Suggestions

LARDED BEEF.

DRY cuts of beef are improved by larding. For this process the housewife needs a larding needle and thin strips of bacon to use in the needle.

Larded Steak.—Get as thick a slice of steak as the butcher will cut. Let it weigh from a pound to a pound and a half. Lard the top with fat bacon cut in strips. If there is no larding needle in the kitchen a large darning needle will form a good substitute, though, of course, the larding will not be so even. Put three slices of carrot, an onion cut in rings and a tiny bit of turnip with six peppercorns and two allspice in a baking pan with about a gill of water or stock. Put the steak on the vegetables, cover with buttered paper and bake for an hour and a quarter, basting now and again. Serve the steak, strain and thicken the gravy and serve very hot.

A Succulent Roast.

Larded Pot Roast.—Take a piece of meat that is very lean, beef suet and two or three thick slices of salt fat pork. Cut up the suet and render it. With a sharp pointed knife cut deep gashes in the thickest part of the meat and insert strips of the salt fat pork in the gashes, first dredging the strips with pepper and flour. Let the ends of the pork strips stick out a little. Then dredge the meat with pepper and flour, rubbing it into the fiber. Brown it quickly and well in the hot suet. Pour off most of the fat, leaving a few tablespoonfuls, and add from a half to a cupful of boiling water, a sliced onion and a few sprigs of parsley. Cover and cook slowly for several hours, according to size of piece, until you can pierce it to the middle with meat fork. It will cook very tender and juicy and be of rich and delicious flavor when properly done.

Flavored With Onion.

Larded Round of Beef.—Take from four to six pounds of the bottom of the round. Get a nice piece of all fat salt pork, cut this into two inch strips and lard the meat on all sides, sprinkle with flour and a little salt and pepper. Cut up one onion very small, put in roasting pan with a little hot water and set in a hot oven to roast. When nice and brown baste the roast several times. Then take one quart of milk and pour over the roast a little at a time, cover with another pan and roast for two hours. Then add a little water. Thicken gravy with one and one-half tablespoonfuls of flour in a little water.

One Bird Seemed to Be the Leader.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—The Brave Brown Sparrows In Winter.

"YOU know," said daddy. "I saw such a strange thing today in the city."

"Tell us about it," said Jack.

"What was it?" asked Evelyn, who was always interested in whatever daddy had to say.

"Well," continued daddy, "in a tree in the park lots and lots of little sparrows were roosting. It was, of course, a perfectly bare tree without a leaf on it, and they were huddled together, keeping each other warm.

"I watched them for quite a time. There was one sparrow who looked the leader. He did most of the chirping and was apparently telling all the others what they must do and giving all sorts of directions. He chirped almost constantly for ten minutes, and then he flew down from the tree and hopped along the ground. He picked up crumb after crumb, and then when he had as many as he could carry in his beak he flew up in the tree again and left them on a branch where there was a kind of hole in which to put them. He was evidently showing all the other birds just what to do, for in a minute or two any number of them flew down to the ground and began to pick up crumbs.

"It was wonderful to see how many they could find, for I myself could hardly see any, and all the time he kept chirping to the others and telling them what to do.

"This kept up for some time, for the birds would fly back and forth, just picking up goodies and then putting them up in the tree. Meantime a lot of other birds who had stayed up in the tree were fixing them on the branch and dividing them all evenly."

"Didn't they eat any of them?" asked Evelyn.

"Yes. After quite awhile they all flew back to the tree again, and once more they huddled together and had the most marvelous meal. You see, it was their dinner time, and they all had it together at the same time to make it more sociable. From all the cries of joy and the noise I fancy they were having a pretty good time of it and enjoying themselves immensely. In fact, I think they almost forgot how cold it was."

"I think it's wonderful," said Evelyn, "how well the birds can look after themselves, for it must be pretty hard sometimes, especially in the winter."

"Yes," said daddy, "it is, but these birds seemed so happy together and to be having such a good time. After dinner was over they all chased each other from one tree to another in the park and played tag and had a beautiful time. So I think really birds and animals are smart and brave to be able to look after themselves and their little ones so well."

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

CHAPTER XXI.

In the Name of the Law.

MAGEE'S eyes strayed to where the two victims of the dead man's falsehood whispered together in the shadows, and he wondered at the calmness with which Kendrick had greeted Hayden in the room above.

"When Kendrick arrived," Professor Bolton went on, "first of all he consulted his old friend Drayton. Drayton informed him that he had nothing to fear should his misstep be made public, for in reality there was at this late day no crime committed in the eyes of the law. He also told Kendrick how matters stood, and of the net he was spreading for Hayden. He had some fears, he said, about sending a man of my years alone to Baldpate inn. Kendrick begged for the chance to come too. So, without making his return known in Reuton, three nights ago he accompanied me here. Three nights—it seems years. I had secured keys for us both from John Bentley. As we climbed the mountain I noticed your light, and we agreed it would be best if only one of us revealed ourselves to the intruders in the inn. So Kendrick let himself in by a side door while I engaged you and Bland in the office. He spent the night on the third floor. In the morning I told the whole affair to Quimby, knowing his interest in both Hayden and Kendrick, and secured for Kendrick the key to the annex. Almost as soon as I arrived"—

"The curtain went up off the melodrama," suggested Mr. Magee.

"You state it vividly and with truth," Professor Bolton replied. "Night before last the ordinance numbered 45 was due to pass the council. It was arranged that when it did, Hayden, through his man Rutter, or personally, would telephone the combination of the safe to the mayor of Reuton. Cargan and Bland sat in the office watching for the flash of light at the telephone switchboard, while you and I were Max's prisoners above. Something went wrong. Hayden heard that the courts would issue an injunction making ordinance No. 45 worthless. So, although the council obeyed Cargan's instructions and passed the bill, Hayden refused to give the mayor the combination."

The old man paused and shook his head wonderingly.

"Then melodrama began in dead earnest," he continued. "I have always been a man of peace, and the wild scuffle that claimed me for one of its leading actors from that moment will remain in my memory as long as I live. Cargan dynamited the safe. Kendrick held him up. You held up Kendrick. I peeked through your window and saw you place the package of money under a brick in your fireplace"—

"You—the curtains were down," interrupted Magee.

"I found a half inch of open space," explained the old man. "Yes, I actually lay on my stomach in the snow and watched you. In the morning for the first time in my life I committed robbery. My punishment was swift and sure. Bland swooped down upon me. Again this afternoon I came upon the precious package, after a long search, in the hands of the hermit of Baldpate. I thought we were safe at last when I handed the package to Kendrick in my room tonight, but I had not counted on the wild things a youth like you will do for love of a designing maid."

Twelve o'clock! The civic center of Upper Asquewan Falls proclaimed it.

"No," said Mr. Magee, answering aloud his own question. "You are wrong, sir. I do not know just what the motives of Miss Norton were in desiring this money, but I will stake my reputation as an honest holdup man that they were perfectly all right."

"Perhaps," replied the other, quite unconvinced. "But what honest motive could she have? I am able to assign her no role in this little drama"—

"Pardon me," broke in Magee, "but would you mind telling me why Miss Thornhill came up to Baldpate to join in the chase for the package?"

"Her motive," replied the professor, "does her great credit. For several years her father, Henry Thornhill, has been forced through illness to leave the management of the railway's affairs to his vice president, Hayden. Late yesterday the old man heard of this proposed bribe—on his sick bed. He was very nearly insane at the thought of the disgrace it would bring upon him. He tried to rise himself and prevent the passing of the package. His daughter, a brave, loyal girl, herself undertook the task."

"Then," said Mr. Magee, "Miss Thornhill is not distressed at the loss of the most important evidence in the case."

"I have explained the matter to her," returned Professor Bolton. "There is no chance whatever that her father's name will be implicated."

"Did Miss Thornhill and Kendrick meet for the first time after his exile upstairs—in No. 7?" Mr. Magee wanted to know.

"Yes," answered Professor Bolton. "In one of his letters long ago Hayden told Kendrick he was engaged to the girl. It was the last letter Kendrick received from him."

There was a pause.

"The important point now," the old man went on "is the identity of this girl to whom you have made your princely gift out of the goodness of your young heart. I propose to speak to the woman she has introduced as her mother and elicit what information I can."

He crossed the floor, followed by Mr. Magee, and stood by the woman's chair. She looked up, her eyes heavy with sleep, her appearance more tawdry than ever in that faint light.

"Madam," remarked the professor, with the air of a judge trying a case, "your daughter has tonight made her escape from this place with a large sum of money earnestly desired by the prosecuting attorney of Reuton county. In the name of the law I command you to tell me her destination and what she proposes to do with that package of greenbacks."

The woman blinked stupidly in the dusk.

"She ain't my daughter," she replied, and Mr. Magee's heart leaped up. "I can tell you that much. I keep a boarding house in Reuton, and Miss—the girl you speak about—has been my boarder for three years. She brought me up here as a sort of chaperon, though I don't see as I'm old enough for that yet. You don't get nothing else out of me, except that she is a perfectly lovely young woman, and your money couldn't be safer with the president of the United States."

Mr. Magee could have embraced this faded woman for her news. He looked at his watch. It was 12:20.

"The siege is over!" he cried. "I shall not attempt to direct your actions any longer. Mr. Peters, will you please go down to the village and bring back Mr. Quimby and—the coroner?"

"The coroner!" The mayor of Reuton jumped to his feet. "I don't want to be in on any inquest scene. Come on, Max, let's get out of here."

Bland stood up. His face was white and worried. His gay plumage no longer set the tone for his mood.

"I think I'll go, too," he announced, looking hopefully at Magee.

"I'm no longer your jailer," Magee said. "Professor, these gentlemen are your witnesses. Do you wish to detain them?"

"See here," cried the mayor angrily, "there ain't no question but that you can find me in Reuton any time you want me at the little room on Main street. Anybody can tell you my hours. The door's always open to any reformer that has the nerve to climb the stairs. Look me up there. I'll make it interesting for you."

"I certainly shall," the professor replied, "and very soon. Until then you may go when and where you please."

"Thanks!" sneered the mayor. "I'll expect you. I'll be ready. I've had to get ready to answer your kind before. You think you got me, eh? Well, you're a fool to think that. As for Drayton, the pup, the yellow streaked pup, I'll talk to Mr. Drayton when I get back to Reuton."

"Before you go, Bland," remarked Magee, smiling, "I want to ask about Arabella. Where did you get her?"

"Some of it happened to a friend of mine," the ex-haberdasher answered, "a friend that keeps a clothing store. I got this suit there. I changed the story here and there."

Mr. Magee laughed, but over the long lean face of Bland not the ghost of a smile flitted. He was frightened through and through.

"You're a fine bunch," sneered Mr. Max. "Reformers, eh? Well, you'll get what the rest of 'em always got. We'll tie you up in knots and leave you on the doorstep of some orphan asylum before we're through with you."

"Come on, Lou," said Cargan. "Drayton's a smart guy, Doc. Where's his proof? Eloped with the bundle of dry goods this young man's taken a fancy to. And even if he had the money—I've been up against this many a time. You're wasting your talents, Doc. Good night! Come on, boys."

Mr. Magee turned back from the window to the dim interior of the hotel office. He who had come to Baldpate inn to court loneliness had never felt so lonely in his life, for he had lost sight of her—in the great Reuton station of his imagination she had slipped from his dreams—to go where he could not follow, even in thought.

Selecting a log of the hermit's cutting from the stock beside the hearth, Mr. Magee tossed it on the fire. There followed a shower of sparks and a flood of red light in the room. Through this light Kendrick advanced to Magee's side, and the first of the Baldpate hermits saw that the man's face was lined by care, that his eyes were tired even under the new light in them, that his mouth was twisted bitterly.

"Poor devil," thought Magee.

Kendrick drew up chairs for himself and Magee and they sat down. Behind them the bulky Mrs. Norton dozed, dreaming perhaps of her Reuton boarding house, while Miss Thornhill and the professor talked intermittently in low tones. The ranks at Baldpate were thinning rapidly; before long the place must settle back with a sigh in the cold to wait for its first summer girl.

"Mr. Magee," said Kendrick nervously, "you have become involved in an unkind, a tragic story. I do not mean the affair of the bribe—I refer to the matter between Hayden and myself."

"If you had rather not"— began Magee.

"No," replied Kendrick, "I prefer that you should know. It was you who took the pistol from—his hand. I do not believe that even I can tell you all that was in Hayden's mind when he went into that other room and closed the door. It seems to me preposterous that a man of his sort should take his life under the circumstances. I feel somehow that there is a part of the story even I do not know. But let that be."

He bowed his head in his hands.

"Ever since I came into this room," he went on, "the eyes of a pompous little man have been following me about. They have constantly recalled to me the nightmare of my life. You have noticed, no doubt, the pictures of the admiral that decorate these walls?"

"I have," replied Magee. He gazed curiously at the nearest of the portraits. How persistently this almost mythical starched man wove in and out of the melodrama at Baldpate inn.

"Well," continued Kendrick, "the admiral's eyes haunt me. Perhaps you know that he plays a game—a game of solitaire. I have good reason to remember that game. It is a silly inconsequential game. You would scarcely believe that it once sent a man to hell."

He stopped.

"I am beginning in the middle of my story," he apologized. "Let me go back. Six years ago I was hardly the man you see now—I was at least twenty years younger. Hayden and I worked together in the office of the Suburban railway. We had been close friends at college. I believed in him and trusted him, although I knew he had certain weaknesses. I was a happy man. I had risen rapidly, I was young, the future was lying golden before me, and I was engaged. The daughter of Henry Thornhill, our employer—the girl you have met here at Baldpate—had promised to be my wife. Hayden had also been a suitor, but when our engagement was announced he came to me like a man, and I thought his words were sincere.

"One day Hayden told me of a chance we might take which would make us rich. It was not altogether within the law, but it was the sort of thing that other men were doing constantly, and Hayden assured me that as he had arranged matters it was absolutely safe. My great sin is that I agreed we should take the chance, a sin for which I have paid, Mr. Magee, over and over."

Again he paused and gazed steadily at the fire. Again Magee noted the gray at his temples, the aftermath of fevers in his cheeks.

"We took the chance," he went on. "For a time everything went well. Then one blustering March night Hayden came to me and told me we were certain to be caught. We arranged to meet the next night at the Argots club and decide on what we should do.

"We met in the library of the club. Hayden came in to me from the card room adjoining, where he had been watching the admiral doddering over his eternal game. Just at that moment the admiral finished his game and went out. We were alone in the library.

"Hayden told me he had thought the matter over carefully. There was nothing to do but to clear out of Reuton forever. But why, he argued, should we both go? Why wreck two lives? It would be far better, he told me, for one to assume the guilt of both and go away.

"I agreed to his plan. Hayden led the way into the room where the admiral had been playing. We went up to the table, over which the green shaded light still burned. On it lay two decks of cards, face up. Hayden picked up the nearest deck and shuffled it nervously. His face—God, it was like the snow out there on the mountain!"

"He held out the deck," went on the exile softly; "told me to draw. He said if the card was black he'd clear out. 'But if it's red, David,' he said, 'why—you—got to go.' I held my breath and drew. It was a full minute before I dared look at the card in my hand. Then I turned it over, and it was—red—a measly little red two spot. I don't suppose a man ever realizes all at once what such a moment means. I remember that I was much cooler than Hayden. It was I who had to brace him up. I—I even tried to joke with him. But his face was like death. He hardly spoke at all at first, and then suddenly he became horribly talkative. I left him—talking wildly—I left Reuton. I left the girl to whom I was engaged."

The New Typewriter OLIVER No. 7

WE ANNOUNCE AN AMAZING MODEL—The OLIVER No. 7—a typewriter of superexcellence, with automatic devices and refinements that mark the zenith of typewriter progress. A marvel of beauty, speed and easy action. Typewriting efficiency raised to the nth power.

The OLIVER No. 7 embodies all previous Oliver innovations and new self-acting devices never before seen on any typewriter. A leap in advance which places The Oliver ten years ahead of its time. So smooth in action, so light to the touch, so easy to run, that experts are amazed. A model that means to the typist delightful ease of operation.

A model that means a higher standard of tyepwriting, longer and better service.

The No. 7 is now on exhibit and sale at all Oliver Branches and Agencies throughout the United States.

The new model has more improvements, refinements and new uses than we can even enumerate here.

The "cushioned keyboard" with "anchor keys" and the new automatic features mean less work for the hands, less strain on the eyes, less manual and mental effort.

With all of these masterly mechanical improvements we have made the machine more beautiful and symmetrical. From every standpoint The OLIVER No. 7 attains superlative excellence.

Nothing you could wish for has been omitted. The new devices, refinements, improvements and conveniences found on the No. 7 represent an enormous outlay and vastly increase its value—the price has not been advanced one penny. We shall even continue in force our popular 17-Cents-a-Day purchase plan, the same as on previous Oliver models.

The OLIVER No. 7, equipped with the famous Printype, if desired, without extra charge.

You owe it to yourself to see the new machine before you buy any typewriter at any price. Note its beauty, speed and easy action; its wonderful automatic devices. Try it on any work that is ever done on typewriters. Try it on many kinds of work that no other typewriter will do.

It is a significant fact that the typewriter that introduced such epoch-making innovations as visible writing, visible reading, Printype, etc., should be the first to introduce automatic methods of operation.

GOETHALS HERE; REFUSES TO TALK

Panama Canal Builder Arrives In New York.

RUMOR HE HAS ACCEPTED

This Time the Colonel Will Take the Position of Police Commissioner Before Next September.—Will Confer With President Wilson First.

New York, Feb. 20.—Arriving upon the United Fruit company steamship Metapan, Colonel George W. Goethals, builder of the Panama canal, refused to discuss the possibility of his accepting the police commissionership of New York, but it was learned that Colonel Goethals will become police commissioner by the middle of next September.

Reliable information is that he will take the job whether the police bills fathered by Mayor Mitchel are enacted into law or not. The only thing for final acceptance of the job by Colonel Goethals at present is the question as to President Wilson's attitude. If the president will permit him to retire on pension on Sept. 1, when he is eligible, Colonel Goethals will almost immediately assume his new work here.

Colonel Goethals has said he would not leave the canal provided the federal government needed his services, but it is conceded that the work of organizing the new government on the canal zone and of attending to various details necessary for the smooth running of the big locks will be finished by that time. There will be comparatively little for Colonel Goethals to do after that time.

Only a matter of patriotic duty will detain the colonel on the canal zone after Sept. 1. The president has said that the services of Colonel Goethals will be required indefinitely at Panama. On the other hand, there is no doubt that the job of building up the police department in New York and of trying to break the "system" appeals to a man of the colonel's temperament.

To See Wilson First.

It was regarded as likely that one reason why Colonel Goethals would not discuss the situation was because he wished to confer first with President Wilson and ascertain the president's plans concerning him. It is thought also that the colonel, coming here on matters connected with the federal government, deemed it his duty to go first to Washington and attend to those affairs before seeing Mayor Mitchel or making any further statement regarding the police commissionership.

The reporters greeted the colonel. He smiled and bowed to them, rubbing his hands together and repeating:

"Nothing to say, gentlemen; nothing to say."

From his manner it was evident that he would not talk. It may have been because he felt he was here on federal government business and he should attend to that above all things before he even had a conference with Mayor Mitchel, who had tendered him the city position. It may be that he felt he should confer with President Wilson and ascertain his wishes first of all before making any further statement to the public. Despite the cheerful air of finality about the colonel, insistent reporters fired question after question at him.

MANIAC KILLS 1, WOUNDS 2.

Kansan Said His Family Had Attacked Him.

Hutchinson, Kan., Feb. 20.—In what the police believe was a sudden fit of insanity Abraham Ostatter, a pawnbroker here, shot and killed his mother-in-law, Mrs. Joseph Coahn, and shot his wife, Mrs. Sadie Ostatter, and his father-in-law, Joseph Coahn, inflicting probably fatal wounds.

Ostatter then fell to the floor unconscious. A physician pronounced him suffering from epilepsy. After being revived and placed in the city jail the pawnbroker said his family had attacked him.

The shooting took place at the home of Joseph Coahn, where the Ostatters were living. A suit for divorce brought by Mrs. Ostretter is pending in the district court.

ROW IN THE HOUSE OVER THE HINDOO BILL

To Report Measure Barring People From India.

Washington, Feb. 20.—At the instance of the Wilson administration the house committee on immigration has decided to report a bill barring from the United States all low caste peoples from India, including the Hindoos.

From now on the attention of the committee is to be devoted to the Hindoo exclusion bill. This will be reported and passed in due season, and Pacific coast members will have to be content with this concession on the exclusion problem.

The new order of things in the immigration committee was plainly manifest. Anthony Caminetti of California of the federal commission again appeared. A week ago Commissioner Caminetti roared like a bull in demanding the enactment of a law excluding the Japanese. Mr. Caminetti, however, did not mention the subject today. He devoted his testimony entirely to a discussion of the proposed bill barring the Hindoos and other low caste races.

Representative Johnson of Washington, one of the Pacific coast members who wants the Japanese excluded by law, criticised the committee for its evident determination not to take up measures aimed at Japanese coolies. He was warned by Representative Burnett of Alabama, chairman of the committee, that the committee was dealing with the Hindoo question and that irrelevant matter should not be injected into the discussion. As he took his seat Representative Johnson remarked:

"It is cowardly to use the Hindoo bill to sidetrack bills excluding the Japanese. It is easy enough to exclude Hindoos. All nations are barring them out. The passage of this bill makes Japanese exclusion a remote contingency."

Chairman Burnett rapped for order, but Mr. Johnson's remarks went into the record just the same.

KILLED ENTERING HOME.

Woman Had Forgotten Her Key and Crawled Along Ledge.

New York, Feb. 20.—Mrs. Helen Brocher, sixty years old, was killed by falling from the second floor ledge from which she was trying to reach her apartment at 1750 First avenue, she being without her keys. Her neck was broken in the fall.

Mrs. Brocher, a widow, was the owner of the apartment house. Returning from shopping, she discovered that she had left the keys in her apartment. She told her plight to Mrs. John Dressler, whose apartmen adjoins that occupied by Mrs. Brocher, and insisted upon walking along the narrow stone ledge along the front of the building and thus reaching her own window.

He has been in conference with officials here over the various matters in dispute growing out of the Canadian boundary problems, but his visit to the president was one of courtesy only.

"General Booth had a small company until he marched through the streets carrying a banner. Then the crowds came and were converted. That proves that it does work. The merchants of Binghamton offered the churches one week all the display space that they regularly purchased on Saturday. It was accepted. The churches filled the space and the next Sunday the attendance increased thirty per cent.

"The personal life of the preacher must be right. Publicity will search out inconsistent living, false egotism, insincerity. A real preacher of the gospel will create a sensation. Right with God, he does not care whether they call him a sensationalist or no. He must be absolutely natural. He will then use every means possible to get sane publicity. He will buy books on advertising, watch the display space in magazines and daily papers. He will study efficiency methods. He will adopt the things that get him a hearing. He will know newspaper men. They are alert. They know what the people want. They can teach him sermon topics and human language. Have services that are unusual both in program and place.

"Bill boards help the mind read for impressions. Store windows can be decorated by churches. Apt cuts make truths memorable. In short use every method that succeeds in other lines of life. Dignity is worth nothing except as it adds to efficiency. Banks once refused to advertise lest they then be accounted 'wild-cat.' Now no savings institution can get along without publicity. The church must beware lest her conservatism make her a back number. In short the church must advertise. And when it gets people there it must deliver the goods; that is, a real message from God."

TUTTLE SAYS NEW POSTOFFICE MAY COME WITHIN A YEAR

Congressman Tuttle enthused his audience by a reference to the fact that the new Plainfield postoffice building, for which $125,000 has been appropriated, may be under course of construction within a year, as it stands now sixteenth on the list of those being taken up. He then said:

"In these strenuous Wilson times a member of Congress is seldom justified in leaving his post, but I regard it as one of the functions of a Representative to report home from time to time, and the invitation from the Plainfield Board of Trade is welcomed as an opportunity to meet the representative men of this great city.

"Plainfield is highly typical of the Congressional district which I have the honor to represent. At these tables tonight are gathered men who from one point of view and another are interested in practically every field of human activity and are intimately affected by the industrial, political and social movements of the day.

"I doubt if there is a Congressional district in the United States which includes within its borders a greater diversity of industrial, commercial, financial, agricultural and professional interests than are found in the Fifth New Jersey.

"Perhaps in all our history no administration with the possible exception of Lincoln's, has inherited so many unsettled questions from its predecessors, or has been confronted with so many issues of fundamental importance to the welfare of our people and our progress as a nation as has the present administration.

"In spite of the fact that the Republican party has always been heralded as the party of accomplishments, the party of arduous deeds done, the party of constructive capacity, or initiation, and all that, the fact remains that in all the long line of Republican administrations they have never squarely met and solved the most aggravating and pressing problems which have been the subject of constant controversy and agitation for three or four decades.

"It remained for the political party long reputed to be the party of negation, of opposition, and obstruction, the party which was supposed to be incompetent, inefficient and incapable of concerted action, to meet these issues and under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson to assume the responsibility of enacting the will of the people into the law of the land.

"The most noteworthy of these achievements was the enactment of the Underwood Tariff Law. This bill, drawn in the interest of all the people and free from the influence of the special interests, is perhaps the first bill in the annals of tariff legislation which has met with general approval and approbation, and is the first bill concededly fair to the people at large, the consumer, and the business interests of the country. Our business men are adjusting themselves to the new order, and all signs now point to an era of industrial activity and prosperity.

"Currency reform has been accomplished at last. After a half century of investigation, discussion and procrastination, the old regime failed to dispose of this question, but under the new administration a law has been passed which places the regulation of the banking business with the government for the benefit of the people. From all sides is heard applause for this accomplishment and it is everywhere recognized as a piece of splendid constructive statesmanship.

"Perhaps I should not mention the income tax, knowing the petty annoyances and inconveniences to which some of us have been subjected, but we all admit that it is a fair and proper tax, and when the difficulties of getting it into operation are over I am confident that it will prove popular and will never be abandoned by our people.

"Congress is now wrestling with perhaps the most vexed question of all—that of the proper regulation of trusts and combinations of capital. The bills now pending are but tentative drafts, to be amended and perfected. They are aimed to help not to hinder business, and I confidentially believe that if any anti-trust laws are enacted by this Congress they will be wise and beneficial, and in accord with the best sentiment of our people. The Judiciary Committee is now conducting hearings, and you gentlemen of business experience and large affairs should go to Washington and give the committee the benefit of your practictal and valuable views.

"Many other matters of scarcely less import are demanding and receiving consideration at the hands of the national law-makers, but none so directly affect the individual citizen none are so far reaching and all embracing as the plans for the development and extension of the postal system.

"The postoffice is the great business department of the government. Its revenue and expenditures now approximate $200,000,000 annually or about one-third of the income of the government. It employs some 300,000 persons, carries its mails over 250,000 miles of railroads and a million miles of rural routes. It co-ordinates with the postal system of all foreign countries and is far and away the greatest business institution in the civilized world.

"This great department with its highly trained and efficient organization is today more popular and more responsive to the public than ever in our history. After a long struggle with certain special interests, and in the face of powerful opposition, a parcels post has been established and is a success. It has proved profitable for the government, is a great boon to the people, and will inevitably assist in the reduction of the cost of living by reducing the abnormal expense of moving necessaries of life from the producer to the consumer. The extension of the weight limit and the further reduction of the rates will add to the usefulness of the service and its value to the people.

"The arguments against the parcels post were the arguments against the establishment of the Postal Savings System, but both of these institutions have been established, both are here to stay, and both are successful far beyond the claims of their most enthusiastic champions. It has been demonstrated in the case of the parcels post that the government can give better and cheaper service than the express companies, and serve 20,000 000 of people who are out of the range of these companies.

"In the case of the Postal Savings System, the predictions of its opponents have not been verified. The Savings Banks have not been injured but admitting that their opposition was not well founded have actually endorsed the system. Millions of dollars have been withdrawn from hiding and put into circulation, and all must agree that it is a pronounced success. The government has entered the domain of business and the public is reaping the benefits.

"Gentlemen, the success of these great innovations in the postal service has encouraged the advocates of government ownership of the telephones and the telegraph, and if I mistake not the trend of the times the people will soon demand the 'postalization' of these two great utilities which in the opinion of many authorities, including our Postmaster General, come under the jurisdiction of the Postoffice Department.

"The wisdom and propriety of this further extension of the functions of the government is now discussed throughout the country, but I want to stay to you that you cannot stay the progress of the doctrine of government ownership by the old and hackneyed arguments that the government cannot successfully manage a business and you can no longer point to the postoffice as an argument for your contention.

"The postoffice is one of the most efficient and successful business organizations in the world. It gives nondiscriminating rates as low as any postal service in the world. For one and two cents we carry letters to all our possessions and to several European countries. We carry for about two mills per mail piece our magazines, periodicals and newspapers. We carry the parcels post to the farms with rates as low as five cents, against the twenty-five cents charged by the privately financed express companies.

"We dispatch money, receive savings deposits and in many other ways serve the public. We render all these services as low and lower than any similar service in the world, and in making this comparison we ask no consideration for the higher wages paid the postal employes or the fact that we pay the railways for their services, which is not commonly the case elsewhere.

"It is argued that our National Postoffice is a failure from a business point of view because there have been deficits in the past, and because politics has interfered with the efficiency of the postal personnel. In answer to this I want to say that these 'deficits' represent but a small part of the amount of social service rendered under statutory public policies for which the public are not directly called upon to pay. The franking privilege and the carriage of second class mail for educational purposes at about one-seventh of its cost, if audited as a public service item and paid for at cost, would have shown a surplus at all times since the war, and in 1912 a surplus of more than $60,000,000. As to the inefficiency of the personnel, the records prove that this too common charge, made by the misinformed and grumbling citizen, is not well founded, and that efficieny in the postoffice has kept pace with increased efficiency in other industries.

"The average postal employe today handles nearly two and one-half times the number of mail pieces he handled in 1886 and the quality of his service has more than doubled in the last twenty years. Comparing our postal efficiency with the other nations of the world we are only outranked by Belgium, which is really but a large city with suburban surroundings. These objections therefore fall to the ground and the opponents of the government ownership of the telephones and the telegraphs must find other reasons for their opposition and fall back to the more fundamental objections to a paternalistic system of government.

"I am frank to say that I look with some apprehension to what will follow the taking over by the government of the great utilities of our country, but I feel that the movement in this direction is irresistable and every phase of the question is worthy of the most careful study by thoughtful citizens.

"It is for organizations such as this to lead in moulding public opinion on these great questions and in your consideration of public affairs I commend to your attention the subject of government ownership of telephones, telegraphs and railroads. In my opinion this will soon be the 'paramount issue' in this country."

GEORGE PALMER TO TAKE PLUM AND QUIT

Democratic Chairman Will Resign About March 2.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 20.—George M. Palmer, chairman of the Democratic state committee, announced that he would resign at a meeting of the committee to be held on March 2, and at the same time Governor Glynn said he would urge the appointment of Mr. Palmer as counsel to the workmen's compensation commission, salary $7,500 a year. This information follows several conferences held by the governor and Mr. Palmer in the last two days.

William Church Osborn, who is Governor Glynn's candidate for the office of Democratic state chairman, will be elected at the March 2 meeting, the place of which is still to be determined. After conferring with the governor Chairman Palmer issued this statement:

"I expect to call a meeting of the state committee on March 2. About a year ago I had drawn a resignation as chairman of the committee, for the reason that the work as chairman was so exacting that I did not have the time to give to it and take care of my law practice. Reasons existed why I did not call the meeting of the state committee, hence my resignation was not acted upon. Friends have suggested that I take the position of counsel of the compensation commission. This is work along the line of my profession, which I enjoy, and if I take this position it would need my whole time and I would have no time to give the duties of state chairman, which are now exacting."

The Alaskan Railway, Development Project Of Vast Possibilities

THE bill providing for a government railway in Alaska, which has passed the senate, authorizes the president to raise a sum not exceeding $40,000,000 by the sale of bonds to purchase or construct 1,000 miles of railroad through the territory. There are already about 500 miles of railroad, owned mostly by large mining interests.

The bill places upon the president responsibility for the selection of the route from tidewater to the interior of Alaska and the construction, equipment and operation or leasing of such lines as he may construct or buy to constitute this route. The broadest powers are conferred upon the president.

The bill provides for a redemption fund, into which shall be paid 75 per cent of all moneys derived from the sale of public lands in Alaska or of the coal or mineral contents thereof. Machinery utilized in the construction of the Panama canal is made available for the construction work.

Secretary of the Interior Lane is a warm believer in the Alaskan railway project and declared after the passing of the bill by the senate that it was the greatest encouragement the west had received in many years. Secretary Lane was formerly a member of the interstate commerce commission, and in a recent official memorandum on the ownership and operation of the world's railways prepared by him, he says:

"If we are to open up Alaska we must do so either by subsidizing railroads with land and money grants or by government construction. No other method has been devised in this or any other country.

"The United States has subsidized private construction. Canada has given unprecedented amounts in land and cash and built some lines of its own. England has opened India with government railroads and Africa likewise.

"Nearly all lines of railroad in the Australian colonies have been built by the government. So, too, in the South American republics and Mexico, either the government has built the line outright or given a large bonus for its construction.

"One of the greatest railroad undertakings of the age was the building of the Transsiberian railway by Russia. Its building was carried out both as a brilliant move in military strategy and statesmanship to strengthen Russia's power in Asia and as a means of encouraging settlement in the great Asiatic territory and developing its resources.

"The Siberian road, which was constructed entirely by the government, is 4,272 miles long, and its construction cost $180,019,000, or at the rate of a little less than $28,000 per mile. The Russian government has built in Asia a total of about 7,000 miles of railroads."

James Dietrick, a railroad contractor, familiar with Alaska and recently returned from Siberia, where he completed extensive work for the Russian government, has written a letter to President Wilson, in which he institutes a comparison between Siberia and Alaska and points out the benefits which will accrue to Alaska by the building of the proposed railway as follows:

"Alaska, with a railroad starting from some good harbor and built across the country to the Bering strait, will serve to open it up and develop that vast domain, just like the railroads have been the means of peopling and developing Canada and Siberia.

"Alaska's wheat and other farm products will within a year after the railroad is in operation bring in more revenue to the farmers who will follow the construction of the railroad than the cost of the railroad. The crops will increase, mining and other business proceed with rapid strides, and there is no doubt that the revenues will meet operating, upkeep costs and fixed charges and furnish profits which can be devoted to branch line construction. Many parts of this vast domain will soon require rail connection with the main line."

—There's not a dull, nor an unimportant ad in today's paper. There's not one that may safely be overlooked by any great number of the paper readers.

MANY HOLIDAY EVENTS PLANNED

No Official Celebration, But There Will Be Numerous Functions.

STORES WILL BE CLOSED

Knights of Columbus Will Observe Day with a Banquet—Co. K Fair and Other Entertainments Arranged—Parade in Newark.

Washington's Birthday will be celebrated by Plainfield people in various ways. There will be no official celebration here. Many people have arranged to spend the week-end out of the city, remaining over Monday. The public schools in Plainfield and in the borough will be closed on Monday. The fair of Company K, the local military organization, which opens tonight, will be in full swing on Monday evening. It is expected that the capacity of the armory on West Front street will be taxed to accommodate the crowd that is expected. The Plainfield Public Library will not be open in the morning. In the afternoon, however, the adult circulating department and the reading room will be opened between the hours of 2:00 and 6:00 o'clock. All barber shops will close at noon, and the postoffice will close at 10:00 o'clock.

Members of local patriotic societies will go to Newark on Monday, where they will participate in the big celebration and parade. The Plainfielders who expect to march in the procession will do so as individuals as no logal organization will attend in a body.

At the Plainfield theatre, both afternoon and evening, the play, "Within the Law," will be presented. The company that will give the well known production is said to be an excellent one. The advance sale of seats is said to have been very large.

One of the biggest events scheduled for Washington's Birthday in Plainfield is the patriotic celebration and dinner of Watchung Council, Knights of Columbus, and the councils of Westfield and Somerville. The speakers will be Rev. Joseph A. Mulvy, Judge Mark A. Sullivan, Rev. Bernard M. Bogan, William Steele, Henry W. Evans and Robert Cook, Jr. Dancing will follow the dinner. Music will be furnished by an orchestra.

Motion pictures, illustrating the subject "See America First," will be given at the Y. M. C. A. building on Monday afternoon and evening, under the auspices of the "Current Event Circle" of the First Methodist church of this city. The attendance is expected to be large as the views to be shown are said to be particularly fine.

There will also be excellent moving-pictures shown at Proctor's theatre on West Front street. One of the feature pictures will be that of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, the exponents of the latest modern society dances.

A dance will be given on Monday night in Abrams' Auditorium by the Ladies' Hebrew Benevolent Society. Naylor's orchestra will play for dancing. Mrs. Kalman Rothberg is chairman of the committee of arrangements. Other members of the committee are Mrs. Jacob Sklarew, Mrs. Nat Bernstein, Mrs. Harry Dreier and Mrs. Morris Fiedler.

The Nonpariel Club, a colored organization of this city, will repeat its recent successful minstrel performance on Monday night.

QUARTET CHOIR WILL SING "THE HOLY CITY"

The First Methodist church quartet choir will repeat the oratorio, "The Holy City," by Gaul, at the service on Sunday evening, at the request of a large number of people. The assisting soloist will be Adolph Bock, violinist, of New York. Mr. Bock is a soloist of exceptional ability, having been the soloist for many of the leading symphony orchestras throughout the West. This is his first appearance in the East; he will appear in New York as soloist with some of the leading musical organizations. The program will include all the numbers used at the service given the first Sunday in February and Mr. Bock will play the following: Romance, Reis; Canzonetta, Bach; Evening Song, Beethoven.

SOPHOMORE CLASS OUTING.

The fourth sleighride to Westfield this week was taken by members of the sophomore class of the Borough High School, last night. Twenty students enjoyed the outing. The party had refreshments in Westfield and reached Plainfield again at midnight. The sleighing party was arranged by Miss Letha Hoagland. Other sleighing parties are being contemplated.

NO PAPER MONDAY.

Following its usual custom, the Daily Press will not be published on Monday, Washington's Birthday.

PICTURE BEARS ORIGINAL SIGNATURE

Steel Engraving of Washington Displayed at Schwed Brother's Store.

Draped with American flags, an old time steel engraving of George Washington, in a gold frame, and bearing the signature of that distinguished American is on exhibition in one of the large show windows of Schwed Brothers, the clothiers.

The picture, which is said to be of large value, is owned by Recorder Frederick Hand, of North Plainfield. He received the engraving from the estate of his grandfather, the late Milton F. Cushing, who was the publisher of the old Plainfield Union, the first newspaper published in this city.

Recorder Hand's grandfather was a personal friend of General Washington and is said to have been presented by him with the steel engraving of himself, to which General Washington affixed his signature. Recorder Hand said today that some years ago some one who had seen the picture made him an offer of $200 for it, but he refused to sell. He believes the engraving to be worth far more money than the amount he was then offered.

With the display of the Washington engraving there is also shown in Schwed Brothers' window two old time army muskets, of a pattern that has long been obsolete. They also are the property of Recorder Hand. That borough official has quite a display of old ornaments, consisting of muskets, pistols, swords, cutlasses and other weapons in his place of business on Somerset street, his private office looking, as one views the display hung upon the walls like an antiquarian's shop. The collection is an interesting as well as a valuable exhibit.

PRACTICAL GARDENING DISCUSSED BY C. A. SELDEN

Charles A. Selden, city editor of the New York Evening Post, is a versatile man. He has just brought out through Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Company, his new book called "Everyman's Garden Every Week," in which he shows himself to be as interesting and able a gardener as he is a city editor of a Metropolitan newspaper. He has made his new book one of practical instruction to every one who is interested in gardens, both of the flower and vegetable varieties. It opens with a number of chapters on planning the garden, on the various styles of implements to be used, the varieties of soils, irrigation, etc. Then it continues with chapters devoted to each week of the active season in which the author tells all the practical steps to be taken.

An interesting part of Mr. Selden's work is that he has approached it from the standpoint of economy, and by numerous sets of figures tries to prove that for all those who have a little land a garden is actually a financial saving, while at the same time providing the home with much fresher vegetables and fruits than one can possibly buy in the market. Mr. Selden has himself worked out all of which he writes, and his book is the result of many years of careful experimenting. It should prove of inestimable value not only to amateur gardeners, but even to the most advanced because of its many useful hints from the student's standpoint that are not widely known.

"HEALTH AND HOUSING" WILL BE DISCUSSED

The civics department of the Monday Afternoon Club will discuss "Health and Housing," Monday afternoon, when the club will meet in Hartridge Auditorium at 3 o'clock.

W. L. Kincaid, chairman of the New Jersey Housing Conference, will give an illustrated lecture on "The Situation in the State." Miss Brown, of New York, a graduate of the School of Philanthropy, who has been investigating the local conditions in this line under the auspices of the Charity Organization Society and the Anti-Tuberculosis League, will give a report of what she has found. The meeting will be open to the public.

A. M. HARRIS TO SPEAK.

The Sunday-school of the Temple Baptist church will enjoy a special program at 9:45 o'clock tomorrow morning. There will be extra music and Arthur M. Harris, superintendent of the First Baptist Bible School, will make the address.

ANTI-SUFFRAGE MEETING.

The Plainfield branch of the New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, will meet at the Plainfield Public Library Tuesday morning, March 3, at 10 o'clock.

MISSIONARY AND AID SOCIETY ANNUAL

Warren Chapel's Active Organization Has Successful Year.

Gratifying reports from its officers were read at the annual meeting of the Missionary and Aid Society, held at Warren chapel yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock. In spite of the disagreeable weather there was a large attendance of the members. Officers elected for the ensuing year were Mrs. J. O. McKelvey, president; Mrs. J. W. Gavett, first vice-president; Mrs. Francis Caldwell, second vice-president; Mrs. E. Gibson Smith, secretary; Mrs. John Green, treasurer; Mrs. John Schenck, secretary of literature. The meeting was presided over by Mrs. J. O. McKelvey, president of the society, who was re-elected to that post. The devotional exercises were led by Rev. J. O. McKelvey. He spoke briefly of the fact that this month the people of this country are observing the anniversaries of the birth of two of the country's greatest men, Lincoln and Washington, and pointed out that the greatest life that Christians know of is that of Jesus Christ.

The annual report of the society's treasurer, Mrs. John Green, was most gratifying to the members. While all of the monies have not yet been turned in it was hown that the society sent $21 to the Ministerial Relief Board, $15 to the Freedman Board and had raised towards the mortgage fund of Warren chapel $165 through the recent turkey supper given at the chapel. The balance will, it was said, be divided among foreign and home missionary work. The society has also given $50 towards the purchase of a new piano.

Mrs. E. Gibson Smith, the secretary of the organization, read the nineteeenth annual report. She spoke of the many social features which had been planned and given by the society, of the great success that had attended the all day sewing meeting held by the members last October, of the hot luncheon served, the particularly enjoyable monthly at homes held by the pastor of Warren chapel and his wife, and also of the fine Christmas tree celebration when Santa Claus visited the chapel.

The report of Mrs. Henry Bishop, chairman of the missionary box work, showed that a large box of clothing had been sent by the society to Mrs. E. R. Taylor, at Coal Run, Ohio, last April for the relief of the flood sufferers. A box was also sent containing all new clothing, to the Laura Sunderland School at Concord, North Carolina, the contents of which were valued at $70.55. Mrs. Bishop also spoke of the fine attendance and great interest taken by the members of the society in the sewing meetings which had been held. The society has a membership of 127 and is a very active organization. Mrs. John Schenck, secretary of literature, also reported after which Mrs. R. O. Stewart took the chair and the nominating committee presented its report. Members of the nominating committee were Mrs. George Demarest, Mrs. George Forgerson and Mrs. Frank Causbrook. Mrs. James Goodwin, chairman of the committee on Home Topics, was absent from yesterday's meeting because of illness. Mrs. R. O. Stewart, chairman of the committee on Foreign Topics, spoke on "China."

QUARTET TO GIVE MONTHLY MUSICAL SERVICE

The monthly musical service at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church will be held tomorow afternoon at 5 o'clock, preceded by an organ recital of fifteen minutes. The works to be rendered are Mendelssohn's "O Come Let Us Worship" (95th Psalm), and "Hear My Prayer." The latter closes with the soprano solo, "O for the Wings of a Dove." The regular quartet will sing, led by Dr. E. Mettler Davis, organist and choirmaster.

P. H. S. STRAWRIDE.

Plainfield High School students enjoyed a sleighride to Westfield, last night. They went by the way of South avenue and returned by Mountain avenue, visiting the home of Miss Katherine Sminck, on East Front street, upon their return to Plainfield, where they enjoyed refreshments. In the party were the Misses Elsie Palmer, Helen Crane, Elsie Stevens and Vivian Dunn. Their escorts were Daniel McNamee William Wheelan, William Peacock, Charles Nash and Edward Ryder. The sleighriders were chaperoned by Miss Elizabeth Nash.

DEMOCRATS TO MEET.

Members of the city and county Democratic committees will meet at Democratic headquarters at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

SAYS THAT HE SANG LOVE SONGS

Mrs. Phillip Van Arsdale Institutes An Action for a Divorce.

OBJECTS TO SMOKING

Complainant Says That Her Husband Was Too Intimate With Mrs. Oscar Gottlieb, of New York—Couple Well-known Here.

Claiming that her husband, Phillip VanArsdale, of Scotch Plains, sang love songs to Mrs. Ella Gottlieb, wife of Oscar Gottlieb, a Manhattan jeweler, Mrs. VanArsdale started action in the Supreme Court at Mineola, L. I., today, to obtain an absolute decree of divorce. The VanArsdale's formerly lived at 301 East Front street and recently moved to Scotch Plains near the Bonnie Burn Sanitorium.

Mr. VanArsdale is in Plainfield today and has made no attempt to defend himself in the court proceedings. Mrs. VanArsdale has prepared a large amount of testimony in the matter and bases her principal claim for a separation on her husband's affiliation with the jeweler's wife in a hotel at Jackson's Mills. Among other things she has brought against VanArsdale is the fact that Mrs. Gottlieb spent much time in his company in the reception room of the hotel smoking cigarettes and singing.

The acts of indescretion are alleged to have been committed while Mr. Gottlieb was attending business in New York during a period of time which Mr. and Mrs. VanArsdale spent at the hotel. The applicant for the decree lived here for a number of years and the trouble is said to have been brewing for sometime.

VanArsdale is well-known in this city and is recognized as a talented musician. He has appeared on several different occasions in recitals held here and was at one time a prominent member of the Y. M. C. A. orchestra. For several years he has been taking a law course, but maintained his residence in this city up to a few months ago.

ALL READY FOR OPENING OF COMPANY K FAIR

Elaborate arrangements have been made by the members of Company K, the crack militia organization of Plainfield, for the opening of its big fair which will occur tonight at the armory on West Front street. The large drill room has been artistically decorated for the occasion. It is expected that it will be one of the most successful affairs ever held by the soldiery.

The armory floor has been scraped, refilled, waxed and polished so as to make it ideal for dancing. There will, it is said, be no objectionable forms of dancing seen at the coming fair.

Monday night will be known as ex-members night and former members of the organization will have full charge of the events scheduled for that evening. During the week other local organizations will be invited to attend and take charge of the night's festivities.

ARRANGED PARTY IN HONOR OF HIS BIRTHDAY

Members of Evona Chapel enjoyed a pleasant birthday party given Robert Love, of 44 Duer street, last night. Mr. Love is superintendent of Evona chapel. The evening was passed most pleasantly. The affair was arranged by Mrs. Love. Refreshments were served.

Among the guests present were Mr. and Mrs. William Crawford, of Dunellen; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Casenove, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Pennoyer, Mrs. Carter, Mrs. Lloyd Hampton, Mrs. Ella Peterson, Mrs. J. V. Taylor, the Misses Agnes Van Norden, Grace Taylor, Dorothy Bowden, Irene Matox, Marie Bozenbery and Charles Mattox, Robert Dorman, Howard Bozenbery and Frank Collins.

MISS BRADSHAW GOING ABROAD.

Miss Margaret C. Bradshaw, who was former physical director of the local Y. W. C. A., but who has for the past year been connected with the Camp Fire Movement in New York city, sailed today on the Adriatic, of the White Star Line, with Miss Frances Guilick, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Luther Guilick, of New York. They will spend two months or more visiting places of interest in Great Britain and Europe.

CLAM CHOWDER SUPPER.

The Ladies Auiliary of Grace M. E. church held a clam chowder supper at the church, last night. Supper was served from 6 until 8:30 o'clock. It was attended by many members of the church and netted a substantial sum.

DECTECTIVE FLYNN LANDS OLD THIEF

Colored Youth Guilty of Larceny Committed Two Years Ago.

Charles Hankerson, a colored youth, living at 508 West Third street, was arrested by Detective-Sergeant John Flynn this morning in connection with several petty thefts that have been committed in this city during the past two years. Hankerson confessed to being the one who stripped an automobile owned by John Abbott of storage batteries and other equipment while the car stood in the owner's garage. Flynn located one of the large storage batteries, valued at $75, and produced in court to have Hankerson identify the stolen goods.

The police are of the opinion that the colored youth is the one who looted the interior of the Astor theatre on West Front street two months ago and several dozen Tungsten lamps found in his possession were identified as those missing from the theatre. Hankerson denied stealing the loot he had in his possession and stuck to a story that Mrs. Niedberg, the proprietor's wife, had given them to him before she left Plainfield. The accused was caught selling the globes valued at sixty cents each, for five and ten cents by Detective Sergeant Flynn.

He was arraigned before Judge DeMeza this morning after being subjected to a severe grilling by Detective Flynn and Chief Kiely and the court remanded him until Monday morning for further examination. Although Harry Dreier and others interested in the Astor theatre made a complaint to the police of the robbery at the time it was committed, all refused to appear against the prisoner this morning.

CHINESE ART WORK EXHIBITED

S. S. Carvallo Collections Includes Unusual Blue and Whites.

Chinese porcelains, belonging to S. S. Carvallo, of Plainfield, are now on view at the galleries of the American Art Association, in New York. The showing is preparatory to a sale which will begin on next Tuesday afternoon, February 24. The exhibit includes an unusually extensive assortment of blue and white ware.

The porcelains range from immense blue and white temple jars through every vase form down to tiny snuff bottles. There are double goured shaped bottles, tall cylindrical club shaped vases, decorated with a vigorous presentation of two four clawed dragons rising from tempestuous waves amid the rocks; many ginger jars, with patterns of the wild blooming plum in the celebrated "Hawthorn" style; a beautiful spotted stag under a gnarled pine tree, still in blue and white, upon a globular vase; and evry description of garniture.

There are a five-piece garniture of the K'ang-hsi period, with an entirely floral ornament, and another in which two of the pieces are wine pots with recurved spouts rising in the form of phoenix heads. Two tall cylindrical vases with a giant crackle in the glaze are decorated each with a lonely Fu-lion gazing at an eagle soaring in the sky. There are many blue and white bowls and deep plates.

There are more than a thousand items in the sale, and although the major part of the collection is in blue and white there are also large groups of porcelains in single and in many color decorations. The "Celadons" are numerous. Among them is an early Ming tripod jar, with a teakwood cover and base. The three short feet of the jar have heavy knees, which are modeled as ancient masks or monster heads. The body of the wide jar is modeled beneath the sea green glaze in low relief.

There are single color vases in apple green, a coral red galipot, peach bloom vases and water receptables, clair de lune, mazarine and turquoise blue, mustard yellow, mirror black, and lapis. In addition there are many small snuff bottles in soft paste carved in relief, agate, glass and jade.

ARRANGING FOR EUCHRE.

There wil be a meeting of the joint committees of the Plainfield Nest and Ladies' Nest, Order of Owls, at the residence of James Fleming, on Madison avenue, Monday night, to conclude final arrangements for holding the public euchre which is scheduled for the evening of Friday, February 27.

—The regular meeting of the Borough Board of Education will be held Tuesday evening, February 24.

BACHELOR DANCE DELIGHTFUL AFFAIR

Five Hundred Guests Enjoy Novel Entertainment at Hartridge Auditorium.

Forty-eight of the younger men in society, terming themselves "The Bachelors," acted as hosts, last night, at the Hartridge Auditorium, at the largest dance thus far this season, about five hundred enjoying the evening's entertainment. The guests had opportunity to dance all of the newer steps, and during the evening colored entertainers sang, played and gave a short cabaret show. A few of the couples gave a demonstration of the Maxixe and the Tango for the benefit of the less proficient. Shortly after midnight all of the dancers were given packages of confetti, and the bright lights gave way to multi-colored ones thrown about the room with a spotlight. Scattering of the confetti added much to the picture and to the gayety of the occasion. Supper, or rather breakfast, was served at midnight, the usual, but inviting menu consisting of scrambled eggs, sausage, coffee and sandwiches.

The hosts at the dance were Dudley H. Barrows, Albert D. Beers, DeWitt P. Brokaw, C. Ames Brooks, Wylie Brown, Curtis N. Browne, Clinton Burke, Marsom I. Buttfield, Charles A. Campbell, T. Wardner Carpenter, Robert H. Cox, Howard H. Craig, Gerald Easton, Henry T. Eaton, Alvin W. Fargo, William D. Flanders, James L. Fleming, Owen H. Fleming, R. Sidney Gough, Ralph E. RETRACTS PLEA OF NON VULT

Mrs. Edna Senn Says That She Is Not Guilty of Theft Charge.

HEARING IS POSTPONED

Alleged Accomplice Was Principal Witness Against Edward J. O'Connor Who Was Acquitted of the Charge.

Mrs. Edna Senn, who pleaded non vult to the charge of embezzling a packet containing $500 in cash and checks from the North avenue office of the United States Express Company last November, was arraigned before Judge James C. Connolly in the Circuit Court in Elizabeth yesterday afternoon and retracted her plea of non-vult and entered one of not guilty.

Mrs. Senn's testimony played an important part in the trial of Edward J. O'Connor, who was acquitted of the charge of being an accomplice in the theft in the Circuit Court, Thursday afternoon. In the summing up for O'Connor, his counsel, Mr. Schliemer, characterized Mrs. Senn in terms which were strongly objected to by the counsel for the State, but the woman was unmoved by the attack and her attitude during the trial of O'Connor had been one of indifference.

Her alleged indescretions were brought out vividly by the counsel for the defense at that time and the testimony she offered at the trial was shattered in the cross-examination. The jury in O'Connor's case apparently accepted the defendant's story which was to the effect that he was a victim of the jealously-enraged Mrs. Senn, whom, it was alleged, conspired to ruin and degrade him. She admitted impropriety with O'Connor since her husband left her.

Edward J. O'Connor was released yesterday and arrived in Plainfield last night. In reviewing his side of the case with a Daily Press reporter shortly after he arrived here O'Connor said:

"In reports circulated folowing my arrest and prior to the trial, it was stated that I had a gun in my possession when arrested and got the money from the United Express Company cashier by pointing a revolver at her through a window. I never had a gun in my possession at that time and no gun was taken from me by Chief Kiely when I was searched. I am completely vindicated of the frame-up that was brought against me and the 11 to 1 verdict of the jury has shown this. I never took that money and the public has now been shown that I had nothing to do with the theft.

"I appreciate what my many loyal friends have done for me during my recent ordeal and take this means of expressing my thanks for their help during the long siege."

During the afternoon hours tea will be served, and those who will assist Mrs. Cowperthwaite will be Mrs. Edward H. Ladd, Mrs. Francis LeLacey Hyde, Mrs. Augustus V. Heeley, Mrs. Percy Hamilton Stewart, Mrs. Henry D. Hibbard, Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers, Mrs. William S. Tyler, Mrs. J. M. Charles, Mrs. Walter L. Righter, Mrs. R. S. Rowland, Mrs. F. V. The young women assisting in serving will be the Misses Burke, Hope Ivins, Marguerite Carpenter, Margaret McCutchen, Helen Hyde, Helen and Elsie Harman, Mrs. Henry Brower and Miss Constance Tyler and Miss Helen Halstead, of Brooklyn and Miss Dorothy Cowperthwaite, of Paterson.

Following the tea there will be a dance continuing until 11 o'clock. The clubhouse has been elaborately decorated for the functions, flowers, palms and ferns being banked about the stage and used effectively about the auditorium.

WASHINGTON ROCK ONCE AGAIN

A Personal Interview with EDWARD FITZ RANDOLPH
Told in A New Found Extract from
An Old Journal.

At the January meeting of the Continental Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, Mrs. Edward Finch read a communication of such value to those interested in the story of Washington Rock, that the chapter felt it should be given to a much wider audience. Accordingly, Miss Margaret F. Vail, through whose kindness Mrs. Finch had obtained the narrative, was asked for her consent to its publication, which she willingly gave.

No piece of evidence, which has been brought to light, is more conclusive or puts us more closely in touch with Revolutionary days and the fact—not tradition—which has given Washington Rock its name, than this extract from the journal of Dr. Philip Dakin, written in December, 1830, "at which time," Miss Vail says, by way of explanation, "he came from Columbus, West Jersey, to be married to Sarah Vail, daughter of James and Rachel (Line) Vail, of East Front street, Plainfield.

"After the marriage, which was consummated at the Friends' meeting-house on Peace street (now Watchung avenue), on December 30th, the bridal party remained a few days, visiting places of interest in the neighborhood, and being entertained by relatives and friends.

DR. DAKIN'S JOURNAL.

"This morning (probably December 31st) commenced a wordy contest whether we should go to Rahway to partake of a dinner, to which the day previous, we had been invited, or visit a rock from which in the American Revolution, Washington viewed the British army on the plains below. His guide, who is still living at the foot of the mountain and from whom we might hear the particulars of the adventure with the ancient hero, was a potent argument in opposition to the milk and honey of Rahway. A kind of reverential, patriotic love of country and anything connected with its separation from Great Britain and the establishment of its liberities at length prevailed over the love of roast turkey, and we soon found ourselves by spirited horses, whirled to the door of a venerable quaker, Edward (Fitz) Randolph, who died a few weeks afterward, who was once for a short time the companion of Washington. The old patriarch received us kindly though quite unwell, but became cheerful upon learning our errand and regaled us with tales of yore in which he had been a moderate actor with men so well known in the annals of fame.

"Some American officers applied to him to guide them to the peaks of the adjoining mountains from which they might have the best view of the British on the plains. He said that he did not recollect that Washington, at that time, spoke to him, but stood with his glasses anxiously looking from the rock—which has since been known by the appellation of Washington's Rock—and occasionally speaking rather low to his officers. Greene stood on one hand, Wayne on the other, and several other officers and neighbors nearby. Lord Stirling was fighting the British below and lost three field-pieces in the engagement. A few days afterward he met Washington in Quibbletown (New Market) who then asked him several questions on the state of affairs in the country, etc., etc. So careful was he not to magnify his own importance, that we had to ask him if he had never talked with Washington before he told us of the Quibbletown conversation. The British, he observed, took his brother's team to Amboy and he was prevailed upon by his brother to endeavor to recover it. 'So,' said he, 'I went to Amboy, where the British put me in jail and kept me there three days when they gave me the team which I brought home.' After some further conversation we took leave, very much gratified with our visit."

JACK LONDON, AUTHOR OF

The Abysmal Brute

Life among two fisted men is Jack London's text, and he sticks to it.

He tells of existence and of men as he has found them—from the Bering sea to the south sea islands.

The experiences of his characters have been his own. That is what makes them real men.

Add to his contact with life and his capacity of keeping vivid impressions of it a power to make his readers feel with him and you catch hold of the secret of his great power over his readers.

Few living men equal London in "getting down to facts." He has the ability of making the word fit the scene, of telling a story in a phrase, of revealing a life in a chapter.

When you finish a London story you have lived with the characters. They are not men and women of straw, set up to fill out an idle hour.

They are living, breathing, feeling, suffering, triumphant human beings.

Jack London is only thirty-eight years old. In twenty years he has crowded more real life than most men do in a long lifetime.

He left college to go to the Klondike, and his farewell to book schools was permanent. Since then he has learned his lessons before the mast, in Japan, seal hunting in the arctic, tramping through the United States and Canada and as a war correspondent in the Russo-Japanese war.

Thousands of men and women have heard him lecture and have felt as they heard his strong, sincere voice that they were listening to a real man among men.

In "The Abysmal Brute" he has chosen a novel theme and handled it with an art that holds the reader's interest from first word to "finis."

CO-OPERATIVE FOOD BUYING

This Plan Practiced by Twenty-seven Families Would Effect a Daily Saving of Thirty-seven Cents—Living Expenses Reduced to a Scientific Basis at Hospital For Sick Families.

If twenty-seven families living in one big tenement house buy their food supplies co-operatively the food cost for each family can be reduced from $1.30 to 93 cents a day. This is the result, says Bailey B. Burritt of the New York Association For Improving the Condition of the Poor, of an interesting plan which has been in operation in New York city for more than a year.

The plan is part of an undertaking to care for and cure tuberculous families in the midst of city congestion. Under the auspices of the association a "home hospital" was established in model tenements built by Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Sr. The twenty-seven families included 135 individuals, of whom seventy-nine were tuberculous patients.

In its effort to keep the cost of maintenance as low as possible and for the purpose of experimenting in co-operative buying the association established a store in one of the two room apartments on the ground floor and in another operated a diet kitchen to prepare meals for families in which the mother either is too ill to work or is obliged to be at work daily away from the hospital.

Buy at Wholesale, Sell at Cost.

The store carries constantly a regular supply of staple food products and household supplies, which are purchased at wholesale and sold to the families at cost prices. The families at night inform the superintendent as to the variety and amount of meat and vegetables they need for the next day and the purchase is made the following morning. In this way the families receive the benefit of wholesale buying and there is no waste.

In December visits were made to the better class grocery and delicatessen stores and meat shops in the vicinity of the hospital for the purpose of comparing quotations on meats and foodstuffs that are sold in the hospital store.

It was ascertained that by purchasing and selling at wholesale prices, making no charge for overhead expenses, it would have cost the families an average of 40 per cent more had they continued to purchase from neighboring stores. The establishment of the hospital store, therefore, has effected an actual saving of about 29 per cent.

The average daily living expense for each family in the Home hospital was as follows:

Rent, including heat and light	$0.846
Food	.927
Clothing	.201
Fuel	.045
Lunch	.089
Dues	.068
Medical and surgical supplies	.079
Ice	.017
Car fare	.065
Household supplies	.066
Miscellaneous	.097
Total daily budget	$2.499

Expenses of Family of Five.

This budget of the Home hospital furnishes a fair basis for computing the cost of maintaining a decent home and providing a comfortable living for an average family of five persons—father, mother and three children under fourteen years of age—in a city at the present time. Such a daily budget for a family living in New York outside the hospital and maintaining a standard equal to that in the hospital would be as follows:

Rent and light	$0.65
Food	1.298
Clothing	.433
Fuel	.045
Lunches	.089
Dues	.068
Medicine	.079
Ice	.05
Car fare	.065
Household supplies	.091
Miscellaneous	.097
Total daily budget	$2.965

At this rate the budget for the year would be $1,082.25. These figures indicate that on an income of between $1,050 and $1,150 a family of five can live under ordinary conditions fairly comfortably in New York, and that an income of between $1,100 and $1,200 is probably necessary for an average family to maintain unaided a normal standard of living—that is to say, for a family to live in such a way as to preserve health, mind, character, self respect and proper conditions of family life.

LEGACY FOR A BOY FAN.

Left by Uncle That Lad May Be Trained For Big League.

A clause in the will of John R. McVey, a bachelor, filed for probate at New Castle, Pa., bequeaths $300 for the "baseball education" of the testator's favorite nephew, Daniel McVey, Jr., aged thirteen, provided he is inclined to break into the big baseball league to earn his living.

Young McVey is an enthusiastic "fan" and has shown skill as a pitcher on his school team.

FIGHT OVER WILLIAM RUNKLE'S WILL BEGUN

A strong array of lawyers appeared before Judge William P. Martin in the Orphans' Court, Newark, yesterday, at the opening of the fight over the will of William Runkle, of Orange, who died January 31, leaving an estate value at $2,000,000. Ex-Governor John W. Griggs, counsel for Harry G. Runkle, of this city, who filed a caveat against the will, applied for a temporary executor and named the Fidelity Trust Company.

The motion was opposed by Robert H. McCarter, representing William E. R. Smith, of New York, who was named as executor, but said the Fidelity would be satisfactory should the court make the appointment. The court reserved decision.

Mr. Griggs said the contest was begun to determine whether there was a later will than that offered for probate. He explained that his client believed there was a later will. He added that the document on file was questioned because of faults found in it. He asserted that there was an apparent irregularity in the wording on the first and second pages. He also pointed out that Mr. Smith's name was written over an erasure.

The court decided to hear the testimony of the witnesses to the will two weeks from today. If he finds ground for a thorough examination, he said, he will devote the entire week of March 30 to it.

ANCHOR LODGE HOLDS "LADIES' NIGHT" AFFAIR

Members of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M., entertained their wives and sweethearts at a "ladies night" held last evening in the Masonic lodge rooms, Babock building, on West Front street. Professional talent was present from New York. They gave an entertainment of clever sleight-of-hand tricks and sang several songs. The evening was passed very pleasantly and was said by those who were present to have been one of the best affairs of the kind ever given by Anchor Lodge.

Supper was served the guests following the entertainment. About 200 were present.

TALE OF A LOST MINE.

It Is Somewhat Cloudy as to Its Source and Its Veracity.

This touching tale, for the veracity of which we do not vouch, comes from a source that we do not know, says the Engineering and Mining Journal:

"About 1660 a Spaniard in Peru named Jose Salcedo fell in love with an Indian girl. He proceeded to do a thing almost unheard of in those times—he married her. Out of gratitude her mother revealed to him a vein of silver of unexampled richness. He worked it and drew from it considerable wealth—too much for his happiness, for his opulence excited the cupidity of the viceroy, Count Lemos, who had him charged with high treason, the penalty of which was death and the confiscation of all worldly goods.

"It was in vain that Salcedo demanded permission to appeal to Madrid and offered to pay two ingots of silver daily during the fifteen months that must elapse before a reply was returned. The count refused and hanged him in 1669. But the butcher got small good out of it. The Indians, intent on avenging their friend, destroyed the works of the mine, filled it with water and concealed the entrance so cleverly that it could never be discovered. Neither promises nor threats could extract their secret, which remains so to this very day."

This story is more romantic than those of the Gunsight, Pegleg and several other "lost mines" of the American desert.

MANSFIELD ROBINSON.

Mansfield Robinson, an aged colored resident of Plainfield, who by his genial nature was well liked by those citizens with whom he came into contact, died last night in Muhlenberg Hospital. For a long time he had been employed by the street cleaning department of this city. He lived in the West End. The aged man was obliged to have his legs amputated some time ago, but had been in the hospital only about three weeks at the time of his death.

ARTHUR FORCE SURPRISED.

Arthur Force, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Force, of West Front street, was given a surprise party at his home last night. The affair was arranged by the Misses Mary and Vera Flynn. There were about fifteen guests. Games, dancing and refreshments were features.

Mrs. John Hope, of this city, who has been quite ill, will be admitted to Muhlenberg Hospital next week for treatment.

Mr. and Mrs. Burnett C. Kenyon, of West Eighth street, returned today from Florida, where they have been sojourning for several weeks.

The departure of the cook or maid does not prostrate the lady who knows the efficiency of Press want ads.

PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY, FEBRUARY, 21, 1914.

On Saturdays the editorial columns of the Daily Press are conducted by citizens who are free to express their own views. The contributing editor for today is Mrs. Frederick G. Mead, President of the Plainfield Young Women's Christian Association.

THE WORK OF THE Y. W. C. A.

Seven years ago, a new means of helpfulness was started in our city. Then some questioned the need of a Young Women's Christian Association, but now none do so for the history of the growth of our work has justified the vision which saw the needs of the girls of Plainfield.

Our building is on Front Street just east of Watchung Avenue, and we have there everything to attract the womanly woman—a cordial welcome always, a spirit of friendliness and helpfulness all pervasive, educational and industrial classes, Glee Club, Gym Clubs, Camp Fires and Silver Bay Club, suppers and lunches. There are seven attractive rooms at moderate prices for transients, quiet rest rooms for the noon hour, and a library well stocked with books and magazines. We have an information bureau and often the pleasure of filling the need of employers or employed.

There is now a membership of nearly a thousand, and the close fellowship, the earnest co-operation, the stronger bodies due to the splendid physical training, the good work done in the domestic science and art classes, all prove the advantages we have gained through the opportunities offered. Many homes have been made happier for having had one or several daughters become skillful in household economics because of the trained teachers and lecturers who have been employed as instructors in various departments. A very important branch of our work is especially for the juniors or girls under sixteen, and their clubs are a constant delight to themselves and many less favored children with whom they share their pleasures. The Housekeeping Centre, at 206 East Front street, equipped and supported by a member of the board, is a model apartment, where every duty is made an art, and the daintily uniformed little housewives have the joy of learning how to make perfect homes, under the capable supervision of Miss Beatrice Gardner, a graduate of the Mechanics Institute, Rochester, N. Y.

Our gymnasium, is, as many of you know, a remodeled stable and very inadequate to our needs, being so small that our basketball practice cripples us greatly in competing with neighboring Association teams on a regulation floor and the regular classes can only be for sixteen instead of forty, thus multiplying work and cutting down registration very largely. Miss Wetherell's excellent training, even under great difficulties, is shown by the beautiful work of those girls who avail themselves of her teaching. But we need a new gymnasium that can be used also as an auditorium, and we need it quickly, so that triple the number of young women may be accommodated. No effort has been spared to give the best of everything for body, mind and spirit to our members, so far as our means and facilities allow. But the needs grow and the time of sharing the privilege of contributing to the support of our work has come.

Many cities have found the very best method of securing their annual expenses, to be a budget campaign and the board of our Plainfield Association has therefore decided, after consultation, with a number of men whose advice in the past has been invaluable, to try the experiment and within a week, will endeavor to increase its number of annual subscribers so as to insure six thousand dollars for running expenses during 1914.

For several reasons it has not been thought wise to ask now for a new gymnasium building, greatly as we need it, but in order to have a place for one some day, and that as soon as our friends make it possible, we had to purchase last spring, the house and lot adjoining ours to the last. We have on that property, a mortgage of five thousand two hundred and fifty dollars and a loan, kindly made us by the City National Bank for three thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, which latter, we hope to pay off during our present campaign.

The Young Women's Christian Association is not a charity, it is an investment, and a splendid one, for every dollar given there is a hundred per cent. interest paid in joy, inspirations and efficiency for the girls who use it and the friends who help to make it possible.

MARIE LOUISE MEAD.

IF GEORGE SHOULD RETURN.

Now come we to the natal day of the immortal George
Who crossed the icy Delaware and camped at Valley Forge.
'Twas he who chopped the cherry tree, but scorned to tell a lie,
Because he knew that boys who do get punished when they die.
He was our country's President, the first we ever had
He ruled with such paternity the Nation dubbed him "Dad."
We'll not deny that he was great, despite his ancient style,
But let me say there's kids today that have got him beat a mile.
Suppose to town he came right now, so stately like and meek
I'll guarantee, so scared he'd be, he'd leave within a week.
Just think of how he'd stare amazed, when first his optics lit
Upon the sheet where silent feet make movie actors flit;
When someone played the phonograph you know right well he'd shout
"That man in there can get no air, why don't you let him out?"
Then, if perchance, he sat close by the 'phone bell when it rang
He'd leap upright, in sheer affright, and wonder why the clang.
If someone told him he could chat with friends far, far away
By speaking in that thing like tin, "You're crazy," is all he'd say.
A trolley car would make him stare, a train would make him flee,
A ferryboat would get his "goat," likewise a tango tea!
And, think you, he'd be unconcerned, if right toward him came
A limousine of vivid green and vibrant chugging frame?
Or if we took him out to where an aeroplane should rise
With silken wings and all the things that lift it to the skies.
You bet your life his knees would shake, with fear he'd be quite dumb,
Then in a while, with sickly smile, he'd hoarsely whisper "come,"
"Please lead me to a speedy horse, that I might leave behind
This land of yours with Satan's lures before I lose my mind."
The glory of his name and deeds will live from sea to sea
In storied urn, that all might learn, as long as time shall be,
But while his birth you celebrate, please keep the fact in view
That Washington is now outdone by me as well as you.

SCOTS' CONCERT WAS GREAT SUCCESS

Clan Mackenzie Entertains Large Crowd at Annual Affair.

An appreciative and large audience enjoyed the concert and dance given at the Park Club by Clan Mackenzie, No. 204, Order of Scottish Clans, last night. Chief Allan R. M. Anderson made an address of welcome. Throughout the concert was distinctively Scotch in its character. Lads and lassies dressed in Scotch costumes led the grand march which followed the concert and which continued up to an early hour this morning. The skirl of the pipes, the sweetest music in the world to the ears of those Plainfielders who were either born in Scotland, or who are of Scotch ancestry, was a pleasing feature of the night's entertainment.

Bagpipe selections were given by Roderick Davidson and James Hoey. The tenor solo, "Of A' the Airts the Wind Can Blow," by W. Patterson Campbell, was excellently rendered. Piano and violin selections, with Scotch variations, were given by J. D. Mitchell and Sophuh Lassen and the soprano solos, "The Auld Scotch Sangs" and "The Scottish Blue Bells," were received by the large audience with much applause. Miss Agnes Roy recited "The Fashionable Choir," and also sang a contralto solo, "My Ain Folk." The baritone solo, "The Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond," given by William Holmes, was well received by the audience. Mr. Holmes was in fine voice. He also sang "Mary." The singing of a quartet, composed of Miss Edith Hallett Frank, Miss Agnes Roy, W. Patterson Campbell and William Holmes, was particularly enjoyable. So was the duet of Mr. Campbell and Miss Frank, the singers giving the Scotch song, "How Can Ye Gang, Laddie?" Will Wilson, a comedian sang "The Lad I See Every Night," and another and most amusing song entitled, "When I Came to America." He was one of the hits of the evening.

Dancing, intricate and graceful, was given by the Davidson Highland Troupe, members of which also executed, and in what Scotchmen present declared was a faultless manner, the Highland fling and sword dance. H J. Harold was the accompanist. The concert closed with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" by all of the singers, the audience joining in the old and familiar song.

Edmund L. Mackenzie, one of the standard bearers of Clan Mackenzie, who was to have made an address last night, sent a telegram regretting his inability to be present. Remarks on the order of Scottish Clans were made by Past Chief Robert Murray, who gave a brief history of the organization, which was of much interest to those present.

Officers of Clan Mackenzie are Allan R. M. Anderson, chief; Robin C. Brown, tanist; John Donaldson, past chief; A. Peacock chaplain; Andrew Petrie, treasurer; Robert Baillie, financial secretary; James G. Munro, recording secretary; John Robertson, senior henchman; John Munro, junior henchman; William Munro, seneschal; Arthur Campbell, warden; William Spalding, sentinel; William Doig, piper; E. L. Mackenzie, Robert Murray, John Calder, standard bearers; Robert Murray, Allan R. M. Anderson, Arthur Campbell, trustees.

Ten per cent of the net proceeds of last night's concert and dance will be presented to Clan Mackenzie to the Anti-Tuberculosis League.

ACME SOCIAL CLUB HOLDS ANNUAL BALL

The first annual ball of the Acme Social Club was held last night at Abrams' auditorium. The hall was decorated with American flags. Mrs. Fred Walsh was chairman of the committee of arrangements. Other members were Jack Garetson, Jack Macaulay, Fred Walsh and Peter Doid. Music was furnished by Halforestor's orchestra, of Elizabeth. There is to be a dance held under the direction of Mrs. Fred Walsh every Thursday evening hereafter, when instruction in dancing will be given those who desire same.

BARN DESTROYED BY FIRE.

The upsetting of a lamp in an incubator on the Augustus Moore place at South Stirling, yesterday afternoon, set fire to a barn, causing a loss of about $300. The horses, cows and farming implements were rescued. The Watchung Fire Department was summoned, but arrived at the scene too late to be of any service, except to save the desidence.

MIDGETS PERFORM WELL ON THE BASKETBALL COURT

Playing between the halves of the borough girls' game, in Saengerbund Hall, last night, the teams representing the Somerset F. C. and the Hope Chapel Juniors gave an exciting exhibition of the court game and had the galleries on their feet at all times. The teams are composed of youngsters of the city and borough, none of whom are over a dozen years old.

Townley scored baskets from all positions and was aided by Mantz in raising the score. The city boys could only secure one point during the first period, owing to the close work of the opposing guards. The half ended 12 to 2.

The visitors fared much better in the last half but could not overcome the large lead that had been obtained by the Somersets. Townley was the high score man for the home team, while Snyder and MacAfee played well for the losers.

"CURLY" TAYLOR WAS THE SHINING LIGHT

North Plainfield Youth Making Good on the College Basketball Team.

That "Curly" Taylor, a member of the North Plainfield High School last year, when he took a post-graduate course, is making good in athletics in the Colorado School of Mines, where he is now taking a course in mining engineering, is evident from a newspaper clipping received from the West this morning, by George Townley, a close friend of Taylor's. The clipping in question tells in a vivid way of a basketball game played there recently between the Miners and the Ministers, the latter representing the Denver University, in which the Miners came out victorious by a margin of one point, the final score being 15 to 14.

The game was played before a large and enthusiastic crowd of students and others interested in the athletics of the two schools and Taylor and one Beall starred for the victors. "Curly's" work at forward was a brilliant factor in the victory and he was responsible for a majority of his team's points. Although only a freshman in the Western institution of learning, Taylor has been promoted from the second string ranks to that of first team man and he has been performing regularly for the collegians.

The North Plainfield youth will not confine his attentions to basketball exclusively but will take an active part in baseball this season. Taylor will try out for the first base position and present indications are that he will make the berth this year. While in the borough school Taylor played second base on the High School nine, and was also recognized as a good utility man on the first corner.

INDIVIDUAL PLAY MARKS JUNIOR QUINTET'S DEFEAT

The Sophomore class team, of the Plainfield High School, defeated the Junior class basketeers yesterday afternoon, in the High School gym by the score of 36 to 33. The game was fast and exciting throughout, the Sophomores leading at the end of the first half by the score of 20 to 18. McNamee and Canter starred for the class of 1915, the former getting seven baskets and two fouls and the latter five baskets. Hunter and Fitch starred for 1916, with six and five baskets respectively.

TOWNLEY WILL RETURN TO BORO HIGH SCHOOL

Star Pitcher Expected to Resume Studies in N. P. H. S. at Once.

Baseball stock in the North Plainfield High School circles this morning took a big boost when it was announced that George Townley contemplated returning to the institution for a post-graduate course some time during the next two weeks. Townley has been considering the proposition ever since his return from the Springfield Training School and has just about made up his mind as to the schedule of subjects he will pursue.

Townley was the mainstay of the North Plainfield High School baseball nine on the mound last year, being the only reliable pitcher the boroughites had. The announcement of his return comes as a big surprise to many but is nevertheless the cause of much joy in the borough camp. Captain Smalley has been coaching some coming stars in the pitching art but Townley's experience will do a lot toward bolstering the whole outfit.

CHAMPION ATHLETE WANTS TO BE A COP

Jack Fritts Out for a Vacant Job on the Police Force.

In response to notices sent broadcast by the local police department anouncing the fact that five more men are needed to fill the vacancies on the police force and that a competitive examination will be held as soon as the required number is secured, many applications have been received from "huskies" hailing from North Plainfield, Dunellen, New Market, Mt. Bethel, Martinsville and this city. Although it has been anounced that residents of Plainfield are alone entitled to consideration in the selection of candidates applicants who have been training with the hoe and shovel in outlying districts far remote from the Queen City have made their appearance.

Prominent among the Plainfielders who have secured the necessary endorsement for an examination is Jack Fritts, recognized locally as the premier athlete of this section. Jack made known his intention this morning and should he take the physical examinations his appointment is practically assured. Fritts is a member of the Pastime A. C. of New York, and has appeared in numerous athletic meets about the Metropolitan district during the last two years. Athletic talent is prominent in the Metropolitan force of coppers, and while several of the present bluecoats drawing pay in this city are recognized as good runners and excellent weight throwers there are none of Fritts' calibre.

Fritts is fleet of foot and herculean of strength and as a thief catcher he would probably make a big hit.

SPORTSMEN'S SHOW.

New York, Feb. 21.—New York's annual Sportsmen's Show opens in Madison Square Garden tonight and will continue through the coming week. For the purposes of the exhibition the big amphitheatre has been given its customary elaborate setting of outdoor life, hunting, fishing and shooting camps and trophies of the chase. Cages of live game birds and animals, a great swimming pool for the acquatic sports, a tank for the fly casting competitions, and rifle ranges for the marksmanship competitions are features of the show. More elaborate than in any previous years the program prepared for the trap-shooting and water sports, in which prominent amateur and professional marksmen, swimmers and fancy divers from all over the country will compete.

LOCAL BOY WILL FEATURE.

Raymond Dutcher, a graduate of the Plainfield High School in the class of 1904, and the present intercollegiate club swinging champion, will appear in the Dental Clinic's benefit to be held in the Elizabeth Armory tonight. He is one of the cleverest amateur club swingers in the country and is at present a student in New York University.

ABRAMS INJURED.

At the close of the interscholastic contest last Thursday afternoon, it was found that Hyman Abrams, guard of the borough team, had dislocated his nose. It was probably done in one of the many scrimmages that Abrams encountered during the game. The bone was set yesterday by Dr. Marcus L. Clawson.

PRELIMINARY GAME.

Prior to the interscholastic league game on the Y. M. C. A. court, Monday afternoon, the Y. M. C. A. quintet will meet a group of North Plainfield and Plainfield High School representatives in a match game.

NO PAPER MONDAY.

Following its usual custom, the Daily Press will not be published on Monday, Washington's Birthday.

ROYAL

The world-wide standard

Baking Powder

Absolutely Pure

Royal Baking Powder is the embodiment of all the excellence possible to be attained in the highest class baking powder and its use is more economical than other leavening agents, because of the superlative quality and absolute wholesomeness of the food it makes.

Cheap baking powders, containing alum, are frequently distributed from door to door, or advertised as pure and wholesome. Such mixtures are not desirable for food ingredients. Most persons have learned to their sorrow that a low price does not always mean economy. This is especially so in a food article. No baking powder can properly be substituted for Royal.

Read the ingredient clause upon the label. If it does not show "Cream of Tartar," don't buy the powder.

JUST A LITTLE "KID" WITH THE WEATHER MAN

IN THE SPORTING SPOTLIGHT

DOPE NOW FAVORS THE BOROUGHITES

An early Resume Shows That N. P. H. S. Has the Best Material for Next Year.

PEACOCK'S THIRD YEAR

Only Two Veterans Left in the Queen City High School Team's Fold While North Plainfield Has a Full Five, Including Substitutes.

With the finish of the Interscholastic League title race those interested in the ataletics of the two schools are beginning to total up the number of veterans that will be left for a nucleus in the two institutions next season. It is a well known fact that veterans left over from the year previous go a long way toward whipping a pennant winning aggregation into shape and North Plainfield's success this year is largely due to the fact that several stars remained from last season. Plainfield had a team made up almost exclusively of new material this season and the team failed to repeat the winning stunt of 1913.

When the championship game was staged in 1913, Good played centre, Johnny Heron and "Skipper" Woodhull performed at forward and Peacock and Brynairski played guards. This season Peacock was the only one of this group still in the game. When North Plainfield played last year Dunning played centre; Townley and Burner, guards, and Taylor and Van Mater, forwards. Of this quintet all but Taylor and Townley were in Thursday's game.

Out of those who took part in the third and deciding game in the Y. M. C. A., Thursday, Van Mater and Abrams will be the only two remaining in the North Plainfield fold next year, while Plainfield will have Peacock, Gavett and McNamee left. Out of the N. P. H. S. duo and the Plainfield three, two captains will have to be elected and this task will probably be accomplished in the near future.

Included in North Plainfield's string of substitutes are many stars, among whom are Townley, Newkirk and Conroy. This trio is competent to fill the vacancies left by Love, Burner and Dunning. Next year's team will therefore probably be composed of Abrams and Newkirk at guards, Conroy in centre, and Townley and Van Mater in forwards.

Plainfield is not so fortunate in the substitute list, however, and Wheelan, McNamee and Hirsh, the second squad, is a practically unheard of trio. Unless some new material makes its appearance in Plainfield High School it now looks as though that institution would be sorely in need of basketball players by the time next season blows around.

VICTORIOUS ATHLETES WILL BE BANQUETED BY TEACHERS

A testimonial dinner will be given by the members of the faculty of the North Plainfield High School to the basketball players and coach who brought the interscholastic victory to the borough school last Thursday afternoon, the celebration being arranged for next Thursday night. It will be held in the Somerset Street School and an appropriate program of entertainment is being planned for the occasion.

Coach Paul Collier will be the guest at the dinner and several of the other members of the school interested in the ataletics of the institution will be invited.

Queries, Comment and Answers

Sporting Editor:

Query—Is it compulsory for drivers of horses to make their animals stand on the right hand side of the street in this weather?—L. G. T.

Answer—Owing to the fact that horses and other animals standing on the right hand side of the street would in some cases be facing the wind the police of the business section have been notified to use some discretion in exercising this law. It is considered a hardship to enforce the law which would make drivers to tie their horses so that the animals will be facing the wind.

Sporting Editor:

Query—Is the Knights of Columbus Hall on West Front street open to the public for entertainments, etc.?—J. S. E.

Answer—A permit to use the Columbus Club auditorium can be secured by applying to one of the officers of the orgapization. It is not a public hall, however.

Sporting Editor:

Query—Who was mayor of Plainfield at the time the Charter Day exhibit was held? What did this event commemorate and when was it conducted?—K. H.

Answer—The Charter Day celebration was arranged to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the granting of a charter to Plainfield and was held in 1909. Charles J. Fisk was then mayor.

Sporting Editor:

Query—When will the Vanderbilt Cup races be held this year—C. S. W.

Answer—They were originally scheduled for this afternoon, but it is probable that they will be postponed on account of weather conditions.

PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL WILL PLAY THE Y. M. C. A.

Plainfield High School basketball players will be the attraction on the Y. M. C. A. court tonight, in the regular week-end engagement of the association quintet, the High School and Y. M. C. A. boys meeting for the first time this season.

The Y. M. C. A. lineup will be shaken up to some extent tonight Lidgate going to centre in place of Gavett, who will be unable to be on hand. This move will probably strengthen the home team to some extent and the schoolboys will have their hands full in trimming the rival clan. The teams will probably line-up as follows:

P. H. S.	Y. M. C. A.
Hetfield, forward	Moulton
Snyder, forward	McNamee
Gavett, centre	Lidgate
Peacock, guard	Glover
Rosenson, guard	Farmer

HOPE CHAPEL TO ENTERTAIN TEAM THAT BEAT IT TWICE

Hope Chapel will lineup against the Roselle Park High School Alumni basketball team in the Fourth street gymnasium tonight and the second team will furnish the preliminary attraction with the Mt. Pleasant quintet as opponents. The Roselle team defeated the locals in two straight encounters a couple of years ago and the Plainfielders anticipate a hard struggle tonight.

The preliminary game will be waged against a pair of fast junior rivals and should prove an excellent appetizer for the big affair. The teams in the main attraction will lineup as follows:

HOPE CHAPEL.	ROSELLE.
J. Heron, forward	Finkle
T. Heron, forward	Black
Doig, centre	Montgomery
Snyder, guard	Peas
Wardrop, guard	Broom

TOOK A REST.

The game arranged with the Dickinson High School quintet, of Jersey City, by the Plainfield High School management for yesterday afternoon was postponed. This was done in order to give the Plainfielders a rest after the hard game of Thursday.

is always a welcome treat to the home folks. The ad-reading women does not find the problem hard.

INTERSCHOLASTIC LEAGUE GAME FOR THE HOLIDAY

Hostilities will be resumed in the Interscholastic Basketball League on the Y. M. C. A. court, Monday afternoon, when the Plainfield High School and Leal School quintets come together. The teams met two weeks ago and the High School youths won handily.

The lineups:

PLAINFIELD.	LEAL'S.
Hetfield, forward	Stewart
Snyder, forward	Dickerson
Gavett, centre	Vandeventer
Peacock, guard	Schneider
Rosenson, guard	Harrington

ANNUAL FEMININE CONTEST AT THE TRENTON Y. W. C. A.

The annual basketball game between the Plainfield and Trenton Y. W. C. A. teams will be played on the Capitol city gymnasium court tonight, the local team making the trip to that city in charge of their physical director and coach.

It is understood that the association quintet will be shaken up to some extent prior to the game tonight, Miss Clara Smith going in at guard in order to strengthen the locals.

The teams will lineup as follows:

PLAINFIELD.	TRENTON.
Miss George, forward	Miss Hayes
Miss Steiner, forward	Miss Ryan
Miss Doughty, centre	Miss Welle
Miss Mair, guard	Miss Schafer
Miss Smith, guard	Miss Jones

GAME POSTPONED.

The game scheduled to be played with the Scotch Plains Parish House and Hope Chapel basketball teams as opponents Monday night, in the Fourth street gym, has been postponed owing to the fact that it has been impossible to secure the gym for the occasion.

LOCALS HAVE ENTERED.

It is understood that a number of the Plainfield High School track team men have entered in the Dickinson High School's annual field and track meet, which will be held in Jersey City, Monday night.

PRELIMINARY GAME.

The Netherwood A. C. basketball team will oppose the Y. M. C. A. seconds in the preliminary attraction in the Y. M. C. A. gym tonight, prior to the Y. M. C. A. and Plainfield High School clash.

MARTIN EXPLAINS FAMOUS "BEANING"

Baseball Scribes Have Failed to Diagnose the Case According to Victim.

Many and varied have been the opinions of ball player scribes as to the cause of Jack Martin's "beaning" on the Hilltop at the hands of Walter Johnson, the American League speed king, but never yet has a writer diagnozed the case, according to Jack. On his first year out Martin wore a New York American League uniform and when he faced Walter Johnson his main ambition was to crack out a hit at the expense of the famous pitcher.

According to Christie Mathewson, Martin was so anxious to get a hit that he stood too close to the plate and caught the whizzing pill on the ear. Other writers hailing from New York and Boston have assigned numerous causes for the stoppage of the pellet by the Plainfield youth, but they all have yet to land on the exact cause.

After reading a recent story on the case yesterday, Martin gave out to a Daily Press reporter for the first time the exact cause for his injury and subsequent visit to the hospital. According to Martin, Johnson had two and three on him at the time and the Plainfielder was looking for a curve ball. Johnson's cunning was brought into play at this time, however, and Jack was completely baffled when the husky heaver sent a straight ball over, but instead of taking the route via the plate the pellet traveled straight for Martin's dome and the local youth waited too long for the break which was not forthcoming. He was accordingly struck a wicked blow in the head and was out of the game for fifteen days.

"Sportdom Tips"

A local authority claims that there were 500 witnesses at that interscholastic match Taursday afternoon.

Query—What became of the money from the other 220?

There was just seventy dollars taken in at the door from the 500 witnesses at two bits per head.

What's the matter with giving Paul Collier a little credit for the showing his understudies made? The power behind the throne had a whole lot to do with bringing home the Canadian bacon.

You have to hand it to those in charge of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium for the methods they employed in handling that angry mob of basketball-mad enthusiasts. The fire ordinance was adhered to in every particular.

What's the matter with renewing hostilities in that feminine interscholastic league while the rivalry between the two factions is at a high pitch?

Our friend sporting the name with the French accent has discovered a new channel of publicity for "Ruby Robert" Fitzsimmons. The lanky pug has now cut into the news columns with an axe, cutting a chip off the end of one of his fingers.

"USTERWUS" PLAYERS NEVER HAD A CHANCE

Teddy Roosevelt's Bull Moose Suffragists Fail in Attempt to "Come-Back."

A sextet of Teddy Roosevelt's feminine cohorts, basketball performers in years gone by, appeared on the Saengerbund Hall court as opponents to the North Plainfield High School girl's team, last night, and were properly squelched by a top heavy margin. Whether the assumed title, that of "T. R.'s," means Teddy Roosevelt, The Remains, Tempting Relics, or represented a newly unearthed trade-mark for some patent medicine is still a mystery for the Bull Moosers came out far in the rear of their school-girl rivals and for that reason refused to disclose their real identity although a majority of the players on the team were seeking enlightenment on the mystery themselves.

The mystifying title and sextet of stars that sported it had no terrors for the boroughites, however, and the team of "usterwas" stars never had a look-in after the first few minutes of play. Although the "Tiers" tallied the first field goal on a well directed shot from a difficult angle of the floor by one of the forwards, never after that were they in the lead for Miss Burtis and Miss Spencer, the North Plainfield team's scoring machine, soon got its wheels to working and dropped one after another through the net.

For a team of players who had never performed together as a unit prior to last night and considering the fact that several of the participants have not played before this season, the team did remarkably well against the formidable Canadians. It was a case of "too much guarding" on the part of Miss Clara Smith that held the visitors' score down to the low water level and had it not been for the clever work along the lines of goal prevention by this star the score would no doubt have been much closer. Time and again Miss Smith warded off bombardments on her team's goal and held her phenomenal opponent to one of the lowest scores of her career as a basketball player. In the second half the Bull Moose team had to be shaken up to some extent, Miss Ida Hummel retiring to assume the role of official in an effort to "get even" for some astounding findings in the first period and Miss Alice Mehl taking her place at guard. On the offense Miss Burtis and Miss Spencer did some excellent work for the boroughites, while the remaining trio all shone in their respective departments. For the losing side, Miss Helen Hummel and Miss Jessie Stewart were the brilliant performers and although both were held to low scores many "hard luck" goals were recorded during the issue. Miss Ida Hummel starred at guard while she was in the game and her retirement materially weakened the aggregation in the second period, which was played without the line restrictions.

NEWS OF INTEREST IN THE PLAINFIELD BUILDING WORLD

SLACK WORK DUE TO MINIATURE BLIZZARD

How One Contractor Keeps Men Busy—One Permit in the City.

Another poor week has been experienced by those who are interested in the building trades in and around Plainfield. Owing to the great fall of snow all the buildings that have been partially erected have been temporarily abandoned by the builders because of the inability to advance the work without monetary loss.

There are a few houses that have been far enough constructed to permit carpenters to go ahead with the work of decorating the interior. Very few of the contractors in town have had as much foresight in the matter of keeping their men employed during the winter months as a contractor of Dunellen has used. He has accepted a number of contracts which have been awarded to him, and during the mild weather has had his entire force busy erecting the exterior shells of houses and completing them so that the lathers and plasterers could do their work without danger of freezing. At the present time this contractor has had enough houses far enough along in the work of plastering so that he can start his men at the interior decorative work and as soon as one is finished another will be ready for them to commence. In this way he expects to be able to keep his entire force busy for two months at least. He has a steady employment list of fourteen men and rather than have them lose time in the winter months he has built a building in which during the slack times, his entire force is set to work making trim and doing mill work.

Another contractor who is considered as one of the best in this section, said that he would not accept a contract and in fact would not try to land a contract during the winter months because of the competition and the low bids that are put in by others who will take the work for less than the cost, as it proves before the contract is finished. Another man said that he would not accept a contract from a large architectural concern, who have made drawings and are supervising the erection of a number of houses around town, unless the amount of the contract was just twice the value of the work. When asked about this he said that this concern had a habit of drawing out their work, with a little change here and there so that by the time a building was completed it was about time to go all over the interior and retrim and decorate it. The reasons advanced by this contractor were, that owing to atmospheric conditions and changes in weather, houses that are slow in the completion usually result in no profits, or a loss.

This past week's prospects were a little better than last week's as there was one permit issued by Building Inspector T. O. Doane. This permit was issued to Carrie Voorhees, for an addition to the house at 109 Randolph road, to cost about $1,000. Elmer Hummer, carpenter, and Frank T. McInerney, mason.

TWO FAMILY HOUSE ON BERGEN ST. TO COST $3,500

Alfonso Ciocci, of 943 West Third will soon erect a two and a half story hollow tile dwelling on Bergen street. The building, which is to have a frontage of 24 feet and a depth of 36 feet 6 inches, will cost about $3,500. The exterior walls will be finished with a coating of light gray stucco and the roof covered with slate.

The building when completed will be used as a two-family dwelling. Across the front of the building a wide veranda will be built, supported by four concrete piers to the level of the hand rail and balustrade. On the top of these piers four round columns of concrete will be placed to support the flooring of the balcony. The flooring of both porches will be of re-inforced concrete and hollow tile. The steps leading to the veranda will be of solid concrete construction.

Access to both apartments will be gained through one ground floor subdivided in the vestibule. The first floor space will be occupied by a vestibule, reception hall, parlor, kitchen, bedroom, large pantry and toilet. All the rooms on this floor will be finished with yellow pine floorings and trimmed with craftsman type trimmings of cypress material, finished natural and varnished. The kitchen will be equipped with white enameled fixtures, laundry trays and gas and coal ranges. The second floor will have a parlor, bedroom, kitchen, pantry, dining-room, private hallway and bathroom, with trim like that of the first floor. Both the first and second story parlors and the vestibule on the first floor will be finished with an ornamental plaster ceiling and cornice.

The house will be piped with gas, and wired for electric lights. In addition to the electric lighting system a hot air system of heating will be installed.

George H. Fisher, Jr., drew the plans for the proposed building, upon which the work of erecting will be started as soon as the weather conditions become more favorable.

BOOM CONTINUES AT SCOTCH PLAINS AND FANWOOD BORO

As a forerunner of a boom in Scotch Plains, the newly elected township councilman, William Ward, has just awarded a contract to Anthony Albert, the Scotch Plains contractor, for the erection of a two and a half story dwelling on property owned by himself on Grand street. In addition to the proposed building, at the present time a nice cosy bungalow type building has about been completed for a Chatham, New Jersey, man, on Mountain avenue. It is reported that all through the vicinity of Mountainside and Glenside sections of the country just north of the town that several buildings are being erected and will be erected during the coming summer.

At the present time there are more activities in the building line in both Fanwood and Scotch Plains than there has been for a number of years past, and it is claimed the work that has been done during the past year is only a starter for these two growing communities.

TEN SMALL HOUSES TO BE DESIGNED BY W. H. CLUM

Chris Schwartz, president of the Equator Land Improvement Company, of Dunellen, has awarded W. H. Clum, the local architect, the contract for drawing a set of plans from which ten houses will be built in the spring. The buildings will be in the Equator Park section, west of Grove street, Dunellen. These houses will be of the workman shack type, will each have six rooms, have a frontage of eighteen feet and a depth of twenty-six feet, and will each cost about $1,500. Each building will be divided into two apartments with three rooms. The interior finish of these houses will be very plain and the materials used in the trimming will be mostly cypress.

Work will be commenced on the erection of the houses as soon as the weather conditions improve. When once started the work will be pushed in hope of having the dwellings completed so that they can be placed on the market for the summer trade.

ANOTHER $4,500 BUNGALOW TO BE BUILT IN DUNELLEN

William Castner, of Jackson avenue, Dunellen, is having a bungalow type frame dwelling of one and a half stories high, erected on his property on Front street, just east of Jackson avenue, Dunellen. It is estimated that the dwelling will cost about $4,500. It will contain seven rooms and bath, three of which will be finished with light colored cement stucco. A large veranda will be built across the entire front of the structure, triangular in shape. Hot water heating system, open plumbing, white enameled fixtures in both kitchen and bath-room and high-grade laundry trays are in the specifications. The walls and gables will be stucco finished and the roof will be of light gray asbestos shingle.

W. H. Clum, the architect of Plainfield, drew the plans for the building, for which the cellar foundations have already been dug. Anthony Albert, of Scotch Plains, has been awarded the general contract for the erection of the building. Work will be started on the structure as soon as weather conditions become more favorable.

$5,000 HOUSE UNDER WAY ON SHERMAN AVE. EXTENSION

A two and a half story, eight-room frame dwelling is being erected for Mrs. Anna Scriven, on her property on Sherman avenue just outside the city limits. The house which will have 24 feet front and a depth of 40 feet will cost not less than $5,000. The exterior walls will be faced with red cedar shingles stained a light color. Every room will have hardwood floors and detailed trimmings of a high quality material. A hot water heating system will be installed, as will gas and electricity for cooking and lighting purposes. Up-to-date open plumbing will be installed in the house and in the bath-room as well as the kitchen white enameled fixtures will be used.

The excavation for the cellar foundation has been made and work on the erection of the frame work has been commenced.

W. H. Clum drew the plans for the building and Walter Scriven, a son of the owner, is supervising the erection of the building. It is expected that the house will be ready for occupancy by May 1.

WM. H. FORRISTEL TO HAVE NEW HOME ON BELLEVIEW AVE.

William H. Forristel is receiving estimates for the erection of a two and a half story eight-room frame dwelling, which will be erected on his property on Belleview avenue, in the near future, at a cost of about $5,000. The exterior walls below the belting will be faced with weatherboards while above that section the walls, gables and roof will be finished in shingles. Hot water heat and all modern type open plumbing is called for in the specifications, as are all white enameled fixtures for both the bath-room and the kitchen. The interior finished trim and decorations have not been decided upon by the owner as yet.

Work will begin on the erection of the proposed building about March 1, and if the weather is favorable before that time. W. H. Clum, the local architect, drew the plans for the building.

ALFONSO CIOCI WILL BUILD $3,500 HOUSE IN WEST END

Alfonso Ciocci, of West Third street, plans to erect a hollow tile, white stucco finished, two and a half story dwelling for a fellow countryman in the west end section of the city. The house will have a frontage of 28 feet and a depth of 34 feet and will cost its owner about $3,400. Across the front and at one side of the proposed building a ten feet wide veranda will be erected, supported by eight square columns of tile and concrete, built to the level of the handrail. The roof of the porch will be supported by eight round columns, stained a straw color. At the rear of the house a smaller porch will be built of solid concrete and tile construction.

The first floor of the building will contain a parlor, dining-room, kitchen, large pantry and toilet. All the rooms will be finished with yellow pine floors and a detail trim of cypress which will be filled and finished naturally.

There will be three bed-rooms and a sewing room on the second floor, which will also be trimmed with a detail of cypress, finished natural and will have yellow pine floors.

The work of building will be commenced as soon as the weather permits. Mr. Ciocci, who is a contractor, will supervise the erection of the dwelling and will do the masonry and plastering work himself. George H. Fisher, Jr., the local architect, drew the plans for the building.

EXTENSIVE ALTERATIONS PLANNED TO COST $4,000

Extensive alterations and repairs will in the near future be made to the building owned and occupied by Mrs. Maria Giovanni, at 212 Richmond street. The alterations will include the remodeling of the entire interior of the building and will cost its owner not less than $4,000.

The building with its additions will be of frame construction, two and a half stories in heighth. The walls of one side will be faced with red cedar weatherboards which will be painted a light color while the other side which is near the walls of another building will be faced with approved sheet metal, thereby reducing fire possibilities. The gables of the building will be sheathed with red cedar shingles which will be left natural, while the roof will be finished with a covering of dark red asbestos shingles.

On the first floor there will be two stores at the front. The store which will be of a smaller type will be connected only with the street. The store fronts will be of cypress, each store being equipped with one large plate glass window, with smaller lights of pressed prism glass. The finish of the interior of the two stores will be the typical business house finish, white walls and ceilings, cypress trim, finished natural, and North Carolina yellow pine floorings.

At the front of the building four large square piers will be erected as supports to the floor beams of the second story rooms.

The second floor is to be occupied by two families. Each apartment will have five rooms and a toilet, namely a parlor, dining-room, kitchen and two bed-rooms. Each of the two parlors on this floor will be finished with large bow windows. The kitchens of both the apartments on the second floor as well as the apartment on the first floor will be equipped with Richardson ranges, alberene stone laundry trays and up-to-date sanitary plumbing.

At the rear and across the entire width of the building a large balcony and porch will be erected. The porch being at the rear of the first floor apartment while the balcony will be built on the level with the second story flooring. Access to the balcony from the ground will be gained by a long flight of steps.

All the rooms of the three apartments will be finished with white walls and ceiling, North Carolina yellow pine floors and will be trimmed with a detail of cypress material which will be finished naturally.

Estimates are now being received by the owner for the proposed alterations and extensions and it is expected that the work will be commenced as soon as the weather becomes more favorable for the continuing of the building trades. George H. Fisher, Jr., the local architect, made the plans for the remodeling and alterations.

$1,000 ADDITION TO CARRIE VOORHEES' HOUSE

Building Inspector Doane has issued a permit to Carrie Voorhees, of Martinsville for extensive alterations and an addition to the east side of the dwelling at 109 Randolph road. The addition, which will be eight by fourteen feet, and two and a half stories in heighth, will cost not less than $1,000. The foundation will be of eight inch concrete and brick walls. The addition will be of frame work, and when finished will be faced with red cedar weatherboards which will be painted a light color, to match the rest of the dwelling. A peaked roof covered with slate, with tin gutters and wooden cornices will cover the extension.

Elmer Hummer, of the firm of Wright & Hummer, the local contractors, will do the carpenter work and he drew the plans. Frank T. McInerney will do the masonry and plastering work.

The room on the first floor will be trimmed with a detailed craftsman type trim of chestnut, stained dark oak and the second floor will be finished in whitewood, enameled white. White walls and ceilings will be left in the rooms until the plaster has a chance to thoroughly dry out.

IF BACK HURTS BEGIN ON SALTS

Flush Your Kidneys Occasionally If You Eat Meat Regularly.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.—Adv.

The New Typewriter OLIVER No. 7

WE ANNOUNCE AN AMAZING MODEL—The OLIVER No. 7—a typewriter of superexcellence, with automatic devices and refinements that mark the zenith of typewriter progress. A marvel of beauty, speed and easy action. Typewriting efficiency raised to the nth power.

The OLIVER No. 7 embodies all previous Oliver innovations and new self-acting devices never before seen on any typewriter. A leap in advance which places The Oliver ten years ahead of its time. So smooth in action, so light to the touch, so easy to run, that experts are amazed. A model that means to the typist delightful ease of operation.

A model that means a higher standard of tyepwriting, longer and better service.

The No. 7 is now on exhibit and sale at all Oliver Branches and Agencies throughout the United States.

The new model has more improvements, refinements and new uses than we can even enumerate here.

The "cushioned keyboard" with "anchor keys" and the new automatic features mean less work for the hands, less strain on the eyes, less manual and mental effort.

With all of these masterly mechanical improvements we have made the machine more beautiful and symmetrical. From every standpoint The OLIVER No. 7 attains superlative excellence.

Nothing you could wish for has been omitted. The new devices, refinements improvements and conveniences found on the No. 7 represent an enormous outlay and vastly increase its value—the price has not been advanced one penny. We shall even continue in force our popular 7-Cents-a-Day purchase plan, the same as on previous Oliver models.

The OLIVER No. 7, equipped with the famous Printype, if desired, without extra charge.

You owe it to yourself to see the new machine before you buy any typewriter at any price. Note its beauty, speed and easy action, its wonderful automatic devices. Try it on any work that is ever done on typewriters. Try it on many kinds of work that no other typewriter will do.

It is a significant fact that the typewriter that introduced such epoch-making innovations as visible writing, visible reading, Printype, etc., should be the first to introduce automatic methods of operation.

DAINTY YOKES FOR THE BABY'S FIRST DRESSES

Baby's clothes depend on their dainty freshness rather than on elaborate trimmings to make them attractive, for it is now considered poor taste as well as unhygienic for the baby to be dressed in anything but the simplest of garments. The little dresses should be of the finest of batiste, nainsook or handkerchief linen, made as simply as possible and trimmed only with a bit of narrow Valenciennes lace or dainty hand embroidery. The two little yokes in transfer pattern 14538, can be used on any plain dresses and the fine scalloping makes a pretty neck finish without seams to irritate the skin. The first design gives the effect of an applied yoke, and in fact may be used as such, or the scalloping on the edge may be omitted if one likes. This is finished with a round neck. The second yoke is finished with dutch neck and the dainty sprays may be worked in either solid or eyelet embroidery. This may be used either on a first dress or on a kimona dress for a child of from six months to two years old.

Hot iron, transfer pattern 14538, can be supplied on receipt of price, 10 cents. The Embroidery Book, illustrating a complete assortment of designs for embroidering infant's and children's clothes as well as household linens will be sent on receipt of mailing price, 8 cents.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

A separate skirt which could be made by a novice in an hour or two is shown in this design.

One of the most important things for the home sewer is care in cutting and basting. Many a queer little twist and unexplained puckering of seams will be avoided if short, firm basting stitches are taken with a short needle; with the long, loose stitch the seam is often pulled and stretched when being stitched on the machine. Especial care must be taken with the long skirt seams. Pin the seam at the top, bottom and in the center, before starting to baste. Often one edge of the material appears to be longer than the other; this must be eased in carefully until both are even. One method of basting a skirt and of stitching it as well is to begin at the top on one side and baste or stitch down, then start at the bottom on the opposite seam and go up.

7207 is a three-piece model, closing in front and showing just a suggestion of fullness at the waist-line in back.

Corduroy, ratine or one of the new plaids would be effective with a design such as this.

This model requires for size 24 2¾ yards of 42 inch material.

The pattern is cut in 6 sizes; 22 to 32.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, taking the waist measure tightly, around the smallest part of the waist and hip measure loosely, around the fullest part of the hips.

It may be obtained by filling out the coupon and enclosing 15 cents in stamps or coin to the Pattern Department of this paper.

Parsley Omelet.
Apple Tapioca.

FRUITS served with cereals are very dainty. They give a relish to plain meals and supply deserts that are tempting and wholesome.

Delicious With Cream.

Apple and Cornstarch.—Put a quart of water on to boil, dissolve four tablespoonfuls of cornstarch and stir in with a bit of salt and small piece of butter. Cook slowly till done, stirring all the time. Have the rind grated and take the juice of two lemons, to which add a cupful of sugar after taking from the fire; also five or six tart apples. Stir in the mixture, pour in dish and serve with sugar and cream.

Apples and Rice.—Boil half a cupful of rice with a saltspoonful of salt in milk until tender, sweeten to taste and drain off the milk if it has not been wholly absorbed. Press the rice into a basin, smooth it over the top, cool until firm enough to mold and turn into a flat dish. Pare and core as many apples as will stand on top of the rice, boil them slowly in sugar and water until tender and remove them before they lose their shape. Boil the juice to a thick sirup, lay the apples on the rice, pour sirup over them and fill the center of each apple with jam.

Soak Tapioca Well.

Apple Tapioca.—Soak overnight one-half cupful of tapioca in five cupfuls of water. In the morning put on stove and cook. As it thickens add more water if needed to keep from being too stiff. When cooked add six or more apples pared and quartered. Use as many apples as the cooked tapioca will hold. Add a pinch of salt, one cupful of sugar or more, if necessary, and flavor with nutmeg. Bake, stirring often, then crush apples. Serve with sweetened whipped cream flavored with vanilla.

Apple Mold.—Allow one pound of apple to a quarter of a pound of tapioca. Cook both separately until they are quite soft. Mix them together. Melt four sheets of gelatin in a little warm water and strain this into the mixture. Add sugar to taste and a little lemon juice or cinnamon for flavoring. Stir all well together and pour it into a mold which has been dipped in cold water and set it aside till next day. Turn out and serve with cream.

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

If Mixed With Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the great est advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.—Adv.

Your Appearance Counts

Have you ever realized how well you are received when your appearance is favorable? Men, send your Suit and have it cleaned and pressed. Ladies, your tea gowns, woolen dresses, opera cloaks, plain or fancy waists, and in fact anything worth cleaning.

That my method will tend to renew the fabric, brighten the colors and raise the nap, thereby restoring the garment to the freshness of new clothing.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

The Story Of the Little German Needle.

"A LITTLE girl named Jinny in crossing the street one day saw a needle shining very brightly in the center of the crossing. She picked it up because, as she said herself, some horse might get it in his foot and have it hurt dreadfully. She stuck the needle in her fur and walked on.

"When she reached home she was very tired and sat down in a chair to look at a nice picture book. She put her coat and hat and furs back of the chair. The pictures, however, became all mixed up and looked very queer, for Jinny was falling asleep. Soon she was sound asleep, and the bright needle in the fur seemed to grow brighter and brighter. It looked like something alive, it was so bright, and, sure enough, it was talking!

"'Jinny,' said the needle, 'I am so glad you saw me. I would have hated to have hurt any horse or to have pierced a poor dog's foot, but I couldn't move myself. In return I'll tell you the story of my life.

"'I came over from Germany with a very poor girl who was a sewer. She did most wonderful fancy work. She made beautiful pansies and violets on dollies and table napkins, and she made lovely collars and cuffs for beautiful ladies to wear. She was always very fond of me, for I was a good, sharp needle and always kept bright.

"'So when she left Germany she put me in her needle book and said she would be careful not to lose me, her little needle, for I had helped her more in her work than any other needle ever had. Of course that made me feel very proud of her and, knowing how hard she had to work, was glad to help her all I could. She left Germany because her friends told her that she could make more money selling her lovely work in this country.

"'Coming over on the boat I was in almost constant use helping her make pretty things. After we got to this country she found plenty of work to do and was busy all the time, which, of course, meant that I was busy too. But I was very happy, for I saw how happy she was.

"'Her beautiful work brought ever so much more money than it formerly did, and she was never worried any more as she used to be in Germany.

"'Well, after awhile she succeeded so well that she bought a little house and no longer had to work.

"'Today she was carrying her workbag to a friend's house to sew a little for amusement. But there was a hole in the bag, and I fell out. Then you came along and picked me up. I'll help you sew if you like, Jinny, for my kind mistress doesn't need me now.'

"When Jinny awoke there was the needle on the fur, and she put it in her workbag with such pleasure."

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

CHAPTER XXII.

"I wanted most—to die."

"I WENT to a little town in South America," continued Kendrick after a pause. "There was no treaty of extradition. I smoked cigarettes and drank what passed for rum on the balcony of an impossible hotel, and otherwise groped about for the path that leads to the devil. After a year, I wrote to Hayden. He answered, urging me to stay away. He intimated that the thing we had done was on my shoulders. I was ashamed, frightfully unhappy. I didn't dare write to—her. I had disgraced her. I asked Hayden about her, and he wrote back that she was shortly to marry him. After that I didn't want to come back to Reuton. I wanted most—to die.

"The years crept by on the balcony of that impossible hotel. Six of them. At last, a few months ago, I wrote to another college friend of mine, Drayton, and told him the whole story. I did not know that he had been elected prosecutor in Reuton. He answered with a kind, pitying letter, and finally I knew the horrible truth. Nothing had ever happened. The thing we had done had never been discovered. Hayden had lied. He had even lied about his engagement to Myra Thornhill. There, he had made a reality out of what was simply his great desire—I came north. What happened after you know as well as I."

"Yes, I think I do," agreed Mr. Magee softly.

"I have told you the whole story," Kendrick replied, "and yet it seems to me that still it is not all told. Why should Hayden have killed himself? He had lied to me, it is true, but life was always sweet to him, and it hardly seems to me that he was the sort to die simply because his falsehood was discovered. Was there some other act of cruelty—some side to the story of which we are none of us aware? I wonder."

He was silent a moment.

"Anyhow, I have told you all I know," he said. "Shall I tell it also to the coroner? Or shall we allow Hayden's suicide to pass as the result of his implication in this attempt at bribery? I ask your advice, Mr. Magee."

"My advice," returned Magee, "is that you befuddle no pompous little village doctor with the complication of this unhappy tale. No, let the story be that Hayden killed himself as the toils closed in on him—the toils of the law that punishes the bribe giver—now and then and occasionally. Mr. Kendrick, you have my deepest sympathy. Is it too much for me to hope"—he glanced across the room to where Myra Thornhill sat beside the professor—"that the best of your life is yet to come, that out of the wreck this man made of it you may yet be happy?"

Kendrick smiled.

"You are very kind," he said. "Yes, Miss Thornhill has waited for me all these years—waited, believing. It is a loyalty of which I cannot speak without—you understand. She knows why I went away—why I stayed away. She is still ready to marry me. I shall go again into the Suburban office and try to lift the road from the muck into which it has fallen. Yes, it is not too much for me to hope—and for you in your kindness—that a great happiness is still for me."

"Believe me, I'm glad," replied Magee with youthful enthusiasm, holding out his hand. "I'm sorry I spoiled your little game up here, but"—

"I understand," smiled Kendrick. "I think none the less of you for what you have done. And who knows? It may turn out to have been the wisest course after all."

Ah, would it? Mr. Magee walked to the window, pondering on the odd tangle of events that had not yet been completely straightened out. Certainly her eyes were an honest blue as well as a beautiful—but who was she? Where was she? The great figure of Mrs. Norton stirred restlessly near at hand; the puffed lids of her eyes opened.

"Mr. Magee," she said when she had made out his figure by the window, "you've been a true friend, as I might say, to a couple of mad females who ought to have been at home by their own firesides, and I'm going to ask one more favor of you. Find out when the next train goes to Reuton, and see that I'm at the station an hour or two before it pulls out."

"I'll do that, Mrs. Norton," smiled Magee. "By the way, is Norton the name?"

"Yes," answered the woman, "that's my name. Of course it ain't hers. I can't tell that."

"No matter," said Mr. Magee. "She'll probably change it soon. Can't you tell me something about her—just a tiny bit of information—just a picture of where she is now and what she's doing with that small fortune I gave her?"

"Where is she now?" repeated Mrs. Norton. "She's home and in bed in my second floor front unless she's gone clear crazy. And that's where I wish I was this minute—in bed—though it's a question in my mind if I'll ever be able to sleep again what with the uproar and confusion my house is probably in by this time, leaving it in charge of a scatter brained girl."

"I—I had to creep back to Baldpate mountain finally."

"Why did you come?" prodded Mr. Magee. "Why did you leave your house on this strange mission?"

"The Lord knows," replied the woman. "I certainly never intended to, but she begged and pleaded, and the first thing I knew I was on a train. She has winning ways, that girl. Maybe you've noticed?"

"I have," assented Billy Magee.

"I thought so. No, Mr. Magee, I can't tell you nothing about her. I ain't allowed to, even you that has been so kind. She made me promise. 'He'll know soon enough,' she kept saying. But I will tell you, as I told you before, there's no occasion to worry about her, unless you was to think she was held up and murdered with all that money on her, the brave little dear! If you was considering offering yourself for the job of changing her name, Mr. Magee, I say go in and do it. It sure is time she settled down and gave up this—this—gave it all up before something awful happens to her. You won't forget the very next train, Mr. Magee?"

"The very next," Magee agreed.

In through the dining room door stamped Quimby, grave of face, dazed at being roused from sleep, and with him an important little man whose duty it was to investigate at Upper Asquewan Falls such things as had happened that night at Baldpate. Even from his slumber he rose with the air of a judge and the manner of a Sherlock Holmes. For an hour he asked questions, and in the end he prepared to go in a seemingly satisfied state of mind.

Quimby's face was very awed when he came downstairs after a visit to the room above.

"Poor fellow," he said to Magee. "I'm sorry—he was so young." for such as Quimby carry no feud beyond the gates. He went over and took Kendrick's hand.

"I never had a chance," he said, "to thank you for all you tried to do for me and my invention."

"And it came to nothing in the end?" Kendrick asked.

"Nothing," Quimby answered. "I—I had to creep back to Baldpate mountain finally, broke and discouraged. I have been here ever since. All my blue prints, all my models—they're locked away forever in a chest up in the attic."

"Not forever, Quimby," Kendrick replied. "I always did believe in your invention. I believe in it still. When I get back into the harness I'm sure I can do something for you.

"I'm going to lay a stretch of track in Reuton with your joints. That's all you need. They'll have to use 'em then. We'll force the Civic into it. We can do it, Quimby—we surely can."

Quimby rubbed his hand across his eyes.

At 4 in the morning Baldpate inn, wrapped in the arms of winter, had all the rare gayety and charm of a baseball bleachers on Christmas eve. Looking gloomily out the window, Mr. Magee heard behind him the steps on the stairs and the low cautions of Quimby, and two men he had brought from the village, who were carrying something down to the dark carriage that waited outside. He did not look round. It was a picture he wished to avoid.

So this was the end—the end of his two and a half days of solitude—the end of his light hearted exile on Baldpate mountain. He thought of Bland, lean and white of face, gay of garb, fleeing through the night, his Arabella fiction disowned in the real tragedy that had followed. He thought of Cargan and Max, also fleeing, wrathful, sneering, by Bland's side. He thought of Hayden, jolting down the mountain in that black wagon. So it ended.

So it ended—most preposterous end—with William Halliwell Magee madly, desperately, in love. By the gods—in love.

Quimby dragged into the room, the strain of a rather wild night in Upper Asquewan Falls in his eyes.

"Jake Peters asked me to tell you he ain't coming back," he said. "Mis' Quimby is getting breakfast for you down at our house. You better pack up now and start down. I reckon Your train goes at half past 6."

Mrs. Norton jumped up, proclaiming that she must be aboard that train at any cost. Miss Thornhill, the professor and Kendrick ascended the stairs and Magee gathered his things together, put them in his bags and with a last look at No. 7 closed the door forever on its many excitements.

A shivering group awaited him at the foot of the stair. Mrs. Norton's hat was on at an angle even the most imaginative milliner could not have approved. The professor looked older than ever; even Miss Thornhill seemed a little less statuesque and handsome in the dusk. Quimby led the way to the door, they passed through it and Mr. Magee locked it after them with the key Hal Bentley had blithely given him on Forty-fourth street, New York.

So Baldpate inn dropped back into the silence to slumber and to wait.

Down the snowy road the five followed Quimby's lead.

"Come right in, all of you," chirruped Mrs. Quimby, ushering them into a pleasant odor of cookery. "Take off your things and sit down. Breakfast's most ready. My land, I guess you must be pretty nigh starved to death! Quimby told me who was cooking for you, and I says to Quimby: 'What,' I says, 'that no account woman hater messing round at a woman's job, like that,' I says. 'Heaven pity the people at the inn,' I says. 'Mr. Peters may be able to amuse them with stories of how Cleopatra whiled away the quiet Egyptian evenings,' I says, 'and he may be able to throw a little new light on Helen of Troy, who would object to having it thrown if she was alive and the lady I think her, but,' I says, 'when it comes to cooking, I guess he stands about where you do, Quimby.' You see, Quimby's repertory consists of coffee and soup, and sometimes it's hard to tell which he means for which."

"So Mr. Peters has taken you in on the secret of the book he is writing against your sex?" remarked Billy Magee.

"Not exactly that," Mrs. Quimby answered, brushing back a wisp of gray hair, "but he's discussed it in my presence, ignoring me at the time. You see, he comes down here and reads his latest chapters to Quimby o' nights, and I've caught quite a lot of it on my way between the cook stove and the sink."

"I ain't no judge of books," remarked Mrs. Norton from a comfortable rocking chair, "but I'll bet that one's the limit."

"You're right, ma'am," Mrs. Quimby told her. "I ain't saying that some of it ain't real pretty worded, but that's just to hide the falsehood underneath. My land, the lies there is in that book!

You don't need to know much about history to know that Jake Peters has made it over to fit his argument and that he ain't made it over so well but what the old seams show here and there, and the place where the braid was is plain as daylight."

After ten more minutes of bustle Mrs. Quimby announced that they could sit down, and they were not slow to accept the invitation. The breakfast she served them moved Mr. Magee to remark:

"I want to know where I stand as a judge of character. On the first night I saw Mrs. Quimby, without tasting a morsel of food cooked by her, I said she was the best cook in the county."

"IN A BAD WAY."

Many a Plainfield Reader Will Feel Grateful for This Information.

If your back gives out;

Becomes lame, weak or aching;

If urinary troubles set in,

Perhaps your kidneys are "in a bad way."

Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys.

Local evidence proves their merit.

A. K. Mattis, 127 West Fourth street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "I gave Doan's Kidney Pills my endorsement five years ago, after receiving a cure through their use and today I confirm all I then said in their favor. The cure has been permanent. I was troubled for years by a dull backache and pains in my head. I believe that it was due to a great measure to a bad fall I had. Nothing seemed to help me and when I read of the good work Doan's Kidney Pills were doing in similar cases, I got a supply at Randolph's drug store. They drove away the aches and pains and my experience gave proof of their merit."

best accredited speakers and writers be heard on the subject, Inez Milholland-Boissevain, is to be closely identified with the suffrage movement to allow of her being shoved off in the "lunatic fringe" class.

In a series of articles in McClure's magazine she predicted that "this sudden liberation of an entire sex from a sex-property enslavement" will mean "a revolution of a new and bewildering kind, touching and changing life at every point," and changing the institutions that we have until now regarded to civilization itself."

"The situation is confused," she says, "by the fact that a large proportion of the new voters are women of the old type, bred to another standard. But it will not be long before the steady influx to the voting ranks of those millions of younger women whose impressions are being formed in the more alert, stirring air of today, will bring the real issues more sharply before us. * * * Among the institutions most certain to be touched and changed, are the home and marriage itself."

Mrs. Oliver Belmont, seeing the bad effect such utterances would be apt to have, asserted in an article in Harper's magazine that the views in question were only held by "a few hot headed young women," but she was speedily answered in a two-page article in Harper's Weekly, called "The Younger Suffragists," in which Mrs. Winifred Harper Cooley re-affirmed Mrs. Boissevain's statements, calling Mrs. Belmont and her followers "suffragists of a past decade," who have not kept abreast of the times," and asserting that the vote is but a means to an end—that end being a complete social revolution."

As to the liquor interests, they must be very blind indeed, when they suppose woman suffrage is going to hurt them. There is not a single prohibition state in the whole ten where women vote. In Michigan suffrage was defeated in "dry" counties and carried in "wet." Here, in Idaho, Boise has gone "wet" in two elections where that was the issues to say nothing of the gaining of an election in which the choice lay between a mayor who would and one who would not carry out the needed saloon reforms, and where the victory was won at the last momont through the efforts of paid women workers.

Talk of liquor interest! They may be blind enough to cast their influence against suffrage sometimes, but they are fast coming to their senses and finding that women voters don't as a rule, trouble themselves with what they term "a losing cause."

I am a little amused at an article in the Press which assumes that the question of suffrage or non-suffrage is practically settled in the minds of the voters. The legislators, indeed, under the influence of the despised "indirect influence" of the women advocating this amendment, have consented to put it to the people. But the Press writer is much mistaken if he thinks that his fellow voters have all settled the question. I recall meeting a man last summer who said, "I was quite indifferent on the subject—then I thought if the women wanted the vote they ought to have it; then I began to look up the subject, and became a thorough going opponent to the measure.'" Had the "Antis" proposed in June to form a man's branch, I fear they would have been laughed out of court. Not so now, however. The men are beginning to see that women, as a whole, don't want the vote. They prefer real power (not indirect influence) to a semblance of power, and the men are beginning to realize that woman's instincts here, as in most cases, are to be relied on. That we can have all we can do in helping the men by accepting offices which our peculiar talents are of value, is being proved every day. And it is to be noted that the women who are doing the real work of the world, be they for or against "votes for women," are too busy to devote much time to talking about it.

ANTI-SUFFRAGE

Conducted by Plainfield Branch New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage.

A letter received from a suffragist friend lately in which she speaks of W. L. George's article in Feminism as follows: "Roosevelt speaks of the lunatic fringe that hangs on the border of all great reform movements." I should describe Mr. George as of this fringe. The article is so unpleasant I suspected it was written by an enemy disguised as a friend. If he is a friend, he is an extremist and represents—I do not know whom—but not the women of America, certainly.

That Mr. George does not represent the conservative element in the equal suffrage camp may well be. These women have held the question of suffrage so close to their eyes for so long a time that they are quite unable to see what lies around and beyond it. When I was at school one of our illustrations in studying some of the simpler facts about optics was to hold a cent close to the eye, one being shut, and to notice how it hid all other objects and also how large it appeared. As we moved it farther away we not only saw surrounding objects, hidden before, but we also saw the cent in its true proportion. This experiment has come forcibly to mind many times in reading or listening to suffragist arguments. They do not—that is, many of them—seem able to see anything but the worthless coin which they hold so close to them. What suffrage may lead to they seem unable to see. But let one of their

BOY SCOUTS TO WORK FOR PRIZE

Will Distribute the White Crusader in Every Plainfield Home.

The Boy Scouts of America will make a distribution of The White Crusader on Monday. The Anti-Tuberculosis League has published a special number of The White Crusader for this work. It contains a chart showing the typical cases in Plainfield and the work which the league has done in connection with the are of these cases. It also contains pictures of the clinic and of the open-air school maintained by the league. There is also a brief account of the work of the league and its results.

The Boy Scouts expect to start at 8:30 on Monday morning and to have their distribution finished by noon, putting a copy of this paper in every house in Plainfield. A prize of a handsome silk troop flag has been offered to the patrol which does the most effective work in proportion to its enrollment.

No more important work has been undertaken by the Boy Scouts as an organization than this help of the Anti-Tuberculosis League. Here is a real community matter, one which touches every citizen of Plainfield very closely. It is one of the ideals of the Boy Scouts to perform such community service from time to time and the spirit with which the members of the different patrols are entering into this service shows what a fine body of boys Plainfield has in its Boy Scouts.

LICENSES TO BE ISSUED DURING OFFICE HOURS

Officials of the borough of North Plainfield are determined to put a stop to the annoyance caused them on many occasions by the neglect of persons desiring to hold dances, basketball games and other entertainments in Saengerbund Hall and Debele's Hall, to apply for licenses until the very last moment. Some persons, it was declared today by the officials, have at times held affairs of various kinds without even applying for the necessary license. So annoying have such derelictions become of late that Mayor Robert Clark, Jr., refused to issue a license for a dance which was to have been held Thursday night at Saengerbund Hall.

No application was made by any member of this organization for a license until just as Mayor Clark was entering a carriage with his wife, to attend a social function. All persons desiring to hold performances of any character, at which admission is charged, will be expected to make the proper application to the borough authorities during the usual business hours. Mayor Clark is at his office in borough police headquarters every morning. He can be reached at any seasonable hour of the day. Not content with Mayor Clark's refusal to grant the permit, he was visited at a dinner at which Mayor Clark was a guest and, in the midst of the speechmaking, summoned him outside and again presented his appeal. The head of the borough government is known by his friends to be a patient man and one to whom it is always a far greater pleasure to grant a favor than to refuse one. But his pursuit by the eleventh hour applicants for a dance permit is said to have given him just cause to believe that hereafter so long as he is Mayor, requests for licenses will have to be made at the proper place and at seemly hours.

In order to keep undesirable persons from the dances that are held by the North Plainfield High School students in Saengerbund Hall, a new idea was put into operation last night when dancing started after the basketball game. Hereafter nobody will be allowed to take the floor unless they are granted a permit by Principal Albert Earley or the person in charge of the hall. Ever since the basketball season started there have been people who waited until the games were over and then would slip into the hall and enjoy a couple of hours of dancing for nothing.

In many cases these persons have been the ones that have caused so much talk and comment about the undesirable dancing that is permitted at the various High School functions which are followed by dances. Such persons as these, who slip in free and then, by their actions, give the school a reputation that no institution cares to carry, are not desired by the borough authorities and will not be allowed to dance hereafter. These persons will not be granted permits. Only friends and guests of the borough students will be allowed to dance. Last night Principal Earley explained the cause of taking such action so that there might be no misunderstanding. The permits are issued free of charge. One must be obtained every time the school holds a dance.

THE TEMPERATURE.

The temperature report from The State Trust Company today is as follows: 9 a. m., 20 degrees; 11 a. m., 30 degrees; 12:30 p. m., 32 degrees.

—Merchants realize that the housewives who appreciate "special sales" are critical buyers—and that mere price-lure is not enough. The goods must be RIGHT.

LENTEN SEASON BEGINS TOMORROW

Ash Wednesday to Be Marked by Services in Episcopal and Catholic Churches.

COURSE OF LECTURES

Prominent Clergymen to Be Heard in Local Edifices During Next Forty Days—Complete Programs Announced.

The Lenten season begins tomorrow, Ash Wednesday, when special services will be held in the local Episcopal and Catholic churches, according to the prescribed rule of these churches. During Lent other churches will observe to a more or less degree this season, which is usually marked by a cessation from all worldly pleasures, and the absence of social functions. Perhaps, one of the most notable events to be held here during Lent will be the series of nine lectures to be given at Grace church by prominent clergymen, which have been announced from time to time. These begin on Monday, March 2, continuing the following two days.

Rev. Dr. Hughwell E. W. Fosbroke, of Cambridge, will give the first three lectures on "The Literature of the Bible," to be followed by Rev. Dr. George Hodges, of Cambridge, with three lectures on "The Wisdom of Books," March 16, 17 and 18, and three lectures by Rev. Dr. H. P. Nichols, of New York, on "The Story of Progress in the New Testament," March 23, 24 and 25.

There will be special services at Grace church tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, when there will be morning prayer and holy communion. There will be evensong and sermon at 8 o'clock, the special preacher being Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop of Bethlehem. During the weeks of Lent there will be evensong and addresses at 5 o'clock Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays. On Thursday evening at 8 o'clock there will be evensong and address, and there will be services on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday mornings at 10 o'clock, there being litany on Wednesday and Friday and holy communion on Thursdays. Rev. Herbert Shipman, of New York, will preach Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock.

The services at Holy Cross church tomorrow morning will be morning prayer, litany, sermon and holy communion at 11 o'clock in the morning, and evening prayer and sermon at 7:45 o'clock in the evening. During the remaining weeks, except Holy Week, there will be a lecture on the "Prayer Book" on Wednesday evenings at 7:45 o'clock; holy communion on Thursday mornings at 9:30 o'clock and litany on Fridays at the same hour. The lectures on the "Prayer Book" will consist of an explanation of the different offices and will undoubtedly be interesting and instructive not only to the members of the parish, but also to those who are unfamiliar with the Episcopal service.

In addition to the services mentioned above there will be a service each Thursday evening at 7:45 o'clock. Rev. Charles H. Kues, the rector, has secured as the special preachers at these services clergymen prominent in the church in New York city. The special preacher for Thursday evening will be Rev. Herbert Shipman, of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, who is widely known to the people of Plainfield.

The services tomorrow at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, of which C. H. Mallery is the rector, will include the Penetential Office and Holy Eucharist at 10 o'clock, and evensong and address at 7:30 o'clock in the evening. There will be a children's service on Fridays at 4 o'clock and services and reading at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoons. The last entertainment in the parish before Lent will be the social to be held this evening at 8 o'clock. There will be speeches, music and refreshments.

Rev. Warner E. L. Ward, rector of St. Stephen's church, has announced the services to be held at his church during the Lenten season. Tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock there will be holy communion at 9 o'clock and at 10:30 o'clock there will be matins, litany and Penetential Office, with evensong and address at 8 o'clock in the evening. On Tuesdays and Thursdays at 5 o'clock in the afternoon there will be evening prayer and on Wednesday evenings at 8 o'clock there wil be a lecture on the "Prayer Book," while on Friday evenings at 8 o'clock there will be evening prayer.

Lenten masses will be said tomorrow morning at St. Mary's church at 6:30, at 7:00 and at 8:00 o'clock. The ashes will be blessed at the 8:00 o'clock mass and following the celebration of this mass there will be a distribution of the ashes to the parishioners. Ashes will also be distributed to members of the congregation at the service to be held at 8:00 o'clock in the evening, when a sermon will also be preached by Rev

GIVE WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY SUPPER

Under Auspices of Men's Club of Seventh-Day Baptist Church.

Under the auspices of the Men's Club of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, a Washington's Birthday supper was given in the parlors of the church, Sunday evening. The affair proved to be a great success, about 175 people being served at the supper. There were appropriate favors, including cherry trees, cherries, red, white and blue candies.

One of the features of the evening was the motion pictures exhibited by George L. Babcock, in which he used his own machine. The films were of a popular sort and pleased both young and old.

The menu for the supper was unique, there being chicken patties, colonial style, cream Cornwallis soup, Yorktown hashed potatoes, cranberry sauce from Brandywine, biscuit a la Martha cherry pie from the original tree, cheese from the Mt. Vernon dairy, parched corn coffee, Valley Forge service and choice of molasses or sugar sweetening. A charge of 22 cents was made for the supper, it being announced there would be "no taxation without representation."

Frank J. Hubbard was chairman of the general committee, and was assisted by John B. Cottrell, Albert Whitford, Dr. O. B. Whitford, C. W. Spicer, Dr. Marcus L. Clawson, Asa F. Randolph, George Clarke, Nathan E. Lewis, Roland Davis.

HOPEFUL OUTLOOK AT SAURER PLANT

Concern May Combine Manufacture of Printing Presses With Auto Trucks.

The receipt of orders for about sixty new auto trucks has brought a more hopeful business outlook at the Saurer plant of the International Motor Company, of this city. Within the past week or so the concern has put on about forty men, and it is said that the present work on hand will keep the plant busy for the next six months, while in the meantime it is expected that additional orders may be received. The turn in trade for the better was noticed about a month ago when an order for about twenty-five trucks was received, and now it is thought that it will not be long before the regular force will be employed.

This belief is strengthened by the report that in addition to making auto trucks provisions are to be made soon for the manufacture of printing presses. It is said that arrangements are now being perfected whereby several presses are to be made as an experiment for the R. H. Hoe Company, of New York. This fact it is thought may be responsible for the rumor that the Hoe company intended removing to this city, it being understood that the Manganese Steel Safe Works and many acres of land adjoining had been secured by the New York concern.

If the manufacture of printing presses should be combined with that of making auto trucks it is likely that a large force of men would be necessary and once more there would be a boom in industrial conditions here.

While most of the shops here are working full time they are employing a reduced force in some departments, but the heads of the concerns take a hopeful view of the situation and believe that it will not be long before a normal condition of trade will be restored to this city. That the local merchants have felt the slight depression in the shops is a well-known fact and anything that would serve to stimulate trade would be welcome to the trades-people.

MONTHLY MUSICAL SERVICE.

GESANG AND TURN VEREIN ENJOY A FROLIC

Members of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein held their annual frolic at Saengerbund Hall, in the borough, Sunday evening, February 22. The event, which is termed by the German members of the organization, "Narren Zitzung," consisted as is usual in all such affairs with good natured jests and raillery at the expense of fellow members of the society, some of the repartee being particularly appropriate, showing as it did the particular foibles of some of the members.

Following the merrymaking of this sort the guests enjoyed themselves at a masquerade ball which continued up to an early hour Monday morning.

BROADWAY DOLLS ARE EXPENSIVE

Declares Chester Chamberlain Who is Arrested on Charge of Theft.

Charged with rifling the pockets of members of the West Fifty-seventh Street Y. M. C. A., in New York city, Chester L. Chamberlain, of this city, is being held under $1,200 bail in the West Side police court. Detectives have been working on the case for several months. When searched at police headquarters pawn tickets aggregating a sum of $400 were found on his person bearing the name of Blake.

The boy was believed to have been attending the Mount Hammond School for Boys in Mount Hammond, Mass., and he managed to get away under various pretexts and went frequently to New York. He made a full confession and added:

"Broadway dolls are expensive, I liked one of them and, of course, had to have the money."

The young man has been under suspicion here for several years past and has been accused of many petty robberies in this city. He has gained popularity as a soloist in church choirs in this city and was well known.

AWAIT FIRST DAY'S REPORT

Y. W. C. A. Workers Will Meet to Learn Achievements of Solicitors.

CAMPAIGN UNDERWAY

Ten Teams Are Now Enthusiastically Engaged in Plan to Raise $10,000 for Budget and to Cancel Indebtedness.

Members of the Young Women's Christian Association are anxiously awaiting news as to the results achieved by the solicitors on this, the first day of the campaign which is being waged in Plainfield to raise $10,000 for the uses of the organization. Reports of the several teams are to be made this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock at which time all of the subscription candidates are to meet at the Y. W. C. A. building. Tea will be served and an enthusiastic gathering of members will listen to the reports of progress that the women who are conducting the campaign are expected to make.

Each solicitor for the fund carries an identification card and is well provided with literature, setting forth the aims and monetary needs of the organization. Y. W. C. A. members generally here are sanguine of the success of the present crusade for needed funds. No person in Plainfield will be asked twice for a subscription. The canvass is being conducted along systematic and wholly modern lines. It is expected that many voluntary subscriptions will be sent the Y. W. C. A. by men and women of this city who are interested in the work that is being carried on.

While the building of the association is free of incumbrance there is a mortgage of $5,250 on the property at 218 East Front street, and the City National Bank holds a note for

WILLIAM S. ENGLAND MAKES DARING RESCUE

William S. England, of Westervelt avenue, a member of the uniformed rank, Somerset Council, No. 104, Junior O. U. A. M., while waiting for the signal to march in the Washington's Birthday parade in Newark yesterday gave an exhibition of pluck and daring in stopping a runaway horse. Frightened by the blare of trumpets a horse attached to a Newark delivery wagon became unmanageable and dashed at breakneck speed down Broad street.

England, who is a former soldier, having served in the field artillery, made a lunge at the passing wagon and swung himself aboard. Crawling on hands and knees he made his way to the seat, then over the dashboard and climed for the horse's back. There he took a short hold on the reins near the bridle and brought the horse to a sudden stop. He jumped to the gronud, brushed the snow from his uniform and walked away apparently unconcerned over the feat of daring. Thousands of persons who had gathered to witness the start of the parade at Broad and Market streets checred England for his bravery and the parade was held up for some time by the demonstration which followed.

ENTERTAINED G. A. R.

The members of the Continental Chapter, D. A. R., were entertained at the February meeting by Mrs. Charles R. Banks, of Watchung avenue. Mrs. C. W. McCutchen read a paper on "The Humorous Side of Washington," and Mrs. Henry M. Maxson spoke of "The Secret of Washington's Power."

NAMING OF CAPTAIN CAUSES RIVALRY

E. E. Vail, Wesley Dunn and James Fitzpatrick Seek Appointment.

The rivalry existing among those who seek the appointment of captaincy in the local fire department to succeed the late James Daly, has aroused unusual interest. So far as known there are three avowed candidates, Edward E. Vail, who has been a member of the department for twenty-two years, seven as a volunteer and callman and fifteen as a full paid man; Wesley Dunn and James Fitzpatrick, both of whom have been regular paid men a much shorter time.

The friends of Mr. Vail say that considering long years of service and efficiency he is entitled to the appointment. They refer to his record which they say is one of the best to be found in the department, and add that should long service fail in recognition now there would be little incentive for a person to enter this department or for those now in it to remain with the hope of promotion in years to come should there be an opportunity.

All three candidates have petitions in circulation and each one bears a long list of names. The councilmanic fire committee has been beseiged day and night by friends of the candidates, who are working in their interest, but thus far neither the chairman, A. D. Edgar, nor any of his associates have intimated who will be recommended for appointment.

WILLIAM SCHWARE HELD UP AND ROBBED

Highwayman Relieves Him of $20 While on His Way to New Market.

While traveling along a lonely road in New Market late Saturday night, William Schware, of Dunellen, was held up and robbed of $20 in bills which he had in a coat pocket. A masked individual stepped from behind a tree on the upper end of Prospect avenue as Schware passed by and, ordering the pedestrian to throw up his hands, relieved him of the money.

No attempt was made by the footpad to injure his victim and after taking the money he vanished as he had come, unheralded. Schware ran to the hotel of Rudolph Kampf in New Market and the police of this city were notified. According to the victim's description the highwayman was apparently about thirty-five years of age and wore a black coat and black slouch hat.

FRANK STANZENBERGER IS GIVEN SIXTY DAYS

Frank Stanzenberger, of nowhere in particular, was sentenced to serve a sentence of sixty days in the county jail by City Judge W. G. DeMeza in the city court yesterday, when he was arraigned on a charge of disorderly conduct.

The accused came to the local police headquarters Saturday night in an intoxicated condition and threatened to "clean up" the entire force. When searched a revolver was found on his person. A short time ago the defendant was told to quit the town when arraigned before Judge DeMeza, and his return to forbidden territory Saturday night, was taken into consideration by the court in passing sentence.

PASSES EXAMINATIONS.

Alfred Manley, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Manley, of East Ninth street, a member of the junior class in Penn State College, successfully passed all of his semi-final examinations. Manley recently gave a forty-five minute address to the class in the college, taking for his subject "St. John, the Divine."

DAY OF PRAYER.

Under the auspices of the Federation of Women's Missionary Societies a day of prayer for home missions will be observed at Grace M. E. church, the borough, Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The women of all churches in the city and borough are invited.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Leora Henry, of Liberty street, and Lewis Matlack, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis H. Matlack, also of this city. No date has been set for the wedding.

MAY ROBSON TO APPEAR.

COSTLY JEWELS ARE RECOVERED

Through Finger Prints Gang Which Operated Here is Located.

ARE NOTORIOUS CROOKS

Upon Promise of Kind Treatment They Offer Valuable Information—Local Police May Figure in Division of $5,000 Reward.

By means of certain clues, the origin of which can be traced back to activity on the part of members of the local police force who worked on the case, it was reported today that $12,000 out of the $15,000 worth of jewelry stolen from the home of former State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, of West Eighth street, January 3, had been recovered by the General Accident Insurance Company, of New York city.

Soon after the jewel robbery Detective-Sergeant John J. Flynn, of the local department, discovered finger prints on the window-sill of the room in which the gems were kept and Police Chief Kiely secured photographs of the imprints in an effort to locate the thief. Chief Kiely forwarded negatives of the finger prints to leading police bureaus of the country and it was found, upon minute examination, that the imprints tallied exactly with those of one Charles Connors, a notorious "supper thief" and porch climber. Chief Kiely has been the possessor of information regarding the identity of the thief since January 28 and the publication of the story of the discovery in Metropolitan newspapers this morning, came as no great surprise to him, it is said.

Efforts have been made to keep the identity of the characters under suspicion out of the public eye until after matters had been cleared up by the insurance company but the story leaked out last night, and although meagre details are forthcoming from those concerned it is said that a majority of the jewels have been recovered.

When sought by a Daily Press reporter at his home, last night, Mr. Ackerman said that he had no knowledge of the recovery of his gems and he had not been consulted in the matter by the New York authorities. As late as noon today, Mr. Ackerman said he had not received any information from the insurance company or police.

Chief Kiely and his men have been given the credit for the discovery of the jewels because of finger print photograps which they supplied, and it is believed will figure in the division of the $5,000 reward which has been offered for the return of the jewels taken from the Ackerman home.

Connors is a member of a notorious gang of thieves that are said to have operated a great deal in the East in robberies similar to this one and to also have had international reputation among crooks for "pulling on big deals."

The case went to O'Farrell around January 12. The finger prints secured by Expert Schwartz, of the Newark police department, were the clue and O'Farrell scattered them broadcast. One set went to Chicago. Back came the word: "Those prints belong to Captain Brown, Frankie Brown, Three Fingered Jack, wanted all over the United States, wanted in Cincinnati for murder and burglary, wanted in Brooklyn because he walked out of the Raymond street jail, clever porch climber and supper man. Works with Ice Wagon Connors, Butch Smith and Little Johnny."

Captain Brown, or Frankie Brown or Man on the Job, burglar and porch climber, who walked out of Raymond street jail, is wanted for killing a policeman in Cincinnati, where he jumped a $25,000 bail bond. Usually he is the outside man in a gang because of his readiness to use a revolver. Three fingers are missing from his left hand.

Butch Smith, pal of Connors, is a Chicago thief who served a short time in Joliet. Little Johnny is not so well known, but is a worthy member of the band.

While O'Farrell was wondering where to look the clue came. Westchester county was swept by supper thieves this fall and winter. There was a big robbery at Irvington, November 1, and a week later there nearly was another at the residence of Joseph Clendenning at Ardsley-on-Hudson.

Inspector Faurot, of New York, got the finger prints of a gang of four men the next day and found that all were aristocratic thieves, Wilson being Connors and Bell being William Edgar, with a long string of aliases, wanted for walking out of the West Side court while under a charge of burglary in 1907. The other two men had records.

Connors did not stay long in jail. He began to hint that if he were treated kindly the jewels taken from Irvington as well as some others might be restored. Finally he was

A horse belonging to James Rick, the bottler, started to run away yesterday afternoon while the driver was making some deliveries on Main street. The driver attempted to halt the animal by catching hold of the harness and climbing upon his back. The horse ran up Main street and started to run on the sidewalk in front of the Gaston store when the driver on the animal's back jerked the horse over and ran him ful tilt into one of the show windows across the street in the Honeyman store, completely demolishing the large plate glass, and bringing the horse to a standstill. The sidewalk at this point was crowded with women and children awaiting entrance to a moving picture show, and that no one was injured was a miracle. The horse was not cut in any way from the broken glass. The window has been temporarily boarded up.

PRAISE WORK OF MISSIONARIES

Prominent People Witness First Exhibition of Motion Pictures of Albania.

Prominent people, including Plainfielders, were present at an exhibition in New York, Saturday afternoon, when 5,500 feet of moving picture films were shown for the first time for the purpose of inaugurating an effective and expeditious scheme for sending relief to the suffering and destitute among the thousands of homeless refugees in Albania, long a Province of Turkey.

Plainfielders present, and who were among the especially invited group of representative people, were Mr. and Mrs. Grove P. Hinman, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Bond and Rev. Lewis Bond. Both Mrs. Hinman and A. R. Bond have a sister, Mrs. P. B. Kennedy, who is now working in Albania.

The films shown were obtained by William Willard Howard on a 400-mile trip made during the months of November and December of last year through the wild and mountainous country of Albania. He traveled through that region which was devastated by Servian and Montenegrin troops. The pictures are of decided interest, are original and novel too Americans. The need of the people of Albania, is today indeed great, according to those Plainfield peole who saw the first showing of the films. Aside from the humanitarian aspect of the work the appeal for funds will, it is believed, have a strong personal appeal to Plainfielders owing to the fact that Mrs. P. B. Kennedy, whose work in Albania, Mr. Howard highly praises, is, together with her husband, now engaged in distributing relief to the starving and suffering people in Albania, many of them victims of the most cruel barbarism on the part of the invading soldiery. Mrs. Kennedy, who is well known in Plainfield, is a daughter of Rev. Lewis Bond. Her husband has a brother, Henry R. Kennedy, living in this city. Until further plans have been formulated any person here in Plainfield who may desire to contribute towards the relief fund that is being raised can send such contributions to Rev. Lewis Bond, at 718 Kensington avenue, by whom all monies will, it is said, be promptly forwarded.

Others present at the showing of the Albania sufferer films on Saturday in New York were former U. S. Minister to Turkey Oscar Straus, Rev. Dr. Henry Otis Dwight, formerly of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and at one time resident in Constantinople; Prof. Richard Gottheil, of Columbia University; Djelal Bey, the Turkish Consul-General of New York; Dr. Ameen F. Haddad, an influential Armenian physician, of New York; Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, and numerous others.

LOCAL SURVEY IS SHOWN IN PICTURES

"Health and Housing" was the topic of discussion by the civics department of the Monday Afternoon Club at its meeting held yesterday afternoon in Hartridge Auditorium. An address was delivered, with illustrated views, by W. L. Kinkead, chairman of the New Jersey Housing Conference. The lecturer took for his subject, "The Situation in the State."

Local conditions in Plainfield have recently been investigated by a Miss Brown, a resident of New York, and a graduate of the School of Philanthropy. Her investigations here have been conducted under the auspices of and in co-operation with the Charity Organization Society and the Anti-Tuberculosis League.

While Miss Brown refused to give specific statements as to conditions discovered by her in this city she did show a number of slides showing exterior views of homes in the poorer quarters of the city which the members of the Monday Afternoon Club shuddered at and wondered that such unseemly surroundings should exist in any part of this municipality.

The investigations of Miss Brown have been carried on for the last two months. Her work is, it is said, to be made the subject of a report which is shortly to be given to the Charity Organization Society and the Anti-Tuberculosis League of Plainfield. In her investigations Miss Brown said she divided the city of Plainfield into districts, visiting each one in turn. Examination was made of both interiors and exteriors of houses.

DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEEMEN FAVOR PATRICK J. REVILLE

Although it is rumored that U. S. Senates James E. Martine favors the candidacy of Alvin E. Hoagland for the postmastership of Plainfield, members of the city and county Democratic committees have registered their choice for the post in the person of Patrick J. Reville.

The choice of Mr. Reville was made at a meeting of the joint committees held at Democratic headquarters on Sunday afternoon. The meeting, although it was declared to have been most harmonious, lasted from 2 until 7 o'clock. The session was an executive one, the public not being taken into the confidence of the committeemen. They met behind closed doors. Peter Flynn was the second choice of the assembled Democrats for the postmastership, H. W. Marshall third choice and Fred Endress was fourth choice.

Owing to the fact that the notices calling the members of the city and county Democratic committeemen together had not been sent out as is provided by the by-laws of the organizations, it was decided to send out the notice regularly. This was done and another meeting of the committeemen was held last night. The result was unchanged as to the choice of candidates.

JEWELS ARE RECOVERED

released on $250 bail on condition that he would aid the police. He vanished and wrote back from New York city that if the three others were released he would see that the jewels were rturned.

"It didn't take me long to find out that the men did that job out at Plainfield," O' Farrell said, "and that they had all of the stuff but a few pieces which had been broken up and sold to defray running expenses. When I discovered this I informed my employers and got out of the case. It was up to them to do whatever they wanted to. I was ready to go ahead and get the people if I could or to drop it. I only know that the jewels valued at $12,000 have been recovered."

Plainfield was honored in the parade of patriotic societies held yesterday in Newark, when the teams of Somerset and Franklin Councils, Jr. O. U. A. M., were given the right of line, in place of the first regiment, uniformed rank, of that well known order, of Newark. The latter organization failed to materialize and at the last moment the Plainfielders were given the position of honor in the line of march.

The Dutch Arms band of Trinity Reformed church played for the Plainfield contingent. It was so cold that the instruments of some of the bandmen froze up and it was found impossible to play stirring tunes. The Dutch Arms band, however, was declared to be the best of the musical organizations in the parade.

MAYOR MITCHEL

His Police Bills Come Before Legislature This Week.

Mayor Mitchel's police bills, designed to confer more authority on Colonel Goethals in case he should become commissioner, are to run the gantlet of legislative and political opposition this week. Alfred E. Smith, Tammany leader of the legislature, said that he would not vote for the bills and that practically all the Democrats in the legislature would be against them. Job E. Hedges, Republican candidate for governor, said he would appear in person to dissent from the proposition to take away from policemen the right of appeal to the courts in cases of dismissal.

EX-SENATOR TELLER DIES AT EIGHTY-FOUR

Was Elected From Colorado For Five Terms.

Denver, Colo., Feb. 24.—Henry Moore Teller, eighty-four years old, former United States senator from Colorado, died at his home here after an illness lasting two years. Heart trouble and the infirmities of age caused his death. H. M. Teller was elected five times to the United States senate and also served as secretary of the interior.

Henry M. Teller of Colorado served in the United States senate from 1876 until 1909 with the exception of the three years 1882-85, when he was secretary of the interior in President Arthur's cabinet.

He was born in Grange., N. Y., eighty-one years ago. He went west in 1858, after living three years in Illinois. He was on his way to Colorado to go into a law partnership with a friend when the civil war broke. He left the Democratic party on the slavery question in 1854. He worked with the Republican party until 1896, when he left it on the financial question, after which he was named as a candidate for the presidency by the free silver bolters.

This "bolt" has been called the most forlorn one in history. The Republican convention of that year was dominated by Mark Hanna and William McKinley was the nominee. There was no chance that the silver plank would be adopted, but Teller would not withdraw until noses were counted on the issue, and all through the preliminaries he fought for silver, even after the roll call of the states showed that the Republicans were going for gold. He made a dramatic speech interrupted by sobs, and left the hall at St. Louis with his loyal followers while spectators rose in their chairs and sang "The Red, White and Blue."

Senator Lodge had told Teller there was no choice for the Republicans but to adopt the gold standard. This was at a committee meeting on the 17th. Lodge said he recognized Teller's sincere motives. Teller told of his long service in the Republican party.

TOLLS ISSUE IS DODGED IN HOUSE

Democrats Let Fight Be Begun In Senate.

ADAMSON HEADS ATTACK

Leaders Equally Divided on the Repeal Question—Representative Mann Is Planning to Fight From First to Last. Majority Said to Favor Action.

Washington, Feb. 24.—It is apparent here that Democratic leaders in the house are disposed to sidestep the initiation of legislation providing for the repeal of the free tolls provision of the Panama canal act through permitting the fight for repeal to be inaugurated in the senate.

Administration leaders say that they have a clear and clean majority favorable to repeal. At the same time a careful poll of the members of the present house who voted for free tolls in the Sixty-second congress shows a majority of about twenty against repeal. It is therefore incumbent upon the administration leaders to carry on their proselyting among the new one term congressmen.

Adamson to Be Leader.

The unofficial announcement of Representative Kitchin of North Carolina that he would vote against repeal of the free toll clause puts the North Carolina statesman out of the running as the administration's spokesman when the measure comes up for the attention of the house. In consequence the duty of fighting for the repeal will devolve upon Chairman Adamson of the interstate and foreign commerce commission.

Just now Mr. Adamson is burdened with important committee hearings and deliberations over the bill providing for an interstate trade commission and the bill increasing the powers of the interstate commerce commission by including in their duties the regulation of railroad securities issued. This offers another reason for permitting the repeal legislation to be initiated in the senate, for it is believed that consideration of the two anti-trust bills will be well under way before the question can arise in the house.

With Majority Leader Underwood, Chairman Fitzgerald of the appropriations committee, Representative Kitchin, heir apparent to the majority leadership; Representative Doremus of Michigan, chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee, all opposed to repeal, it has become important that Mr. Adamson shall have elbow room when the repeal fight starts. He will be warmly supported by Representative Sherley of Kentucky and a few of the other Democratic leaders, but regardless of how the majority of the house is divided upon the general question, the more powerful leaders are ranged about equally on both sides of it.

It is also said that Representative Mann of Illinois, the Republican leader, is planning to fight repeal from first to last. It is a question how the Republicans are divided on the repeal measure, but it is known that a majority will support Mr. Mann in his fight.

SIX DIE IN RACE WAR.

Negroes Who Killed White Man Shot Down by Posse.

Tunica, Miss., Feb. 24.—One white man and five negroes are dead in a race war here. The posse has not yet been heard from, and the death list may grow. It all started when a posse attempted to arrest thirty negro revelers. A volley greeted the posse, and Morris Love fell dead. A hot fire was exchanged until the posse's ammunition was exhausted and the negroes disappeared, when the posse withdrew to secure more.

Five negroes, however, were later treed by bloodhounds and shot down.

TRANSATLANTIC FLIGHT SNAG

Wright Patent Rights Subject of "Compromise" Conference.

Dayton, O., Feb. 24.—When asked if he intended to grant licenses to aeroplanes which infringe on patents held by the Wright company, Orville Wright would not make any statement. It is expected that Mr. Wright will be willing to accept reasonable royalties from users of infringing aeroplanes, and aviators believe a compromise will be effected between Wright and Glenn Curtiss to prevent any hitch in the plans for the transatlantic flight next summer.

MUNICIPAL SYSTEM BEST.

In Saturday's Courier-News, George H. Frost contributed an interesting and valuable article on the much discussed question of garbage and refuse disposal in the city of Plainfield. It is one of the most comprehensive of the many articles which have appeared on that topic since the Board of Health first recommended the establishment of a municipal system of collection and disposal a great many years ago. Throughout his whole argument Mr. Frost assumes that the "destructor" method of disposal is the only practical one for Plainfield. With this we cannot agree, although no one disputes that it is one of the best methods now offered, being probably the most expensive to maintain.

There are many municipalities in New Jersey where the problem of handling the ashes and garbage is solved very reasonably in a clean, sanitary and up-to-date manner. In fact, if we remember correctly, when the Council a year or more ago asked for bids for handling the problem in Plainfield, the figures then submitted were so low that they would have made but a very small increase in the tax rate, a much less amount in fact than the householders are now paying for private scavengers.

In assuming that the destructor method is the only one that could be considered here, Mr. Frost asks, "Where would a 'destructor' be possible in Plainfield, so as to equalize the long haul of the refuse?" We do not believe that such a system is necessary. In cities, even so large as Newark, the contractors greatly reduce the cost of disposal to the municipality by the use of every bit of refuse taken by the wagons. The garbage is kept separated and it could continue to be disposed of here in exactly the same way as at present by feeding it to pigs. Papers are gathered by a separate lot of wagons and everything else goes out with the ashes. When these are dumped on low land, which it is easy to find convenient to all parts of Plainfield, the contractors could have every rag, bottle, piece of bone or paper, tin can, and in fact everything picked from the ashes. All of these by-products are sold. By this method it can readily be seen that the destructor is unnecessary. This plan is in use in so many cities in New Jersey, and is so practical, that we believe that it refutes all argument in favor of the expensive destructor method of disposal.

"Then think of the daily procession of garbage and ashes-laden carts year after year along the charted routes!" Don't we have a greater procession now, of very ramshackle wagons, scattering ashes through the streets, than would be the case with a well regulated system of collection? A reliable contractor, under bond to the city to properly perform the work, would have big wagons, holding twice as much as those now in use, well built, carefully covered over, and would so systematize the work that there would not be half so many as is now the case with inefficient private contractors, who go along with their wagons uncovered, scattering ashes and dust about the streets. We cannot see why "the topography of Plainfield is an insurmountable objection to a municipal service" and as that topic is not elaborated upon can offer no argument to the contrary.

"In a commuter city such as this delivering ash cans and garbage pails at the curb is simply out of the question, and where a contractor figures on the job he expects delivery at the curb or a large extra price for taking from kitchen door or basement." East Orange is a commuter city, with many more of that class than there are in Plainfield. It is only on the finest residential streets that the cans are not placed at the curb, and there the contractor is permitted to charge a small monthly fee for carrying them out, but which, even with the necessary increase in tax rate would still be less than the amount now paid for indifferent private service in Plainfield. We have it on the authority of a man who has handled some of the biggest contracts in this part of the country, including Newark and East Orange, that even with rear door collections the cost for a municipal service in Plainfield would probably not be over $30,000 a year, which on a valuation of $28,000,000 in 1913, would make the tax rate eleven cents per $100. Is there a taxpayer in the city today who does not pay a much higher rate to the private scavengers who give such unsatisfactory service?

While Mr. Frost has contributed a very interesting and instructive article on the garbage question, and his many years of experience in the study of such problems would prove invaluable to the Council, we believe that the Board of Health is right in its contention that a municipal system of collection and disposal is the best.

A GREAT CHURCHMAN.

Bishop John H. Vincent, a power in the Methodist Church, and for many years a resident of Plainfield, reached the ripe old age of 82 yesterday. He is now living in Chicago. He has hundreds of friends in this city who rejoice to learn of his splendid health, and who hope to see him live for many more years to continue as an example for his younger brethren in the Methodist ministry. Born in Tuscaloosa, Alabama on February 23, 1832, he came north early in life and was educated in Pennsylvania academies and completed his training for the ministry at Wesleyan Institute, then located at Newark. He was ordained deacon in 1855 and elder in 1857, when he was transferred to the Rock River conference, serving as pastor in Chicago and elsewhere until 1865. He was appointed general agent of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday-school Union, and in 1868 was elected corresponding secretary both of the union and the tract society, in which posts he was continued until 1884, and during which time he came to Plainfield. At the general conference in 1888 he was elected a bishop. He has taken great interest in Sunday-school work, and is the author of a number of well known religious publications. His best known work, however, has been in connection with the Chautauqua literary and scientific circle, of which he was the real founder, the offices having been in the same building with the Daily Press for several years. This movement, which has since spread to every part of the land, was projected by Dr. Vincent in 1873 in co-operation with Lewis Miller, of Ohio.

The suggestion that experienced railroad men shall be placed upon the Public Utilities Commission has been embodied in the form of a requirement by a bill introduced into the Legislature by Senator Read. Where does this move come from? True, it was a part of the Republican state platform last fall, but it was repudiated by all the railway men's associations. Who wants it and what for? Of all the places where that should not be is the Public Utilities Board. No railway man should be upon it. That Board stands, or should stand, indifferent, as does a court, between the demands of the people and the railroads. On that board should be found men of capacity and fairness, with open minds on all the questions likely to come before them. There should not be found there any man who is either pro or anti-railroad. The scales held by that board must be held evenly, requiring the railways to do what is right and refusing the public their demands when they are not right.

ANOTHER SKIN GRAFTING OPERATION IS PERFORMED

A further operation for skin grafting was performed at Muhlenberg Hospital, yesterday, upon Miss Mamie Parella, of Spooner avenue, who was frightfully burned in an accident at her home last fall. Dr. P. B. Creagar, who has had the case in charge, and, who previously grafted several hundred pieces of skin on the child, transferred fifty-five more pieces given by members of her family. It is believed that only about fifty more are required to complete the operation that will bring the little victim to complete recovery.

The case is one that has attracted wide-spread attention from the fact that Miss Parella was so badly burned that her recovery was thought impossible at first. She rallied under heroic treatment and Dr. Creagar restored to the skin grafting when it was seen that she could be restored to health.

"HANDS OFF" IS BRITISH POLICY

Contends Intervention Is "Futile and Impolitic."

ACLAND EXPRESSES VIEWS

Villa Holding German-American In Jail at Chihuahua as Spy—Bauch Is Still Alive—Mrs. Benton Demands Husband's Body.

London, Feb. 24.—"The pacification of Mexico is an object we honestly desire to see accomplished, but it is impossible to effect it by British intervention.

"We do not intend to make any attempt of that character, which would be both futile and impolitic."

This is the attitude of the British foreign office as outlined in the house of commons by Francis Dyke-Acland, parliamentary undersecretary for foreign affairs, after full consideration of the series of outrages on British subjects in Mexico culminating in the "removal" of William S. Benton by Villa in Juarez.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 24.—Gustav Bauch, a German-American citizen, is alive in the jail in Chihuahua, a prisoner of Villa's rebels, if the information in possession of the United States consular officers here is correct. The consular officers say they were shown official messages in Juarez from Pancho Villa to his subchiefs in that city asking that the evidence in the Bauch case be forwarded to Chihuahua at once for submission at his hearing. The United States representatives do not claim to have anything official from their own consular representative, Marion Letcher, at Chihuahua. They accept the rebel message, however, and express the belief that Bauch is alive.

No official demand has been made on the rebels in Juarez for the body of William S. Benton, executed last Tuesday night in Juarez, although Consul Edwards says he asked Villa when Villa first told him of the execution if the body could be removed, and Villa said that it could not. The authorities left in Juarez claim not to know where he is buried.

Mrs. Benton believes that the rebels fear to deliver the body to her lest it show that he was shot in the back and thus disprove the rebel assertion that he was given a court martial, convicted and legally executed according to the rebel justice. Mrs. Benton said that she had asked the British ambassador at Washington to try to get the body. She said she had heard nothing of the arrival here of British Consul Chamberlain from Los Angeles, reported on the way here to investigate the trial and execution of Benton.

London Press More Insistent.

London, Feb. 24.—That William S Benton, a British subject, was deliberately murdered by General Pancho Villa and that Villa's story of a court martial ordering his death was only an excuse, is the general belief of the British government.

While numerous lengthy cipher dispatches were exchanged during the night between the foreign office and Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, British ambassador at Washington, the British newspapers were unanimous in demanding that the United States intervene in Mexico or abrogate the Monroe doctrine. The afternoon newspapers were more radical than the morning journals. They flatly stated that they believe intervention in Mexico to be imperative.

Though no member of the foreign office would speak, it was learned that the government puts no credence in any of the stories supposedly explaining the death of Benton and intends to learn the true facts of the matter through the state department if possible or by its own efforts if necessary.

MORE MONEY FOR "BIG DITCH"

Goethals Wants $23,000,000 For Next Year's Work on Canal.

Washington, Feb. 24.—Colonel Goethals, Panama canal engineer, was invited before the house appropriations committee to discuss appropriations needed to finish the "big ditch." Goethals will make his annual request for funds. For work next year he estimates $23,770,000 will be needed, as compared with over $16,000,000 provided this year.

Completion of projects at Balbao, the Pacific terminus of the canal, including railroad extensions, docks, yards and breakwater, colliers and shipping and railroad shops require increased appropriations, Goethals declares. Bridging and blasting to put final touches on the canal will also require a large force indefinitely.

BURNING FLAG KILLS BABY.

Sets Fire to Child at Play and Parents Fail to Save Her.

Patchogue, N. Y., Feb. 24.—Mary Katz, twenty months old, daughter of Israel Katz, a fruit dealer, was sitting in front of the fire in her home playing with an American flag. The flag caught fire and carried the flames to her dress.

Her father and mother, who were in the barn milking, heard the child's screams and beat out the flames. She was taken to a hospital, but died later.

"WASHINGTON THE GREAT" HIS THEME

Rev. Dr. Philip B. Strong Delivers an Inspiring Sermon at First Baptist Church.

"Washington the Great, the Son of a Godly Mother," was the subject of an inspiring and instructive discourse by Rev. Dr. Philip B. Strong at the First Baptist church, Sunday evening. Dr. Strong likened Washington to Moses, the great deliverer of an unorganized horde of people from a powerful enemy and the founder of a new nation on principles of righteousness and godliness. In the words of Lincoln, "To add greatness to the name of Washington, or to add brightness to the sun, are alike impossible."

"Washington was great, first physically," said Dr. Strong. "Everyone entering his presence was awed by his powerful physique and courtly bearing. He was great in the things he attempted. What a gigantic task he had before him! On the west the hostile Indians; on the east a sea dotted with ships of the greatest nations on earth in naval prestige, a group of little unorganized and disunited colonies between, diversified in their political ideas and honeycombed with Toryism; no railroads, no telegraphs, a Congress only partially in sympathy with him, and no military training himself; this man to dare to attempt to unite and establish a nation out of this complexity of circumstances, what was to be but a giant?

"And not only was he great in his attempts, but equally great in execution. He carried to victory that pitifully meager little army amid those fearful odds. Great in physique; great in executive ability, still greater was he in character. A man who was complete master of himself great in the details of his life as well as in his management of the affairs of a nation, great in his utter unselfishness and devotion to his God. Is it not strikingly significant that our country had at the foundation of its history this colossal hero, enshrined forever in the hearts of a grateful people, a people which will continue to be great only in proportion as they cherish the principles upon which he, the Father of his Country founded the nation." At the conclusion of the service, David Claren was received into fellowship through the ordnance of baptism.

Atlantic City, Feb. 24—A State organization to fight the mosquito pest was effected before the adjournment here of the conference of the county mosquito examination boards. Vannarel, of Hasbrouck Heights; secretary-treasurer, Dr. T. J. Headlee, of New Brunswick, entomologist of the New Jersey Experiment Station and executive officer in charge of the work of mosquito extermination; legislative committee, W. C. Hope, of Roselle; Dr. H. H. Brinkerhoff, of Jersey City; C. H. Cramer, of Manahawken, and Dr. William Westcott, of Berlin.

GIRL STILL MISSING FROM BELLE MEAD SANITARIUM

Somerville, Feb. 24.—It is now six weeks since Emma Haustein disappeared from the Belle Mead Farm Colony and Sanitarium and no trace of her has been found. Relatives and friends of the missing girl have exhausted their inquiries, and have even traveled about the vicinity of the sanitarium in search of her.

The girl's brother, Gustav Haustein, Jr., who is connected with the American Lithographic Company, of Manhattan, says it is inconceivable how the girl could have disappeared so completely.

"It would be comprehensible in a large city where the turn of a street corner would mean the losing of a trace," he said, "but in an isolated country, where objects could be seen for many miles, it seems impossible. We were informed by the officials at the sanitarium that my sister left shortly after luncheon on the evening of January 6. It was a bitter cold night, and we were told that she left without hat or coat, clad only in a summer dress and sweater coat.

"The nurse missed her at 5:30 o'clock: and beyond that information we have nothing to go by. I was in hopes that the wide circulation of the Newark News, which contained my sister's picture a few days after her disappearance, might result in her being located. As time passes we can hardly bear the suspense, and we will pay any amount within means to have her restored to us alive, if she is still living, or her body, if she is dead."

Miss Haustein is described as thirty years old, a pronounced blonde, with a slight cast in the right eye, five feet seven inches tall, and about 125 pounds in weight.

WILSON'S TRIBUTE TO WASHINGTON'S DEEDS

Braves a Blizzard to Attend the Celebration.

Alexandria, Va., Feb. 24.—President Woodrow Wilson joined with thousands of other native born Virginians here in celebrating the anniversary of the birth of George Washington. Forgetful of his recent illness, he braved the worst blizzard and snowstorm of the year to review the annual parade in this little town, which is the seat of Washington's home county of Fairfax.

The Alexandria celebration of Washington's birthday differs from every other celebration of the event in many ways. The day is a bigger day in this town than Christmas or New Year's or even the Fourth of July. Everybody keeps open house to former Alexandrians who make this a homecoming day. Business stops entirely. The Friendship Fire association, of which Washington was a member, vies with the Masonic lodge, which also lays claim to Washington as a member, for the applause of the crowd.

All Fairfax gives over the day to dancing and every other kind of merrymaking within the imagination of a colonial Virginia town which never has outgrown itself. The celebration added something to the traditions of previous occasions. There were nearly 30,000 people in town, and at least 10,000 American flags were fluttering in the snowstorm. The parade was as brilliant as could be, and then the celebration gained importance in the minds of all the participants because the president of the United States, who took part, was after a lapse of many years once more a Virginian.

WAR COLLEGE READY TO ACT

The Last Button Is Sewed on and All Precautions Are Taken.

Washington, Feb. 24.—Everything possible in the way of preparation for intervention in Mexico has been done by both branches of the service, it was learned here, and no farmer is more familiar with the path from his house to his barn than are the military officers of the war college with the principal routes in Mexico, particularly those to Mexico City.

The condition of all the railways of that country, the train schedules, number of engines and cars, the water supply and the general topography have all been gone over minutely. Mere maps and figures are not depended upon. Thousands of photographs have been taken by secret agents—even including long strings of moving picture films.

IF KIDNEYS AND BLADDER BOTHER

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Neutralize Irritating Acids.

Kidney and bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse, again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trouble.—Adv.

HONOR PATRIOTS

was an excellent one. Joseph F. O'Keefe was toastmaster.

Judge Sullivan said in part:

"This country is the greatest country on the face of the earth because it is founded upon the moral ideal that all men are created free and equal. George Washington, the first president of this country, was the greatest ruler that the wold has ever known, because he was imbued with this moral ideal. When the proposition that all men are created equal was first promulgated the nations of the world were shocked and the argument that ensued was not favorable to the conclusion which our distinguished ancestors held. It was claimed that all men are not born equal because some are born rich and others poor; some are intellectual giants while others have feeble mentality, but these arguments were all answered thus wise: Every man has a mortal soul like unto the God that made him. Therefore, all men are brothers and are entitled to equal opportunities in this life.

"No greater proof of the quality of men has ever been minifested than in the lives of these two men whose memory you honor tonight. Washington, an aristocrat, enjoyed all of the benefits of an education that money and the facilities of his times could afford, while Lincoln, who preserved what Washington helped to found, was born in a poverty so abject that he was frequently without food sufficient to sustain his body. He had no opportunities of acquiring an education and the few books that he was able to read were borrowed from friends who lived some distance from his cabin home, but he willingly sacrificed the time and the effort necessary to get these books that he might acquire knowledge, meagre though it was.

"When Lincoln had attained an advanced age, but before he attained the greatness which makes him dear to us all, his library consisted of a copy of the Bible and Shakespeare. The question is frequently mooted which was the greatest man, Washington or Lincoln? It makes no difference which was greatest because they were both great and on one can detract from or add to the greatness they attained.

"When we were a struggling nation, it was the immortal Monroe who proclaimed to the nations of the world that this continent could no longer be considered the subject of further colonization. This pronouncement is called the Monroe doctrine. It is the voice of the big American brother, warning the nations of the world not to interfere with the little American brothers to the south of us, who are trying to fashion a government like unto our own.

"Woodrow Wilson will, in years to come, be regarded as having been as great a statesman as Monroe because of his Mexican policy. The nations of the world do not approve of Wilson's policy, but when he told Huerta that this country could never recognize a government whose leader had attained his place and power as a result of murder, he again emphasized the moral ideals which have helped to make this nation great. And, when those who exploit the southern republics fully understood that they will not be recognized by us they are going to endeavor to acquire such power as may come to them by only legitimate means and the petty revolutions that have stained the pages of history in the past will not be repeated again."

Rev. Father John A. Muiry said in part:

"The Roman Catholic Church is the strongest bulwark that the constitution of the United States has, because that church teaches that all rightful authority comes from God and in the constitution and the authority of our president, we see the authority of God. There is nothing in the teachings of the Catholic Church that menace this government, its institutions, or any branch of its citizenship. The Church is the enemy of divorce, because divorce wrecks the home, and if the home is the cornerstone of the nation, the moment that you disturb the cornerstone you disturb the nation. The Church opposes socialism, because it is contrary to the law of God. We say to the poor man Christ, who died for you and me, was a poor man. If he could suffer the privations of this life you must accept what God has decreed to be your lot and your reward in the world to come will compensate for all that you have endured. We take the rich man by the throat and shake him, at the same time demanding that he shall give to labor the just rewards of honest toil. We tell him that the wealth that he enjoys has been entrusted to his keeping by God to be dispensed among the needy poor. We remind him that this life is but a transitory one in which preparation should be made for a spiritual existence and that the way we live here shall determine our happiness hereafter.

"The Catholic Church inculcates in the mind of every boy and girl a love for God and a true respect for their fellows. With the principles engraven upon their hearts they cannot help but be good American citizens.

"When I became a Catholic priest I did not sacrifice my manhood, nor was I asked to sacrifice it. I did not sacrifice my nationality or my love for this, the land of my birth, and it shall be my dying wish that this crucifix, which I hold so dear as the symbol of man's redemption, wrapped in the Stars and Stripes, shall appear before my dying eyes when my soul goes to its maker. The red stripes in that flag are symbolical of the Irish, German, French and Polish Catholics who died that this nation might be established in freedom and independence. And, because of this, the Catholics have no apology to offer in honoring the memory of a man whose military genius helped to found this nation and the other man whose great, humanitarian heart helped to preserve it."

AWAIT FIRST DAY'S REPORT

$3,250. The association hopes to cancel this note as well as to raise the $6,000 necessary for the yearly budget in the present campaign.

The Plainfield Y. W. C. A. was started seven years ago with a membership of 518. Today the membership is nearly 1,000. The close fellowship, the earnest co-operation, the stronger bodies due to the splendid physical training, the good work done in the domestic science and art classes, all prove the advantages that have been gained through the opportunities offered by the Y. W. C. A. An important branch of the work is that for the juniors, who are girls under sixteen years of age, and in connection with that department the housekeeping centre, equipped and supported by a member of the executive board, is a model apartment where every duty of the house is made an art and where the little girls are taught how to make perfect homes, under the supervision of Miss Beatrice Gardner, a graduate of Mechanic's Institute, of Rochester, N. Y.

The gymnasium, although inadequate to the needs, gives the best of everything for body, mind and spirit to the members, so far as its facilities allow.

Wherever there is a woman whose life is not a perfect round, there is the association field. Its work is preventive and aims to raise character standards and to develop Christian womanhood. Beginning with the smallest girls in the junior department, this ideal pervades all branches of the work. The work is adapted to meet the needs of the employed girl, the girl of leisure, the school girl and the foreign girl. Of the membership, nearly one-half are self-supporting, and about two-thirds are definitely connected with some of the association classes or clubs. For the girl who pays only $1 for membership, the association offers the use of the circulating library, membership in the Glee Club, English classes, Bible and mission study classes, the general use of the building, the social life and the friendliness of all other members. In some of the educational classes, such as dressmaking, millinery and embroidery, cooking and elocution, there is a small fee. There are about 200 girls enrolled in the educational classes. The most popular is the dressmaking class in which there are sixty-five members. The library has over 1,200 volumes and 15 regular magazine publications. The circulation of books last year was 1800. It is now a branch of the Plainfield Public Library from which members are privileged to draw books.

In the junior department there are 175 members, who pay 50 cents a year for membership. They are organized into four sewing and playhour clubs.

In the religious work department, there are four Bible classes and one mission study class each week, a vesper service one Sunday afternoon each month and an informal song service on all other Sunday afternoons. Each year in November the world's week of prayer is observed, and in the summer delegations are sent to the association conferences and camps.

Fifteen cent suppers are served on Monday nights for the benefit of the girls in the educational classes, and on Saturday nights for the accommodation of those employed in the stores and for late shoppers. In the general office there is an employment bureau and a board and room directory. Six rooms are reserved for transient lodgers, which are much appreciated by women who are changing their employment, women who are spending a few days in the city alone, and by strangers who are looking for permanent lodgings.

Miss Elizabeth Wetherell, the physical director in her department, has nine classes, two clubs and three camp fire groups. Over one hundred members are enrolled in the regular classes. There is great need for a new gymnasium, which can also be used as an auditorium. It was to anticipate this need and protect the interests of the Young Women's Christian Association that the property at 218 East Front street was purchased last spring.

CUBA'S INDEPENDENCE DAY.

Havana, Feb. 24.—Havana today observed its customary holiday in celebration of the nineteenth anniversary of the declaration of independence and the commencement of the revolution which, with the intervention of the United States, culminated in the freedom of Cuba from Spanish rule. All public offices and many business houses remained closed for the day, while the populace indulged in an elaborate program of festivities.

Feb. 24.—The Federation of Jewish Farmers, which has a considerable membership in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts and several other States, is holding its annual "farmers' week" gathering here. The program provides for lectures on poultry, dairy and feed crop topics, as well as extensive laboratory and demonstration work.

GIMBEL Player-Piano Club

Do You Realize What a Remarkably Fine Instrument You Are Buying on the Easy Club Plan in

The CONREID Player-Piano At $385

For $5 Cash and Then $2 a Week?

Altogether, this is such an extraordinary player-piano proposition that it is worth while to go over it and pick out the features that put it in a different class from all other offerings of the kind.

The Difference

The CONREID is our own Player-Piano, made for us by the Milton Piano Company right here in New York. There is nothing obscure or untried about it.

It is made by experts from start to finish—men who are held together and kept interested in their work and their factory by a liberal bonus system that puts a premium on good work and long service.

The materials are selected with a care that is not excelled, no matter what the price of the instrument may be. For instance, the beautiful veneers used in finishing the cases are thicker than those ordinarily used in making pianos, and are cross veneered, to prevent warping, on clear white wood—five thicknesses, in all.

The same excellence runs all the way through—the sweet, sympathetic tone, the pleasant touch and the remarkably responsive standard player-action, which is used in thousands of fine player pianos today.

The architecture of the cases is simple, but beautiful—in the classic Sheraton style—in the favorite Stickley, fumed and weathered oak finishes, as well as in rich mahogany.

The Price, $385, Is Another Marvel

Our fixed regular price for this size and style of the CONREID Player-Piano is $435. At that, it holds its own remarkably well with instruments selling at far higher prices.

But under the Club Plan, this beautiful Player-Piano sells for only $385—and it is absolutely impossible to match the CONREID at this price, even if you paid cash for it.

Under the Club Plan you have 190 weeks to pay for the CONREID WITHOUT AN ADDED CENT FOR INTEREST OR EXTRAS. That is all taken care of in the club price of the instrument. Look how easy it is:

$5 Cash — Is Your First Payment as a Club Member on the CONREID, Which Sends the Piano to Your Home—Then — $2 Weekly

By this arrangement you save $50 on our regular cash price of the CONREID, which is $435, while paying for it in little easy sums.

But you save $97.50 over our usual price of the CONREID when we sell it on time payments, which price is $482.50!

And Then You Can Save $38 More!

You do it in this way:—Under the regular club plan you pay $5 down and then $2 a week. But if you wish to pay for the Piano more quickly, we make it worth your while to do so by allowing you a

Rebate of 20 Cents on Each $2 Payment made in advance of the time when it is due. Thus, if you make the 190 payments all at one time—in other words, pay cash for the CONREID—you save $38 in addition to the $97.50 saved by the splendid co-operative plan, or $135.50 in all. Fair enough, isn't it?

Thus the CONREID Player-Piano Costs You But $347 for Cash and we know of no like player-piano opportunity in the whole world.

Since the club opened a week ago the selling of instruments has been little short of extraordinary. The Club can run for a short time, at best; for 500 instruments—all we have—are not many to be distributed among the six million people in and near New York. But they are going even more quickly than we anticipated, and the time to come and claim your CONREID is NOW.

Better try to make it tomorrow; or clip the attached coupon and mail it to us TODAY. It will bring you full information, although we should rather have you see and hear and try the instruments in our Piano Store, Eighth Floor.

MADELEINE FORCE ASTOR.

Widow of Titanic Hero Attends Suffrage Meeting.

Suffrage leaders were pleased because Mrs. John Jacob Astor has attended her first suffrage meeting. Another to make her debut in suffrage yesterday was Mrs. Sidney Farrar, mother of Miss Geraldine Farrar, the prima donna. Mrs. Astor, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. William H. Force, and her sister, Miss Katherine Force, attended the meeting at the Vanity Fair tearoom to hear Mrs. Josephine Preston Peabody Marks speak under the auspices of the Women's Political union. Mrs. Thomas L. Chadbourne was hostess of the afternoon.

SULZER BEGINS SUIT TO RETAIN HIS OFFICE

Demands Writ Compelling Payment of Salary.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 24.—Assemblyman William Sulzer, who was deposed as governor by the court of impeachment Oct. 16, 1913, has instituted proceedings through which he hopes to have the United States supreme court pass upon the legality of his removal from office. Upon motion of Colonel Alexander S. Bacon, Mr. Sulzer's personal counsel, Supreme Court Justice Alden Chester of Albany granted an order to show cause why a peremptory or alternative writ of mandamus should not be issued against State Comptroller William Sohmer why Sulzer should not receive his salary as governor since he was removed from office. Attorney General Thomas Carmody served notice upon Justice Chester that he would oppose the granting of the relief sought and obtain time in which to submit a brief in opposition to the motion. Justice Chester, however, signified his intention to refuse granting the writ as a matter of law and not as a matter of discretion, declaring that the courts had already passed upon this question when the court of impeachment voted in favor of Sulzer's removal.

It was agreed by Mr. Carmody and Colonel Bacon to facilitate the determination of the questions involved by the courts of this state. The appellate division of the supreme court at Albany will be asked to affirm Justice Chester's proposed order denying the granting of the writ, and the case will immediately be carried to the court of appeals, where a similar request will be made. In this way Mr Sulzer will be able to carry the matter through the supreme court of the United States with as little delay as possible. However, lawyers here agree that it will be at least a year before the questions involved can be heard by the federal court. In the meantime, Governor Glynn's term of office will have expired on Dec. 31.

WEST IN GRIP OF BLIZZARD.

Twin Storms Carry Sleet and Snow From Missouri to Montana.

Chicago, Feb. 24.—Two blizzards were raging west of Chicago, badly hampering traffic and communication. The center of one of the storms was in Arkansas and the fifty-two mile an hour wind carrying sleet and snow was raging in Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma. Near zero temperatures prevailed. The other storm centered in Montana and was sweeping eastward.

Vera Cruz, Feb. 24.—Fifty-five Mexican officers and men and the English locomotive engineer were killed when the government troop train carrying a company of infantry from Mexico city toward Jalapa was blown up on Feb. 21 by rebels near the Lima station of the Interoceanic railway, 140 miles from Vera Cruz.

The entire train was demolished.

MORRISTOWN HAS $100,000 BLAZE

Eighteen Thousand Books Destroyed In Library Fire.

SOME CANNOT BE REPLACED

No One In Building at Time of Fire, and It Gained Great Headway Before Being Discovered—Starts From Overheated Furnace—Books Afford Fine Fuel For Flames.

Morristown, N. J., Feb. 24.—Fire destroyed the Morristown library and lyceum, a granite structure which was one of the largest in the city. The library's entire collection of books, some 18,000 volumes, many of which were rare works on early New Jersey history, were lost. The damage to the building is estimated at $100,000. No value has been set on the books destroyed, for some of them were rare volumes which cannot be replaced.

The building was the property of the Morristown Library and Lyceum association, which was formed nearly half a century ago. The first floor was occupied by the library and the Morris academy, a private institution conducted by Henry W. Landseer, which was attended by about fifty boys from the wealthy families living here. The upper floors were occupied by a large dancing hall, lodge rooms and offices.

The fire started from an overheated furnace in the basement. There was no one in the building at the time, and the fire had spread up into the library and the schoolroom when it was discovered. The books and magazines afforded fine fuel for the flames, and by the time the firemen arrived and under the direction of Chief Wilbur F. Day got their hose in action it was seen that the building was doomed. Fireman William M. Ridge, while stretching a line into the building, was overcome by smoke. He was carried out and revived by Dr. Ralston Reed.

COMMUTERS WIN FIGHT.

Erie Will Allow Them to Use Tickets Between Stations.

Jersey City, Feb. 24.—That commuters on the Erie may after all use their commutation tickets between stations is the edict of Passenger Agent R. H. Wallace of the Erie issued in reply to formal queries addressed to the Erie Railroad company by Secretary W. T. Wright of the Bergen County Progressive committee.

Mr. Wallace's representative in a long talk with Mr. Knight has explained that it is not the purpose of the Erie rigidly to enforce the new rule printed on the commutation tickets to the effect that commuters will not be allowed to ride between stations on the strength of their commutation tickets. Mr. Wallace's representative stated that the rule was aimed primarily at certain drummers and salesmen who abused the privileges conferred by their commutation ticket.

DRUGGIST NOT FOUND YET.

Banks Refused to Extend Time For Missing Newark Man.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 24.—No word has been received from George Brown, Jr., the druggist who went away last Wednesday without telling his relatives or business associates where he was going. As a result of worry over the disappearance of her husband, Mrs. Brown is under the care of a physician at her home.

The note transactions by which Brown financed his business operations are variously described as ranging from $40,000 to $60,000. According to reports, the banks which held these notes refused to give an extension of time.

Experts are making an examination of a number of building and loan associations of which Brown was secretary.

MARRIES ON DEATHBED.

Camden Man Weds Sweetheart of Thirteen Years.

Camden, N. J., Feb. 24.—Told by his physician that he had less than twenty-four hours to live, Howard Schemeley, twenty-eight years old, of this city expressed a wish that he might be married to the girl who had been his sweetheart thirteen years.

After a license had been obtained and Public Prosecutor Kraft had given permission to waive the law requiring twenty-four hours between the issuance of a license and the marriage Schemeley was married to Miss May Connelly, twenty-six years old, of this city. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Daniel Johnson. Schemeley was a railroad engineer.

Jewelry Store Robbed.

Paterson, N. J., Feb. 24.—Burglars broke into the jewelry store of Benjamin Salsberg and stole $500 worth of watches and jewelry. Salsberg was only three doors from Max Menein's jewelry house, where thieves got $1,000 worth of loot a week ago. Salsberg, who lived over his store, closed shop about 7 p. m., and an hour later he heard noises downstairs. On investigation he found his place had been robbed. He carried no insurance.

Easy Win Over Bernardsville High School Gives Boroughites Second Honor.

REPETITION OF 1912

Home Team Resorts to Rough House Tactics—Locals Use Substitutes—The Score, N. P. H. S., 62; Bernardsville, 12.

Winning the Somerset county basketball championship from the Bernardsville High School team was not so much of a job as the North Plainfield High School boys expected. There was nothing to it during the entire game except a little roughhouse that the home team gave the spectators. The contest was uninteresting throughout and after the first few minutes of play the locals were conceded the title by all present. The final count was 62 to 12.

The boroughites had their regular lineup to start with the exception of Abrams, and Newkirk was sent in to cover his guard position. Three passes took the ball to North Plainfield's basket in the first ten seconds of play, but the basket was missed. The ice was broken soon after, however, when Dunning pushed one in after Love had failed to shot a foul. The home team was called many times in the first period for foul dribbling, but Love appeared to have pity for his opponents because he missed chances galore to increase the score by single points. The "Canadians" had scored fully two dozen points, which they considered a comfortable lead, before the Bernards boys made a tally and this came when Bird made a beautiful shot from the centre of the court. The borough boys had a few fouls called on them, but they did not count against them in the score-book. The first half ended with the score standing 39 to 6.

The boroughites played strictly defensive ball in the second half and did not score as often as in the first, but kept their opponents down to a half a dozen tallies. About the middle of the period Love and VanMater were replaced by Conroy and Townley at forward. The former made six field goals while playing, but Townley could not seem to get the ball in the basket. Dunning was high score man of the game, getting thirteen of the two-point variety, with Love second best, with eight field goals and three fouls. For the home team, Bird and Meaney divided the scoring honors between them.

The borough team was accompanied on the trip by a large crowd of rooters who were carried in two large box bobs that were chartered for the occasion. Those who saw the local basketeers take the county title are the Misses Amelia Brizzie, Margaret Brizzie, Margaret Ewart, Ethel Hilpot, Elizabeth Hilpot, Lucy Douglas, Marjorie Burtis, Jubilee Rowley, Edith Dalley, Jessie Stewart, Lillian Spencer, and Lester Chandler, Roscoe VanCamp, Charles Beckman and Ralph Smalley. The Misses Helen K. Ray and Grace Winnie, teachers in the borough school, acted as chaperones.

NEWS DISPATCH SAYS JACK WILL PLAY THE OUTFIELD

Of the thirty-five Yankees who went to Bermuda with the Frank Chance outfit last season only five will be with the club on its coming training trip—Ray Caldwell, Ray Fisher, Roy Hartzell, Ray Keating and Heinie Schultz. The Federals are partly responsible for this condition and in reviewing the matter the New York Press says:

"Perhaps nothing shows better the awful task Frank Chance had ahead of him last spring, and explains why he won so few games early last season, as the fact that of the big mob released only Hal Chase and Lelivelt remain in the big leagues, and the latter acting only as a pinch hitter. Jack Martin and George Davis, who also made the trip, are now the property of the Boston Braves, and Jack may stick with the Braves as a utility infielder. He seemed to have a fine career ahead of him until Walter Johnson beaned him in 1912."

RAY DUTCHER MAKES BIG HIT IN TWO EXHIBITIONS

Ray Dutcher, a graduate of the Plainfield High School in the class of 1904, and the present club swinging champion of the Intercollegiate Gymnastic Association, appeared in a double program in two cities Saturday night, making a big hit with his specialty on both occasions. Early in the evening Dutcher gave a masterly exhibition of his specialty in connection with the Free Dental Clinics benefit held in the Elizabeth armory and later entertained the members of the Prudential Insurance Athletic Association in the new Newark auditorium.

Both of his demonstrations were the cause for much favorable comment and he gave excellent exhibitions of skill and endurance in both cities. At the present time Dutcher is a member of the New York Athletic Club and will appear in the National Gymnastic Championships next month.

ROSELLE HIGH TEAM AGAIN BEATS HOPE

Locals No Match for Speedy Alumni Basket Tossers—Game Was Fast.

The Roselle Park High School Alumni basketball team once more proved the nemesis of the Hope Chapel boys' team here Saturday night, trimming the locals by a count of 30 to 24 in a fast and well played game on the Fourth street court.

Montgomery proved to be the whole show at centre for the visitors. This individual standing six feet, five inches in heighth, had little trouble in bagging four neat field goals and a quartet of fouls. Pease led the field goal, shooting six field goals. Tommy Heron led the home team with four shots from the field.

LOCAL YOUTH STILL COLLEGE CHAMPION

"Rus" Miller Successfully Defends Title in Meet With Navy Team.

Russell Miller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dudley S. Miller, of Union street, successfully defended his title of intercollegiate champion on the flying rings at Annapolis Saturday afternoon in a dual meet between the gymnastic teams of the University of Pennsylvania and the Annapolis Naval Academy. Miller is captain of the Penn gym team this year and also holds the honor of being the president of the Intercollegiate Gymnastic Association.

Miller won the intercollegiate title in the all-round championships held in New York last spring and had little trouble in trimming the midshipmen rivals Saturday. The Plainfielder made a fine showing in some of the most difficult and thrilling moves, turning the back cut-off and flying dismount in excellent form. Several members of the Penn team were ill Saturday and as a result the meet honors went to the navy. Miller has an excellent team at his command this season and hopes to duplicate the championship winning feat of last year.

The Penn captain is a graduate of the Plainfield High School and winner of the Yale cup in the class of 1910. He is well known locally for his all around athletic ability and spent much of his time practising on the rings in the local Y. M. C. A. during the winter months.

WORLD'S BEST EXHIBITION HAS LOCAL PRIZE WINNERS

Abram G. Hooley, of North Plainfield, is the leading exhibitor of English setters in the thirty-eighth annual bench show of the Westminister Kennel Club which opened in the Grand Central Palace, New York, yesterday. The show list includes the best of almost every known breed in the United Stats and England, and the exhibition is the best in the world at this time.

The Meadowview Kennels, of this city, lead in English and Irish setters, and it is probable that many of the handsome prizes offered will come to local fanciers. A large number of Plainfielders attended the opening of the show yesterday and commented on the show as the best ever held in this country.

HOLY CROSS FOOTBALLISTS POSE FOR THE CAMERA MAN

The much deferred "snapping" of the Holy Cross football team member was completed in Stone's studio, Sunday afternoon, the gridiron warriors and those directly interested in the club being photographed in a group.

Included in the "art panel" were Captain Jack Wilson, Manager "Doc" Doyle, Jack Caulfield, Edward Bremble, Jack Ricketts, Myrton Glover, Bill Coyle, John Mair, Dick Harrigan George Webster, Jesse Mulford, Walter Cummings, Bill Ruttledge and Dr. French. Several members of the team were unable to be present at the time and the missing include Jack Fritts, Jerry Manning, Frank Clarke, W. C. Smith and Coach Martin.

CHICKEN FANCIER HAS SOME ADVICE

Scotch Plains Bird Man Examines the Feathers to Tell a Good Layer.

William Cook, proprietor of the large poultry farm near Scotch Plains, selects his laying hens by observing the feathers of the barnyard fowl and many local fanciers have been eager to learn for a long time past just how he singles out the egg producers. The expert selects the laying hen by examining the short feathers that grow on each side at the base of the comb. If these feathers curl up and are inclined to point forward the hen is a good layer, and if they lie smoothly, the points lying flat, the hen is a poor layer.

A heavy layer usually has a comb larger than the average of her breed. The comb is bright red; the eye bright; the neck rather longer than the average; breast broad and somewhat receding from top to bottom; back longer and wider at the hips than at the shoulders; abdomen deep, the lower line being lower than the lower line of the breasts; tail well spread; legs wide apart.

An examination of the pelvis bones will show that those of a heavy layer are either wide apart or flexible. If the bones are set together and hard to separate the chances are that the hen is a poor layer.

BERKELEY SCHOOL PLAYERS WILL APPEAR IN Y. M. C. A.

The Leal School basketball team is resting up today for one of the most important games of the season, which will be played in the local Y. M. C. A. gym tomorrow afternoon, against the strong Berkeley School quintet, of New York city. The Manhattan schoolboys have been cleaning up on many of the fatest teams representing private institutions of learning in and about the big city and are coming here to smother the Plainfielders if possible.

Included in the lineup of the visitors will be Murray Hall, a Fanwood youth, who is a student in Berkeley and he is down to perform at forward for the invaders. The locals will have their regular lineup on hand for the contest.

COME-BACK EFFORT FUTILE.

The effort of a quintet of feminine athletes to come-back to old time form on the Saengerbund Hall court Friday night, was anything but auspicious. Hampered by lack of practise and a long lay-off the former stars of the court put up an exhibition that fell far short of what they are capable of and as a result a rival team, that under former conditions would have been an easy victim, walked away with the verdict on this occasion. Pugilists and baseball performers are not the only athletes trying to re-establish former laurels and the malady has now invaded the feminine element.

CROOKS, BEWARE!

Members of the metropolitan police force have brought world-wide recognition to the metropolis force through phenomenal work on the athletic field and track and several of New York's finest have been sent as Uncle Sam's representatives to the Olympic games. When the next international meet blows around one of Plainfield's law enforcers will probably be enrolled on the roster of athletes who represent America at the Olympic games. Jack Fritts, one of the best known athletes in this section, has applied for one of the vacancies and it is a safe bet that he will not be overlooked by the police board when the appointments are handed out.

A TESTIMONIAL.

In recognition of the valuable services he has rendered to the athletic department of Hope Chapel during the winter months, Jack Martin was tendered a reception by the Hope boys in the chapel last night, the affair being one of the enjoyable features for which Hope Chapel is noted. Jack has devoted much time and effort to the cause of sports in Hope chapel and the celebration last night was a fitting finale for his work.

With a few more trainers like Martin basketball would be established on a much higher plane in these parts. At present good coaches are few in this section.

Those still living after the many postponements necessitated in having that Holy Cross picture taken went through the ôdeal in fine form Sunday afternoon. Evidently the survival of the fittest in this case.

Gasoline clouds the air in this section of the State this week. The big auto show at Newark has much to offer for automobile enthusiasts, including the Tango clutch, the spark plug hesitation and the six-cylinder glide. Many Plainfielders have taken advantage of the opportunity to view these new steps.

The Federal League has 200 ball players on its roster at the present time. With an eight team circuit this will mean twenty-five players per outfit. The new organization is well supplied with material at any rate and will probably have to do some figuring to keep within the player limit.

Woman is coming more and more to the fore in every walk of life, as evidenced on the 1914 Sportsmen's show program where the gentler sex bulks exceedingly large. Many of the star performers in the big annual event are women athletes.

Another Plainfield High School product is bearing his alma mater's silks in foreign territory. Ray Dutcher, '04, the intercollegiate club swinging champion, was the main figure in a gala event in Betsytown, Saturday night.

Splinters will begin to fly in that Elks' Club bowling tournament Thursday night. Watch these columns for the accurate accounts of all matches and the league averages as issued by Secretary Nash.

WAGNER'S 40TH MILESTONE.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 24—Honus Wagner, shortstop of the Pittsburgh National League baseball team and one of the best known players in the history of the sport, received a flood of congratulations from friends and admirers today on the occasion of his fortieth birthday anniversary. Wagner was born in Carnegie, Pa., and still makes that place his home. He began his baseball career in 1895 with the Steubenville team in the old Central Association. Since he joined the National League in 1897 Wagner has never failed to bat for a season's average below .300. He is now preparing for the trip to Hot Springs to get into condition for his eighteenth year in the big league and his fourteenth consecutive season with th Pirates.

PITCHER UNDER KNIFE.

Port Jervis, N. Y., Feb. 24—"Smoky Joe" Wood, the famous pitcher of the Boston Red Sox, underwent an operation for appendicitis Sunday, at his country home at Twin Lake. The operation which was performed by Drs. Gessner and Skinner, of this city, was successful and the patient was reported to be resting comfortably.

ON THE PUGILISTIC CALENDAR.

Butte, Mont., Feb. 24—The Butte fight fans are looking forward to an interesting bout tomorrow night, when Jimmy Fox and Danny Cummings are to come together for a twelve-round go before a local club. The two fighters are regarded as evenly matched and as they have long been rivals their meeting is expected to result in a lively encounter.

RECORDS WILL FALL AT INDOOR EVENT

Feature Event of the Year Will Be Run at Madison Square Garden Mar. 2.

The feature events at the Indoor Athetic Championships of America, which will be contested at Madison Square Garden on Monday evening, March. 2, will be the 75-yard championship, 600-yard championship and 2-mile championship. The sprint will bring together for the first time in a scratch race in that city, Lippincott, Patterson, Meyer, Stephenson and Heiland; for the 600-yard run, entries have already been received from "Ted" Meredith, the half-mile champion of the world; Halpin, of Boston, who has been the sensation of local athletic games this winter; Sheppard, the world's record holder for the distance; Kiviat, the present American champion; Homer Baker, the half-mile champion of America, and before the entries close on Saturday the committee expects the entries of Brock, of Canada, and Caldwell, of Cornell. These are the seven greatest middle distance runners in America, if not in the world, and the winner will truly be the champion of America.

The 1000-yard championship will bring together Kiviat, Hedlund, DeGrucey, Marceau and several of the other local stars.

The two-mile championship will give Hanne Kolehamainen a chance to get back at Billy Kramer, who defeated him in the two-mile special at the Irish-American A. C. games a week ago Saturday night. Kolehmainen is doing all short distance work in preparation for the race and the chances are that a new world's record will be established.

BIG SURPRISE FOR P. H. S. BASKETEERS

Leal School Quintet Nosed out High School Rivals by a Margin of Two Points.

Leal School basketball players sprang a big surprise in the Interscholastic League race, last night, by taking the Plainfield High School youths into camp with a score to 34 to 32. The victory of the private school youths was entirely unlooked for and the Plainfielders appeared dazed when the rival clan exhibited some real fighting for the decision.

For the most part the contest was exceedingly close, the teams alternating in field goal shooting and holding the lead, and at no time was the result of the match definite. The private school players came up from behind shortly after the initial period of play was ushered in and during the greater part of the second session held the lead, sometimes with a considerable margin to spare.

Little "Peanut" Stewart led the offensive work for the winning crew, bagging no less than sixteen points during the encounter, while Peacock led in this department for the losing crew. Captain Dickerson, Rosenson and Captain Hetfield also did some excellent work for their respective teams.

BARKS FROM DOGDOM

Rich though he may be in this world's goods,
Poor is he in the end
Who in his time hath never made
A dog his faithful friend?

Ranked in importance with the Horse Show as a distinctly society and sporting event, the thirty-eighth annual bench show of the Westminister Kennel Club opened in Grand Central Palace yesterday with a number of local entries and one local judge. Plainfield dog lovers are taking an active interest in the big show and many were present when the exhibition was opened to th public.

"Dick" Harrigan, of South avenue, is the possessor of one of the finest thoroughbred bull dog kennels in this vicinity. Dick is a football player during the fall months and his sporting blood turns to raising canines in the winter.

A movement is now on foot to have all the Toy clubs consolidate under one head. There are a number of Toy poodles in this city and borough registered on one roster or another and the combining of the clubs would probably be very advantageous to the interests of dog breeders.

Miss Alice Brownell, owner of Sachusett Kennels, has just purchased from George Thomas the young Irish terrier bitch, Leonora. This dog is just one year of age and has never been shown.

It is reported that Mrs. Wylie, the Pomeranian fancier of Canada, is contemplating selling her entire kennel of prize dogs and returning to Scotland, her native country. Mrs. Wylie's dogs include many noted winners and some excellent breeding stock.

TAYLOR'S OVERTIME GOAL WON THE GAME

Y. M. C. A. Pulls up to Even Terms and Finally Beats All Star Aggregation.

One of the finest programs of basketball ever staged as a double header in this city was programmed in the Y. M. C. A. gym yesterday afternoon for lovers of the sport, the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. team defeating the Plainfield High School Alumni in the opening set-to after an overtime period of play and the Leal School youths winning a nip and tuck league game from Plainfield High School.

In the opening game, which was won by the association boys by a score of 30 to 28, an all-star cast lined up against the home team and the material on the visiting aggregation would be hard to duplicate as a unit again. Included in the personnel of the team were the Heron brothers, who are ninety per cent. of the Hope Chapel outfit; Al Brynairski, former captain of the Y. M. C. A. five; "Skipper" Woodhull, former captain of Plainfield High School, and "Ted" Gavett, former player on the Y. M. C. A. five.

The contest was replete with thrills and the playing was close and exciting from start to finish. The visiting team led by a score of 18 to 11 at the conclusion of the first session and when the whistle sounded ending the second half the teams were deadlocked for first place. Bill Taylor caged the winning goal for the Y. M. C. A. quintet after two minutes of overtime battling. Taylor led the Plainfield five in field goal caging, getting a half dozen of the two-point variety, while the Heron brothers led in this work for the Alumni aggregation.

THIS WAS ANOTHER W. F. A. TEAM THAT GRACE DEFEATED

The following statement has been received from the management of a Bound Brook basketball team in regard to a game, the result of which was sent to this paper by the Grace church manager last week.

Sporting Editor:

The W. F. A., of Bound Brook, wishes to correct the article which appeared in the Daily Press relating to a basketball game between the Grace church team and a team from Bound Brook using the W. F. A. name.

The team that played consisted of boys from 10 to 14 years and had little if any experience on a basketball court. As they have never played together before it was necessary for them to travel under an assumed name and the W. F. A. (the only team playing basketball in Bound Brook this season) name was used.

We wish to say that an injustice has been done to the W. F. A. and we would like to explain to the Grace team that it was a complete surprise to us to see the name in the paper, after several weeks of not playing.

Yours in sport,
A. C. BARRAS,
Manager of W. F. A.

LOG CABIN SHOOT.

The members of the Log Cabin Gun Club enjoyed a holiday shoot on their range yesterday afternoon, a large number of shorpshooters competing for the prizes offered. George Schoonmaker was awarded the annual Holiday Cup at that time.

ELKS' LEAGUE SCHEDULE.

The Hoboken Elks, of the antlered bowling league, will come to Plainfield tonight to roll a postponed series with the locals here. Rahway will play the Orangers on the latter's alleys.

GREAT TESTIMONIAL TO POPULAR PLAYER

Jack Martin the Guest of Honor in Hope Chapel Last Night.

Forty of those actively engaged in work for the welfare of athletics in Hope chapel attended a testimonial banquet given in honor of Jack Martin, the well known local ball player, who will leave next week to join the Boston Braves for the pennant race of 1914 in the National Baseball League. The affair was given in honor of Martin in recognition of the work he has done at the chapel during the winter months and the spirit of the banquet and social program was one of appreciation for his services.

During the evening an Elks' tooth watch charm was presented to the ball player as a token of appreciation from those whom he has benefitted on the coaching lines and in the capacity of athletic instructor at the chapel this winter. The testimonial was held under the auspices of the Young Men's Association, assisted by an auxiliary of young women.

George T. Leighs, another member of Hope chapel who has done much toward establishing the athletic interests of the institution on a firm basis, acted as toastmaster and speeches were made by Jack Martin, Rev. Frederick L. Greene, G. Herbert Condict, William Doig and Walter L. Firstbrook. The committee in charge of the event was composed of the following: Ernest Luthman, David Wardrop, Arthur Grisley, James Doig and Frank Clark. The women who assisted were the Misses Etta Bremmer, Anna Krietzieldt, Agnes Leighs and Eunice Eckert.

Newark bowlers rolled some fine tenpins in an Elks' Lague match at Elizabeth, last night, but only succeeded in getting one game in three from the Betsytown pin-knights, who were in grand form. The Newarks have now a lead of one game over the New Brunswicks in the battle for first place. Billy Weingarth, the Newark anchor, was the star performer. He had marks of 244, 224 and 205, for an average of 224-1. In the last game of the match the Newarks came through for 1,004 and, as the Elizabeths stopped at the 939, the Newarkers finished sixty-five pins ahead. The Elizabeths in the opening setto were there for 912 and finished just eight pins ahead of the local quintet. The scores:

CEDARCROFT HOCKEY TEAM EVENS SERIES

Defeats Cranford Handily in Second Game of the Year Played Yesterday.

Cedarcroft Hockey Club players evened up matters with the Cranford seven in connection with the annual series on the local rink yesterday afternoon, returning a score of 6 to 2. The first game was won by Cranford on a fluke, the final score being 1 to 0. In the first contest the lone goal was made on an illigetimate back return.

Clever skating on the part of Craig, Schoonmaker and Zerega, the latter a former Plainfield High School star, was responsible for the local's victory. The Plainfielders early put the rival crew on the defense and kept up a constant bombardment at the Cranford goal from whistle to whistle. Good work in warding off shots by the Cranford goal tender held the Plainfielders to the half dozen safeties.

The lineups and summary:

FITZ-O'BRIEN FEUD ENDS IN PEACE TOWN

Philadelphia Home of A. J. D. Biddle the Scene of Meeting of Old Rivals.

Anthony J. Biddle, founder of the Drexel-Biddle Bible Classes is successful in the role of peace-maker. He has brought together two such celebrities as Bob Fitzsimmons and Jack O'Brien, after a feud of long standing.

The Dunellenite has hated O'Brien since the latter defeated him in the prize ring. The fight destroyed Fitz's efficiency as a drawing card in pugilism and on the stage. In other words, the defeat virtually destroyed Fitz's means of earning a livelihood.

Biddle brought Fitzsimmons and O'Brien together at a dinner in his home in Philadelphia yesterday. When Fitz found himself face to face with his former opponent he clenched his fists and began to bluster. For a few minutes it looked as if trouble was eminent.

As the men sat down to the dinner table, O'Brien, said, "Bob, you say grace," and those few words had a magical effect on stilling the troubled waters.

"The clouds immediately rolled away," said Mr. Biddle, telling the story today. "The old friendship of these great pugilistic rivals was renewed and they left the house arm in arm."

RALPH RUNYON CAPTURED THIRD MEDAL IN MEET

Ralph Runyon was the only Plainfield High School representative to compete in the Dickinson High School field and track meet held in Jersey City yesterday afternoon, and through some clever leaping the local youth managed to win third place in the senior runing high jump with a jump of 5 feet 3 inches. Runyon entered the event handicapped by a sprained arm and had much difficulty in displaying his usual good form.

Morris Mann, another Plainfield High School track man, was also entered in the meet but had to withdraw at the last moment because of a cold.

FITZ HAD HIS HANDS FULL WITH A CRIPPLED FIGHTER

Boxing with a broken rib, suffered while training a week ago, but which was unknown to even his trainers, Jersey Bellew, former heavyweight champion of the Lehigh Valley, Friday night earned a draw with "Ruby Robert" Fitzsimmons, of Dunellen, in an exhibition bout in South Bethlehem, Pa.

Bellew demonstrated some clever ring generalship and kept the old man constantly on the defense. He warded off many of Bob's hard left hand lunges with the tact of a veteran and the two fighters alternated in landing blows.

CEDARCROFT REGULARS SENT IN AT THE RIGHT MOMENT

The Netherwood hockey team was defeated by the Cedarcroft seven on the Cedarcroft Rink yesterday afternoon, by a score of 5 to 4. During the first period substitutes played in the places of Craig and Schoonmaker and the Netherwood youths managed to gain a lead of 4 to 1.

In the final session the two regulars were rushed to the fore and Craig responded with four goals which tied the score and later won the game which early appeared to be a Netherwood victory.

THREE-POINT WIN FOR N. P. H. S. FIVE

Boro Girls Come Back From Roselle With a Verdict Against Home Quintet.

The North Plainfield High School girls' basketball team went to Roselle Park, yesterday afternoon, and came back with a three-point victory over the High school team of that place. This was the second meeting of the season of the two teams but this one was much more interesting than the first, which was won by the locals by a large score. The contest yesterday was fast in every respect, especially in the second half, when the home girls almost tied the score.

The home team took the lead from the start when Miss Miller caged a nice basket but when the boroughite scoring machine once began to work their opponents' score began to look small. Both teams committed many fouls and both teams took advantage of three of the free chances. In the latter part of the half Miss Douglas caged one of her sensational shots from the centre of the court and had hard luck on many other tries. The first half ended 14 to 4 in favor of the "Canadians."

The final period was played with side centres and Miss Brucknew, who played that position for Roselle Park, seemed to be the missing link of the first half and it was by her fast and accurate passing that the ball found the basket so many times in the last half. The boroughites were guilty of many mispiays in this half and the opposing foul shooters made good on five tries, which almost tied the score. Miss Spencer caged two field goals near the end of the game that gave the locals their winning points.

NOTABLE DECISION FOR Y. W. C. A. GIRLS

Local Association Quintet Defeats the Trentonians on Latter's Court.

Accomplishing a stunt seldom if ever turned by a visiting aggregation the Plainfield Y. W. C. A. basketball team won its way into the Hall of Fame, Saturday night, by turning the tables on the redoubtable Trenton Y. W. C. A. quintet on the latter's floor in one of the most sensational contests ever waged between these two rivals. The final score of 37 to 26 fails by far to show just how closely the issue was fought and neither quintet was ever in possession of a comfortable advantage.

The contest was either team's up until the final whistle blew and the Plainfielders were lucky to retain their advantage, which meant victory at the end of the second period of battling. Superior passing and better shooting in the second period was responsible for the local's victorious verdict and although behind at the end of the opening session the Queen City girls gradually crept up to within striking distance of their speedy rivals and finally succeeded in passing the Trentonian aggregation.

Some sensational shooting on the part of Miss Helen George and some equally as valuable guarding on the part of Miss Clara Smith went a long way toward bringing the verdict to Plainfield and the Capitol City five, which held a comfortable lead of 14 to 8 at the completion of the first round of play, appeared mystified by the visiting team's versatile awakening in the last stanza. During this session Miss "Dot" Hayes, who is the mainstay of the Trenton scoring machine in all games played by that team, was held scoreless as far as field goals were concerned. The final half was played without lines and with Miss Elizabeth Wetherell, the local association's director, refereeing.

All of the members of the Plainfield team did some excellent work in one department or another and the winter's laurels were pretty evenly divided at the conclusion of the contest. Miss Hayes was the shining light for the home five and played an individual game throughout. A return game will be played with the Trenton team here on March 21.

NEEDLEWORK

By

MARGARET LAWRENCE

DESIGN FOR A NET OR BATISTE COLLAR

This attractive collar may be embroidered on batiste, lawn or handkerchief linen in solid embroidery and buttonhole-stitch. Just now there is a fad of net neckwear and it is very dainty and pretty. Buy the finest of white cotton net, which comes at a dollar and a quarter a yard for the seventy-two-inch width, or seventy-five cents a yard for the thirty-six inch width. The finer the net the easier it will be to embroider it. Do not try to stamp the design on the net but baste the pattern to the under side of the material, then work over the paper with soft white mercerized cotton. The pattern will give a foundation to work on and can easily be torn away when the embroidery is finished.

Such a collar would be appropriate for wear with a frock or blouse of crêpe de chine, charmeuse, serge, eponge, taffeta or any cotton fabric.

The two small designs may be used for the tie-ends, pocket flaps or cuffs.

This pattern is enclosed in the Embroidery Book which illustrates over 500 designs for embroideries of all kinds including initials, scalloped borders, household linens, infants' clothes, children's clothes, blouses and many novelties. The Embroidery Book and collar pattern will be mailed to readers on receipt of mailing price, 8 cents.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

Bunchy underwear, unnecessary bands about the waist, high collars and generally uncomfortable designs have disappeared entirely from the small girl's wardrobe. Skirts are hung to separate underwaists, thus allowing all weight to depend from the shoulders, blouses are loose and easy and movement is hampered in no way. The long waisted Russian effects are especially good and well liked.

No. 7697 shows a pleated skirt attached to a separate underwaist and a low-belted blouse. Serge, linen, madras, or pique are all suitable and can be used to advantage with this design. A white chemisette gives a fresh, pretty appearance to the dress if a dark material is used; the collar and cuffs may be of plaid or another color.

This dress may be made for a child of 12 with 3¾ yards of 36 inch material and ⅝ of a yard of 36 inch muslin for the underwaist.

The pattern is cut in 4 sizes: 8 to 14.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, passing the tape around the widest part of the breast well up under the arms.

It may be obtained by filling out the coupon and enclosing 15 cents in stamps or coin to the Pattern Department of this paper.

Apples Stuffed With Raisins.

THE amount of nourishment in raisins and their delicate flavor commend them as frequent ingredients in desserts. Some helpful hints along this line are given here.

Nice For Breakfast.

Apples Stuffed With Raisins.—Take large, perfect Greening apples, pare and core, making the cavity in coring larger than usual. Prepare a stuffing of finely chopped, seeded raisins that have been thoroughly washed, a generous lump of butter and a little salt. Stuff the apples very compactly and sprinkle over all some sugar. Tie each apple in a clean linen cloth like an English plum pudding and cook two hours in boiling water. Then serve immediately, when very hot, with thick hard sauce or cream sauce.

Raisin Pie.—Remove the seed from a pound of fine raisins and stew them until tender in two cupfuls of water. Add to them a cupful of sugar and a tablespoonful of molasses, the juice of one sweet orange and half its grated rind, the juice of one lemon and half its grated rind, two eggs beaten to a froth, a piece of butter the size of an egg and a generous thickening of well dried bread crumbs. Flavor with cinnamon and salt and bake in one or two crusts as preferred. When one crust is used, cover the top with meringue.

Wholesome Puddings.

Raisin Rice Pudding.—Boil the rice until tender. Then take one and one-half cupfuls of the cooked rice, one quart milk, three eggs beaten light, four tablespoonfuls sugar, one teaspoonful vanilla and one cupful raisins. Put in a baking dish, grate a little nutmeg on top and bake until brown.

Raisin Bread Pudding.—Take a tablespoonful of sugar and half a teaspoonful of salt and mix them in a pint of creamy milk—it is richer to have cream—and scald to the boiling point. Instantly remove from the fire and pour it over a heaping pint of bread crumbs. Add butter the size of an English walnut and set aside in a covered dish for an hour. Then stir into the mixture a pound of raisins that have been placed in the oven for seven or eight minutes and become puffed and full, four stiffy beaten eggs, the juice of half a lemon and a little nutmeg. Put in a large, well buttered bowl, cover with a buttered wax paper and then tie into a clean linen pudding cloth and boil for two hours. Serve with wine sauce.

He Told His Family What He Meant to Do

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

The Little Old Man of The Mountain.

"THERE was once a very strange old man who decided he would live at the top of the mountain. He liked to hear all the rumbling sounds and thought he'd like to help make them too. He loved pine trees, too, of which there were plenty on top of the mountain. He told his family about his desire, for the mountain was not far from where they lived. The mountain was very high, and it would be a long climb to get to the top. He had a great many children and grandchildren, and they listened to the old man's description of how ideal life on top of the mountain would be. Some of the youngest children thought the climb wou'd be much too steep and that they'd never reach the top. But the old man explained that all the older and stronger ones should help the weaker and less strong. They were to take a long time over it and carry provisions to last them during the climb. Of course when they reached the top they expected to live on mountain food.

"The next day, which was clear and cold, made them all feel like exercising, so they started off. The little ones were helped along when they felt tired.

"At last they reached the top, and there were so many of them it did make a merry party.

"But it was almost dark, and they were all very eager for supper.

"The grandmothers and mothers arranged the supper, and they had a most delicious meal too."

"What did they have?" inquired Evelyn.

"Well," continued daddy, "they had moss soup, a salad of pine needles chopped up very fine, big berry pies and nuts, for they all wanted to eat mountain food at once. They sat on low stumps of trees while they ate.

"After they'd finished eating they all felt quite energetic, and so the old grandfather, who was the leader in everything, said:

"'Let's help with this storm which is coming on.' And I should say they did!

"All the older ones bellowed at the tops of their lungs so that it sounded almost like roaring. The younger ones whistled and sang. The people who lived at the foot of the mountain shivered and said: 'Oh, what a terrific storm! Listen to the sound of the wind!'

"And it was the old man's family party which was making it so dreadful, for storms always seem worse when the wind roars.

"So when you hear the wind roaring now you know the old man and his family are helping along the fury of the storm."

CHAPTER XXIII.

Exuent Omnes.

THE professor looked up from his griddlecakes.

"Why limit it to the county?" he asked. "I should say you were too parsimonious in your judgment."

Mrs. Quimby, detecting in the old man's words a compliment, flushed an even deeper red as she bent above the stove.

"It's so seldom anything really happens around here," she said, "I just been hungering for news of the strange goings on up there. And I must say Quimby ain't been none too newsy on the subject. I threatened to come up and join in the proceedings myself, especially when I heard about the book writing cook Providence had sent you."

"You would have found us on the porch with outstretched arms," Mr. Magee assured her.

It was on Kendrick that Mrs. Quimby showered her attentions, and when the group rose to seek the station, amid a consultation of watches that recalled the commuter who rises at dawn to play tag with a flippant train, Mr. Magee heard her say to the railroad man in a heartfelt aside:

"I don't know as I can ever thank you enough, Mr. Kendrick, for putting new hope into Quimby. You'll never understand what it means when you have given up and your life seems all done and wasted, to hear that there's a chance left."

"Won't I?" replied Kendrick warmly. "Mrs. Quimby, it will make me a very happy man to give your husband his chance."

The first streaks of dawn were in the sky when the hermits of Baldpate filed through the gate into the road, waving goodby to Quimby and his wife, who stood in their dooryard for the farewell.

In the station Mr. Magee encountered an old friend—he of the mop of ginger colored hair. The man who had complained of the slowness of the village gazed with wide eyes at Magee.

"I figured," he said, "that you'd come this way again. Well, I must say you've put a little life into this place. If I'd known when I saw you here the other night all the exciting things you had up your sleeve I'd a-gone right up to Baldpate with you."

"But I hadn't anything up my sleeve," protested Magee.

"Maybe," replied the agent, winking. "There's some pretty giddy stories going around about the carryings on up at Baldpate—shots fired and strange lights flashing. Doggone it! The only thing that's happened here in years, and I wasn't in on it. I certainly wish you'd put me wise to it."

Two drooping figures entered the station—the mayor and his faithful lieutenant, Max. The dignity of the former had faded like a flower, and the same withered simile might have been applied with equal force to the accustomed jauntiness of Lou.

They filed out upon the platform, Mr. Magee carrying Mrs. Norton's luggage amid her effusive thanks. On the platform waited a stranger equipped for travel. It was Mr. Max who made the discovery.

"By the Lord Harry!" he cried. "It's the hermit of Baldpate mountain!"

And so it was, his beard gone, his hair clumsily hacked, his body garbed in the height of an old and ludicrous fashion, his face set bravely toward the cities once more.

"Yes," he said, "I walked the floor, thinking it all over. I knew it would happen, and it has. The winters are hard, and the sight of you—it was too much. The excitement, the talk—it did for me, did for my oath. So I'm going back to her—back to Brooklyn for Christmas."

"A merry one to you," growled Cargan.

"Maybe," replied Mr. Peters. "Very likely, if she's feeling that way. I hope so. I ain't giving up the hermit job altogether—I'll come back in the summers to my postcard business. There's money in it if it's handled right. But I've spent my last winter on that lonesome hill."

"As author to author," asked Magee, "how about your book?"

"There won't be any mention of that," the hermit predicted, "in Brooklyn. I've packed it away. Maybe I can work on it summers if she doesn't come up here with me and insist on running my hermit business for me. I hope she won't, it would sort of put a crimp in it, but if she wants to I won't refuse. And maybe that book'll never get done. Sometimes as I've sat in my shack at night and read it's come to me that all the greatest works since the world began have been those that never got finished."

The Reuton train roared up to them through the gray morning and paused impatiently at Upper Asquewan Falls. Aboard it clambered the hermits, amateur and professional. Mr. Magee from the platform waved goodby to the agent standing forlorn in the station door. He watched the building until it was only a blur in the dawn. A kindly feeling for it was in his heart. After all, it had been in the waiting room— Then he started for the smoker. On his way he paused at the seat occupied by the ex-hermit of Baldpate and fixed his eyes on the pale blue necktie Mr. Peters had resurrected for his return to the world of men.

"Pretty, ain't it?" remarked the hermit, seeing whither Mr. Magee's gaze drifted. "She picked it. I didn't exactly like it when she first gave it to me, but I see my mistake now. I'm wearing it home as a sort of a white flag of truce—or almost white. Do you know, Mr. Magee, I'm somewhat nervous about what I'll say when I come into her presence again—about my inaugural address, you might put it. What would be your conversation on such an occasion? If you'd been away from a wife for five years what would you say when you drifted back?"

"That would depend," replied Magee, "on the amount of time she allowed me for my speech."

"You've hit the nail on the head," replied Mr. Peters admiringly. "She's quick. She's like lightning. She won't give me any time if she can help it. That's why I'd like to have a wonderful speech all ready—something that would hold her spellbound and tongue tied until I finished. It would take a literary classic to do that."

"What you want," laughed Magee, "is a speech with the punch."

"Exactly," agreed Mr. Peters. "I guess I won't go over to Brooklyn the minute I hit New York. I guess I'll study the lights along the big street and brush elbows with the world a bit before I reveal myself to her. Maybe if I took in a few shows—but don't think I won't go to her My mind is made up. And I guess she'll be glad to see me too, in her way. I got to fix it with her, though, to come back to my postcard trade in the summers. I wonder what she'll say to that. Maybe she could stay at the inn under an assumed name while I was hermiting up at the shack."

He laughed softly.

Then Mr. Magee went forward into the smoking car. Long rows of red plush seats, unoccupied save for the mayor and Max, greeted his eye. He strolled to where they sat, about halfway down the car, and lighted an after breakfast cigar.

Max slouched in the unresponsive company of a cigarette on one side of the car; across the aisle the mayor of Reuton leaned heavily above a card table placed between two seats. He was playing solitaire.

Magee looked on, only half interested. Then suddenly his interest grew. He watched the mayor build in two piles; he saw that the deck from which he built was thick. A weird suspicion shot across his mind.

"Tell me," he asked, "is this the admiral's game of solitaire?"

"Exactly what I was going to ask," said a voice. Magee looked up. Kendrick had come in and stood now above the table. His tired eyes were upon it, fascinated; his lips twitched strangely.

"Yes," answered the mayor, "this is the admiral's game. You'd hardly expect me to know it, would you? I don't hang out at the swell clubs where the admiral does. They won't have me there. But once I took the admiral on a public service board with me—one time when I wanted a lot of dignity and no brains pretty bad—and he sort of come back by teaching me his game in the long dull hours when we had nothing to do but serve the public. The thing gets a hold on you, somehow. Let's see—now the spade—now the heart."

Kendrick leaned closer. His breath came with a noisy quickness that brought the fact of his breathing insistently to Magee's mind.

"I never knew how it was played," he said.

Something told Mr. Magee that he ought to rise and drag Kendrick away from that table. Why? He did not know. Still, it ought to be done. But the look in Kendrick's eyes showed clearly that the proverbial wild horses could not do it then.

"Tell me how it's played," went on Kendrick, trying to be calm.

"You must be getting old," replied the mayor. "The admiral told me the young men at his club never took any interest in his game. 'Solitaire,' he says to me, 'is an old man's trade.' It's a great game, Mr. Kendrick."

"A great game," repeated Kendrick. "Yes, it's a great game." His tone was dull. "I want to know how it's played," he said again.

"The six of clubs," reflected the mayor, throwing down another card. "Say, she's fine now. There ain't much to it. You use two decks, exactly alike, shuffle 'em together—the eight of hearts, the jack of—say, that's great! You lay the cards down here just as they come, like this"—

He paused. His huge hand held a giddy pasteboard. A troubled look was on his face. Then he smiled happily and went on in triumph.

"And then you build, Mr. Kendrick," he said, "the reds and the blacks. You build the blacks on the left and the reds on the right. Do you get me? Then—say, what's the matter?"

For Kendrick had swayed and almost fallen on the admiral's game—the game that had once sent a man to hell.

"Go on!" he said, bracing. "Nothing's the matter. Go on! Build, dash it, build!"

The mayor looked at him a moment in surprise, then continued.

"Now the king," he muttered, "now the ace. We're on the home stretch, going strong. There, it's finished. It's come out right. A great game, I tell you."

Professor Bolton pushed open the smoker door and sat down.

Cargan leaned back. Kendrick's fever yellowed face was like a bronze mask.

His eyes were fiercely on the table and the two decks of cards that lay there.

"And when you've finished," he pointed. "When you've finished"—

Mr. Cargan picked up the deck on the left.

"All black," he said, "when the game comes out right."

"And the other?" Kendrick persisted softly. He pointed to the remaining deck. A terrible smile of understanding drew his thin lips taut. "And the other, Mr. Cargan?"

"Red. What else could it be? All red."

"Red," replied Cargan. "What else could it be? All red."

He picked it up and shuffled through it to prove his point. Kendrick turned like a drunken man and staggered back down the aisle. Magee rose and hurried after him. At the door he turned, and the look on his face caused Magee to shudder.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Charles D. Robinson, Receiver, Etc. and The Mercantile Co-Operative Bank:

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof, in a cause wherein Catherine Dezendorf is complainant, and you, Charles D. Robinson, Receiver, Etc., and The Mercantile Co-Operative Bank, are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, answer or demur to the bill of said complainant, on or before the 30th day of March next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed for the purpose of Quieting title to certain lands in the City of Plainfield, in the County of Union and State of New Jersey, bounded and described as follows, to wit:

Known as Lots Nos. 30 and 31, Block D, on a map of 264 lots, owned by Watson Whittlesey, at Netherwood Station, in the City of Plainfield, Union County, N. J., surveyed Sept., 1891, by F. A. Dunham, C. E., and Surveyor of Plainfield N. J., and filed for record in the Register's Office of Union county, N. J., Sept. 1891. Beginning at a point on the west line of George Street 154 75-100 feet northeasterly from the northwest corner of George Street and Jackson Avenue; running thence northwesterly in a line parallel with the north line of Jackson Avenue 110 feet; thence northeasterly in a line parallel with the west line of George Street, 50 feet; thence southeasterly to the west line of George Street, 110 feet; thence southwesterly along the west line of George Street, 50 feet, to the place of beginning.

Also: All of Lots 32 and 33, in Block D, on a Map of 261 lots owned by Watson Whittlesey, located at Netherwood Station, in the City of Plainfield, County of Union, State of New Jersey, surveyed August, 1891, by F. A. Dunham, Engineer of Plainfield, N. J., and filed for record in the Register's Office of Union County, N. J., Sept., 1891, these tracts or parcels of land and premises, hereinafter particularly described. Beginning at a point on the west line of George Street, one hundred and fifty-four and seventy-five hundredths (154.75-100) feet southwesterly from the southwest corner of George Street and Netherwood Avenue; running thence northwesterly in a line parallel with the southerly line of Netherwood Avenue, one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence southwesterly in a line parallel with the west line of George Street, fifty (50) feet; thence southeasterly to the west line of George Street, one hundred and ten (110) feet; thence northeasterly along the west line of George Street, fifty (50) feet, to the place of beginning.

And you, Charles D. Robinson, Receiver, Etc., are made a defendant because deed made by you as Sole Permanent Ancillary Receiver of the aforesaid Mercantile Co-Operative Bank to Catherine Dezendorf and her husband, July 21, 1903, was a quit-claim deed and intended to convey the title, this action being brought to quiet the title to the property and to have the said deed declared to be a sufficient conveyance. And you, The Mercantile Co-Operative Bank, are made a defendant because your receiver aforesaid failed to use a deed with the proper words of conveyance as aforesaid, this action being brought to give validity to such deed to pass title.

Dated January 29, A. D. 1914.

LADIES! DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and Nobody Will Know.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and abundant. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get this famous old recipe which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, feverish, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and abundant.—Adv.

MISS WARD TALKS ABOUT SUFFRAGE

English Advocate of Woman's Rights Addresses Large Audience.

FOREIGN POINT OF VIEW

Speaker Describes Conditions Which Are Responsible for Militancy—Mrs. Esther Ogden, of Elizabeth, Also Speaks.

Declaration that women in America were better treated in every way and were far more respected than in any other country of the world, was made by Miss Eva Ward, a niece of Mrs. Humphrey Ward, the well known English novelist, in the course of her remarks on the subject of "Woman's Suffrage," made before members of the Plainfield Equal Suffrage League, in the lecture room of the Public Library building, yesterday afternoon.

There was a large attendance of women in spite of the fact that the day was cold and that many of the members of the league were engaged in the work of soliciting subscriptions for the $10,000 fund that the Y. W. C. A. of this city is endeavoring to raise.

Miss Ward, tall and slender, in a tailored suit, and wearing rimmed eyeglasses, is a typical Englishwoman of the better class. She is an interesting speaker, has an excelient delivery and is, at times, exceedingly forceful in her utterances, evincing throughout her brief address the utmost enthusiasm. She charmed her large audience with her remarks and they were frequently much amused by her facetious references regarding affairs in general. While in Plainfield, Miss Ward was the guest of Mrs. Francis de Lacey Hyde.

Introduced by Mrs. Champlin L. Riley, president of the Plainfield Equal Suffrage League, who said Miss Ward was a constitutionalist and not a militant suffragist, the speaker was greeted with applause by the women present.

"I do not want," remarked Miss Ward, "to talk to you about things that you do not want to know. I shall be very glad to have you ask me questions and have no objection whatsoever to being interrupted in case you may desire to ask me anything. I am wondering how long I shall remain an Englishwoman, as I am beginning to feel since I have been in your country very much like an American woman.

"The fight for woman's suffrage is practically the same in principle the world over, but everywhere it may be said the political aspect and expression is different. It seems that whenever people advance any new idea it is the policy of the public generally to oppose and denounce it on the ground that it is opposed to the fundamentals of the people. In England any new crusade, no matter what its objects may be, is held to always mean socialism and free love. Take the case of Socrates, the Greek philosopher, of whom I was speaking with a very learned Greek scholar and savant not long since. He agreed with me that Socrates was not against the Gods of Athens, but the people of Athens became bored with him and tired of him. Hence they asserted that Socrates was 'agin the religion of the day.'

"The women of England have accomplished one great reform and that is that no destitute child shall be immured, as formerly, in any institution. The State must care for such children, if their parents will not, or cannot do so, and must so bring them up and educate them that they will become good citizens. Since 1893 the women have brought about this great reform and now all destitute children are either boarded out in homes or in families. Only a short time since I saw hundreds of poor, pitiful children in one of the great charitable institutions in New York. That State has 325,000 dependent children in its various institutions. It is the women of the country who bring to bear the full human point of views on public questions of all kinds.

"That old idea of chivalrous conduct and chivalry in general of which we still hear so much is beautiful, from a wholly theoretical viewpoint. One hears so much of it. Chivalry, however, is, as it has always been, the privilege of only a very small class of women. I well remember that when I was a little girl Richard Couer de Lion was my hero. Really, chivalry is arrant nonsense, a humbug. It is the merest chicanery. Just think for one moment of those storied knights of old. They used, we are told, to go out and ravage, rape and pillage, and commit all sorts of outrageous acts, leaving behind the woman whom they were said to have loved that she might say prayers for their safe home-coming. Today chivalry covers but a very small portion of society here and elsewhere.

"Last week Mrs. Carrie Chapman

UNIVERSITY CLUB DANCE AT PARK CLUB

Plans Discussed for Organizing Permanent Alumni Association.

Plans were discussed by the younger graduates of the Borough High School at the University Club dance held in the Park Club, last night, for the formation of a permanent alumni association in the North Plainfield High School. Tentative arrangements were made for an organization similar to the one now in the Plainfield High School and a meeting of the graduates will be called sometime in the near future to elect officers and to draw up a constitution.

The reception held last night was attended by about 150 of the younger graduates and their friends from North Plainfield and Plainfield High Schools and from the following colleges: Cornell, Yale, Princeton, Pennsylvania, Stevens, Colgate, Brown, Bucknell, Dartmouth, Columbia, New York, Baltimore Women's College, Vassar, Smith, Trenton Normal and Cortlandt Normal College.

The club was brilliantly decorated for the occasion with cut flowers and ferns and many cozy retreats were furnished for those who did not dance. Among those who assisted in receiving were Mrs. William O. Taylor, Mrs. Henry W. Williams, Mrs. William B. Marchant, Mrs. George T. Moore, Mrs. Harry DeMeza, Mrs. William J. Hudson, Mrs. William W. Hart, Mrs. John O. Thompson and Mrs. Lemuel B. Woolston. Clarence J. Hand was in charge of the committee on arrangements.

Supper was served at midnight, after which dancing was resumed until an early hour this morning. The next social function of the University Club will be held after Lent, when the Musical Club of Princeton University will be brought to Plainfield for a concert in the local theatre, followed by a reception and dance in a local auditorium.

LAND SURVEY TO SETTLE OWNERSHIP

Warren Township Will Endeavor to Determine Its Rights.

Whether or not the township of Warrenville really owns the land on which its five public schools are located is a much mooted question among the school trustees these days. It is a decidedly interesting question that the school authorities are called upon to solve. It has heretofore been found to be impossible to adjudicate the matter to the satisfaction of the trustees and taxpayers generally in past years. Now it has finally been determined to have a search and survey made of all those lots on which the schools are located. Appointment of a committee to undertake this work has been made by the trustees.

Early in the present year A. J. Jennings, who owns property adjoining the Warrenville school, made a complaint that his property had suffered damage through the trespass of school children and requested that they be kept within bounds hereafter.

As far back as 1893, it is said, the late Jacob J. Giddes, a property owner near the Mountain View School, forced the removal of a tree that had been planted on Arbor Day by the school children. He claimed it had been planted too near the line and might interfere with his growing crops. Mr. Giddes and the late Jonathan Moore were the original donors of the land on which the Mountain View School stands. Since Mr. Giddes' death there has been a feeling that the boundaries of the school property should be correctly established. The State law requires that the township shall erect a fence separating outbuildings of a school. This matter brought up the question as to what distance such a fence should be extended in the case of the South Stirling School.

WILL MEET TO ORGANIZE.

George P. Melliek, who was recently re-appointed a member of the Playground Commission for a term of three years, was sworn in by Mayor Percy H. Stewart, this morning. The commission will meet tomorrow afternoon at 5:30 o'clock at the Y. M. C. A., for organization. As yet Mayor Stewart has not appointed a successor to Richard A. Claybrook, who is out of the commission by reason of his election to the Common Council.

DECIDE TO DEFER IMPROVEMENTS

Borough Board of Education Says Work Cannot Be Done Now.

FUNDS DO NOT PERMIT

System of Toilets About Completed at a Cost of $9,000—Board Plans for Annual School Election on March 17.

That there is neither time nor money to go ahead with the improvements which the State insists shall be made at the North Plainfield High School was the statement made at the Borough Board of Education meeting, last night. The plans were considered at some length and it was finally decided that it would be best to defer the work until 1915.

The system of toilets which are being installed at a cost of $9,000 is, it was said, almost completed. There has been much delay in their installation and the trustees decided last night that they will hereafter allow contractors a bonus for the speedy completion of school work and will penalize them in case of dilatory methods.

Because one of the grade rooms in the Somerset School is very cold the trustees ordered the placing of storm windows on the north windows of the building. The work will be done by boys of the manual training department, it is said.

Truant Officer Ehrlich presented a request for a bicycle and it was decided to buy a wheel for his use in touring the borough for delinquent school children. The wheel Mr. Ehrlich has been riding is his own and after hard service for ninteen years it has finally collapsed. The report of the supervising principal of the North Plainfield schools showed a total enrollment of 1 039. Of this number 738 are in the Somerset School and 301 in the Watchung School.

The annual school meeting will be held in the Somerset School on Tuesday, March 17, at which time four trustees will be elected, the terms of Trustees Lee, Edgar, Boyer and Nash expiring at that time.

There will be a special meeting of the Borough Board of Education on Monday evening, March 2, for the purpose of considering the needs of the school in the matter of making up the budget for the coming year. Last year's appropriation totaled $47,160. Of this sum the taxpayers of North Plainfield raised $23,130. This amount was exclusive of the amount necessary for the payment of bonds and interest, the total sum raised by North Plainfielders by taxation being $31,450.

FIRE DESTROYS BARN AND AUTOS

Dr. F. W. Westcott Suffers Big Loss in Early Morning Blaze.

Fire was discovered in a barn owned by Dr. F. W. Westcott at Martine and North avenues, Fanwood, at 3 o'clock this morning, by a colored employe who was asleep in the loft at the time. The cause of the fire is a mystery and the damage is placed at $10,000.

Included in the contents destroyed were two automobiles, a Marion roadster and a touring car, both of which were consumed by the blaze. When the colored man discovered flames shooting through the cracks in the partitions of the barn he ran from the building in scant attire and notified neighbors of the blaze. When the firemen arrived the whole building was a mass of flames and frozen hydrants made fire fighting an impossibility.

ATTENDED BIG DINNER.

Former Mayor George W. V. Moy, Mr. and Mrs. Champlain Riley, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Jones and Mr. and Mrs. Paul, of Plainfield, were among the Plainfield people who attended the dinner given last night in New York by the Intercollegiate Socialistic Society. Among the speakers were Mayor Mitchell, Anna Maley and "General" Coxey, of Coxey's Army fame.

HOOD DIVORCE DECREE SIGNED

But No Order for Temporary or Permanent Alimony Is Allowed.

DECISION IS RESERVED

Pending Opinions of Court of Errors and Appeals as to Ownership of Property—Further Testimony to Be Taken in New York.

Newark, Feb. 25.—Vice Chancellor Stevens today signed the divorce decree in favor of Mrs. Francis Sparks Hood, wife of Richard Haden Hood, of Stelle avenue, Plainfield. No allowance was made by the Vice Chancellor for either temporary or permanent alimony. Decision as regards the allowance to be made Mrs. Hood is reserved, pending the decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals as to the ownership of the real estate which is in dispute between the parties to the divorce action.

Should the higher court hold that the real estate belongs to Mrs. Hood the amount of alimony granted by Vice Chancellor Stevens will be considerably smaller, it is believed, than otherwise.

Further testimony concerning the ownership of the property is to be taken soon in New York, Judge Whittemore, of Elizabeth, having been appointed a special master for this purpose. It has been found impossible to secure Mr. Hood's testimony in New Jersey.

Robert H. McCarter, counsel for Mrs. Hood, stated today that the property rights of his client were being imperilled because of a judgment for $100,000, which a former business associate of Mr. Hood had recovered against him. It is the intention of this judgment creditor to attack the validity of the deed of gift of the property to Mrs. Hood. The large judgment is said to have been taken by default some time since. Mr. Hood made, it is said, no defence to the suit.

BEEFSTEAK DINNER AT GRACE CHURCH

Men's Club Plans to Erect a Building for Colored Mission.

Many guests were entertained in the Parish House of the Grace Episcopal church last night at a beefsteak supper, the proceeds of which will be used to establish a fund for the erection of a colored mission building in this city. The affair was arranged by those interested in the church work and several representatives of the mission and the waitresses were selected from the ranks of the mission student body.

The menu, consisting of beefsteak with all the "fixin's," was enjoyed by about sixty diners and an appropriate program of music and speechmaking was given after the dinner. William Johnson spoke on the subject of "Chivalry," and dealt principally with the chivalry men owe to women and explained the various common courtesies that should be accorded the weaker sex. He assigned thoughtlessness as the cause for many acts of impoliteness and made a plea for more chivalry on the part of the busy man of the twentieth century.

Richard A. Claybrook, president of the Men's Club, gave a number of humorous stories and supplied a wealth of after-dinner mirth for the guests. Walter H. P. Vesey, president of the Federation of Men's Clubs, and the Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson also spoke. Vocal selections were rendered by a quartet composed of A. E. Sproull, William Tallamy, Joseph Martin and D. C. Patterson.

The "tips" received by the waitresses last night were added to the fund the dinner raised and as a result a neat sum was realized for the cause.

FUNERAL OF MRS. WAGNER.

The funeral services of Mrs. Edward Wagner was held at 8 o'clock last night, at the home, 68 Chatham street, the borough. There were many friends and relatives present and a profusion of floral tributes. The service was conducted by Rev. C. L. Goodrich, pastor of the Congregational church. Burial was in the Lutheran cemetery at Brooklyn, at noon today.

WEEKLY DANCING.

"Doc" and "Mac" will hold their Thursday night dancing class in Debele's auditorium as usual tomorrow night. For the coming five weeks they intend giving particular attention to teaching beginners.

GREAT RIVALRY AMONG TEAMS

Mrs. R. P. Lincoln's Workers Lead in Y. W. C. A. Campaign.

NEARLY $5,000 RAISED

Phenomenal Success Attends Efforts of Women in Soliciting Funds—Special Vesper Service for Thanksgiving to Be Held.

Phenomenal success atended the labors of the women who are conducting the campaign for the $10,000 fund for the Y. W. C. A. of Plainfield on the first day of solicitation when nearly one-half of the desired sum was pledged or collected. The total amount credited to the ten teams which have charge of the work of solicitation is $4,165.25. It is considered an unusually good showing and one that those interested in the work believe reflects great credit on the people of this community, evincing as it does public spiritedness and philanthrophy.

In all 233 individual subscriptions were received yesterday by the 91 women who went about the city asking help for the Y. W. C. A. of Plainfield. Team No. 1, of which Mrs. Rufus Lincoln is captain, had ten canvassers at work and collected from 26 subscribers a total of $1,130.50. Team No. 2, of which Mrs. Frank W. French is captain, had eight canvassers at work and collected from 27 subscribers in all $131. Team No. 3, of which Miss Edith Mellick is captain, had six canvassers at work and collected from 15 subscribers $245. Team No. 4, of which Miss Dorothy Fleming is captain, had nine canvassers at work and collected from 20 subscribers, $84. Team No. 5, of which Mrs. Francis de Lacey Hyde is captain, had eight canvassers at work and collected from 28 subscribers, $558. Team No. 6, of which Mrs. Lewis Williams is captain, had nine canvassers at work and collected from 21 subscribers, $262. Team No. 7, of which Mrs. Walter McGee is captain, had nine canvassers at work and collected from 31 subscribers a total of $1,192. Team No. 8, of which Mrs. Leslie R. Fort is captain, had only eight canvassers at work and collected from 18 subscribers, $232. Team No. 9, of which Mrs. W. D. Murray is captain, had nine canvassers at work and collected from 25 subscribers, $267.25. Team No. 10, of which Mrs. W. A. O'Donnell is captain, had 15 canvassers at work and collected from 22 subscribers a total of $63.50.

All of the members of the various soliciting teams met together at the Y. W. C. A. building on East Front street at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Group meetings were held. Each team made up the totals of their collections and submitted same to the captains of each group. Tea was served the happy but tired women under the direction of Mrs. Harry McGee and at 5 o'clock Miss Harriet Taylor, executive secretary of the finance committee of the National Board of Y. W. C. A.'s, of New York, opened the meeting at which the final reports of the day's work were submitted. There was much applause and great enthusiasm when the total amount collected was announced. Today the campaign for subscriptions is going merrily on and late this afternoon the solicitors will again meet and announce the result of their work.

Arrangements have been made to hold a special vesper service for thanksgiving and prayers for the success of thecampaign. The service will be held at the Y. W. C. A. building on Sunday afternoon, at 4 o'clock and will be led by Mrs. Frederick Goodhue Mead, president of the Y. W. C. A. of Plainfield. It is expected that this service will be largely attended.

Statement of the relation of the Plainfield Y. W. C. A. and all local organizations of the kind to the National Board, was made yesterday by Miss Harriet Taylor, executive secretary of the finance committee of the parent organization.

"From the beginning of the work of the Young Women's Christian Association in Plainfield," said Miss Taylor, "much assistance and inspiration have been received from the National Association of which it is a part. There are nearly 1,000 associations in the American movement which includes women in over 200 cities, students in more than 600 colleges, women in industrial centres, in the mill villages of the South and in the rural districts. The principles which underly the American associations are the same throughout the world, and the methods that have proved successful in any association are made available to all other associations throughout the National Board. The headquarters of the National Board and of the Northeast Field Committee are at 600 Lexington avenue, New York

SEEKS TO RECOVER INVESTED FUNDS

M. A. Delhaye, formerly of This City, Brings Suit in Chancery.

Hearing on the suit brought some time ago by M. A. Delhaye, a former resident of Plainfield, against the estate of Frank M. Bacon, Charles E. Neier, John T. E. Vanderveer, the J. D. Loizeaux Lumber Company, and others, of this city, to recover certain monies which he alleges he invested, as a builder, in property at No.'s 406-8-10-12 New street, in Plainfield, was held yesterday before Vice-Chancellor J. J. Griffin, in Jersey City.

The property in question was sold under foreclosure about eleven years ago, it is said. Title is now held by the J. D. Loizeaux Lumber Company, of this city. That company is said to have acquired it through purchase when it was sold under the foreclosure proceedings. The claim of Mr. Delhaye is, it is said, that there was some defect in the foreclosure suit and it is because of this allegation, it is said, that he is now endeavoring to establish claim to the property mentioned, or in lieu of its possession, to secure money damages from the defendants named in the action.

Judge Isaac P. Runyon represented the J. D. Loizeaux Lumber Company in the proceedings of yesterday. Because of the unavoidable absence from court of J. D. Loizeaux, who was engaged in other litigation, in Newark, an adjournment of the matter was finally taken until April 2.

Thad Doane, Jr., was the agent of the New street property when it was owned by Mr. Delhaye, and also acted as agent after the property was acquired by Mr. Vanderveer, one of the defendants named in the present suit. Mr. Doane was a witness at yesterday's hearing.

ACKERMAN GEMS ARE UNDER COVER

Considerable Mystery as to Recovery of Missing Property.

INFORMATION MEAGRE

Sudden Announcement by Detective Surprises the Police — Thieves Said to Have Received a Reward.

More revelations concerning the mystery surrounding the disappearance of $15,000 worth of jewels from the home of former State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, on West Eighth street, have been disclosed during the past twenty-four hours than those directly interested with the case will admit and there is a strenuous effort being made to quiet the publicity that has been given in the matter. The sudden announcement of "inside" information by Detective Val. O'Farrell, came as a big surprise to those who had been following certain clues under cover and the country-wide distribution of confidential information has disrupted a number of plans that have been laid by detective bureaus and police heads.

When interviewed by a reporter for the Daily Press, last night, Mr. Ackerman said that his attorney, Mr. Johnson, of New York, had informed him that he called on the insurance company yesterday and was told that it had in its possession two necklaces believed to be a part of the loot taken from the Ackerman home, but he added, as I have not seen them I am not sure that they belong to me.

The jewels, it is said, remain where they have been since January 28, in the safe of the General Accident Insurance Company, of New York, and it is probable that Mr. Ackerman will now take immediate steps to recover his property in view of the fact that the information has been sent broadcast by one intrusted with it. Detective-Sergeant Flynn, of the local force, it is said, discovered finger prints that led to the recovery of the gems held by the insurance company, and Chief Kiely's information supplied shortly after the deed was committed was the main clue followed by all connected with the case.

According to the company having the jewels in its safe, a representative of the thieves returned some of the valuables to an adjuster for the burglary insurance company. In exchange for two diamond necklaces and several rings the agent for the thieves is said to have received a reward of about $3,500. Representatives of the detective agencies as well as Chief Kiely and Detective Flynn, say the robbery was committed by notorious thieves, who make a specialty of "porch climbing." These men went to New York recently from the West, where they have police records. One of them is a fugitive from justice, having jumped his bail bond after being convicted of burglary in Cincinnati.

POISON AT WEDDING FEAST KILLS THREE

Suspicion Rests on the Home-made Wine.

New York, Feb 25.—Three young American women who attended an Italian wedding reception Sunday evening died and a fourth was severely ill. The dead are:

Nellie I. Dean, twenty-five years old; Madeline Dean, twenty-two; Mary Driscoll, twenty-two. The girl still living is Anna O'Brien, twenty-three

The marriage was that of Carmine J. Colino of 217 Sullivan street, a box maker employed by Brian G. Hughes at 133 Mulberry street, and Angelina Miglionica of 35 Oak street, a bookbinder.

The girl in January had bought two gallons of alcohol and, with her mother, had put in other ing edients, from which they got four gallons of cordials

In the course of the evening persons not known to the bride and bridegroom nor to the members of their families entered the hall. There were half a dozen girls and as many men.

The Dean sisters got home late Sunday night and soon were taken ill. Their condition was such on Monday that an ambulance came for them from Lincoln hospital. Nellie was too ill to be moved, but Madeline was taken to the hospital Madeline died at noon and her sister three hours later.

The Driscoll girl was taken ill in the same way. She could not be got to a hospital and her death came about the time of Nellie Driscoll's.

SAYS MINERS ARE NEGLECTED

Representative Urges New Laws to Encourage Industry.

Washington, Feb. 25. — Thirty-two cents per capita is spent by the United States government on farmers for the benefit of agriculture annually, but only a cent per capita for the miners. H. V. Winchell of Minneapolis, representing the American Institute of Mining Engineers, told the senate mining committee. He urged recodification of the mining laws to encourage opening of new mines. As an instance of "what not to do" he cited the case of China, which does not permit the digging of a shaft within 1,000 feet of a grave of a member of the royal family 500 feet of the grave of a mandarin, or 200 feet of any grave, and does not permit any shaft to be more than 500 feet deep "lest it let out the devils."

WILSON AND GOETHALS MEET

President Hears Plans for Government of Canal Zone.

Washington, Feb. 25.—Colonel George W. Goethals presented to President Wilson plans for the organization of a permanent government in the Panama canal zone, which will be instituted on April 1, with Colonel Goethals as its governor. The meeting in the White House was the first since Colonel Goethals' appointment as governor.

Problems touching upon the organization of the zone government which have not yet been solved and details of the preparations being rushed for the opening of the canal were reviewed at length.

"Pillars" In Mines Good Law.

Washington, Feb. 25.—The Pennsylvania "mine safety" law, requiring coal companies to leave pillars of coal to prevent cave-ins, was declared valid by the supreme court in a test case brought by the Plymouth Coal company against David T. Davis, state mine inspector.

Announcing The New Typewriter OLIVER No. 7

WE ANNOUNCE AN AMAZING MODEL—The OLIVER No. 7—a typewriter of superexcellence, with automatic devices and refinements that mark the zenith of typewriter progress. A marvel of beauty, speed and easy action. Typewriting efficiency raised to the nth power.

The OLIVER No. 7 embodies all previous Oliver innovations and new self-acting devices never before seen on any typewriter. A leap in advance which places The Oliver ten years ahead of its time. So smooth in action, so light to the touch, so easy to run, that experts are amazed. A model that means to the typist delightful ease of operation.

A model that means a higher standard of tyepwriting, longer and better service.

The No. 7 is now on exhibit and sale at all Oliver Branches and Agencies throughout the United States.

The new model has more improvements, refinements and new uses than we can even enumerate here.

The "cushioned keyboard" with "anchor keys" and the new automatic features mean less work for the hands, less strain on the eyes, less manual and mental effort.

With all of these masterly mechanical improvements we have made the machine more beautiful and symmetrical. From every standpoint The OLIVER No. 7 attains superlative excellence.

Nothing you could wish for has been omitted. The new devices, refinements, improvements and conveniences found on the No. 7 represent an enormous outlay and vastly increase its value—the price has not been advanced one penny. We shall even continue in force our popular "Dollar-a-Day" purchase plan, the same as on previous Oliver models.

The OLIVER No. 7, equipped with the famous Printype, if desired, without extra charge.

You owe it to yourself to see the new machine before you buy any typewriter at any price. Note its beauty, speed and easy action, its wonderful automatic devices. Try it on any work that is ever done on typewriters. Try it on many kinds of work that no other typewriter will do. It is a significant fact that the typewriter that introduced such epoch-making innovations as visible writing, visible erasing, Printype, etc., should be the first to introduce automatic methods of operation.

IN ONE MINUTE! CLOGGED NOSTRILS OPEN---COLDS AND CATARRH VANISH

Stops Nasty Discharge, Clears Stuffed Head, Heals Inflamed Air Passages and You Breathe Freely.

Try "Ely's Cream Balm."

Get a small bottle anyway, just to try it. Apply a little in the nostrils and instantly your clogged nose and stopped-up air passages of the head will open; you will breathe freely; fullness and headache disappear. By morning the catarrh, cold-in-head or catarrhal sore throat will be gone.

End such misery now! Get the small bottle of "Ely's Cream Balm" at any drug store. This sweet, fragrant balm dissolves by the heat of the nostrils; penetrates and heals the inflamed, swollen membrane which lines the nose, head and throat; clears the air passages; stops nasty discharges and a feeling of cleansing, soothing relief comes immediately.

Don't lay awake tonight struggling for breath, with head stuffed; nostrils closed, hawking and blowing. Catarrh or a cold, with its running nose, foul mucous dropping into the throat, and raw dryness is distressing but truly needless.

Put your faith—just once—in "Ely's Cream Balm" and your cold or catarrh will surely disappear.—Adv.

WHY NOT "SAVING" LESSONS?

The last decade has witnessed many innovations in the subjects taught and method of teaching in the public schools of this country, and especially in this state. For many generations the three R's were considered all that was essential to the mental development of the child. Today, however, civics, manual training, athletics, debating and literary clubs, together with the many other results of modern thought hold their dignified positions in school life, although, in some instances, only after a struggle with the ever-present conservative element.

While civic, political and industrial problems are to some extent discussed in the upper grammar grades and high school classes from a textbook viewpoint, there is still one economic problem which the average pupil faces on leaving his school life. This subject cannot be taught from books, or yet, with any great results, can it be instilled into the hearts and minds of the rising generations by "lectures" from the desk, even though it be supplemented with the time honored teacher's stick. We refer to the art of "saving."

Last week the metropolitan papers printed an item in reference to the establishment of a "school bank" in a Brooklyn public institution of learning. The depositors in this case numbered eighty-one with deposits ranging from five cents up, aggregating a total of over eighty-nine dollars.

No doubt such an adjunct as this would prove a magnificent success in our local schools. In the Stillman and High Schools the working out of details might well be placed in the hands of the student bodies, while the teachers of the primary schools, if the plan was put into effect, would handle the work in connection with its operation. Local banking institutions would undoubtedly be more than pleased to co-operate in the formation and running of these banks.

These thoughts are referred to the Board of Education for their earnest consideration.

FEEDING WORKERS AT COST.

The United States Steel Corporation has taken a big step toward the closer relationship and understanding between capital and labor by the establishment at Conneaut, Ohio, of a great co-operative farm of 12,000 acres, where it raises foodstuffs for its workers at cost. The plan, already well under way, is to so develop the idea that practically all the foodstuffs needed in the average home will eventually be produced on this mammoth farm. National industry—meaning both capital and labor—will watch the results with no little interest.

The United States Steel farm originally comprised 8,000 acres of fertile soil purchased for the erection at Conneaut of a mammoth steel and tube mille in 1900. The acquisition of the Bessemer & Lake Erie railroad reduced carrying prices of ore to such an extent that the building project was abandoned. Now, after fourteen years, the land at present 12,000 acres, is being turned into a mammoth undertaking in industrial welfare work, the like of which has never been attempted in the world. The returns on the investment doubtless will be as important in making for industrial peace as they would be important financially had the mills been erected.

Two years ago the corporation purchased and stocked its Conneaut farm with several thousand head of cattle and pigs. Several thousand acres were planted to grain and potatoes. The latter, several thousand bushels, were sold to the employes of the mills at cost—60 cents a bushel, when the market price was $1.00 a bushel for tubers of inferior quality. Encouraged by this success, the corporation has erected a three-story supply house from which distribution will be made to the employes. The manager will erect slaughter houses and there beef, pork and mutton will be dressed and prepared for the workers. Refrigerating plants will be added a little later to care for any surplus.

The idea is a step in advance in the industrial world. It takes its place with factory club houses and profit-sharing projects. "The biggest undertaking of its kind," it has been called, "and one that will have a far-reaching effect on the relations of capital and labor."

The local hack fare, within prescribed limits which are conspicuously posted in the railroad station, and except between the hours of eleven at night and five in the morning, is twenty-five cents per person. No conditions of weather permit the drivers to charge more, and they must take the first passenger who calls them at the station. Several complaints have come to the Daily Press of efforts to overcharge since the snow fell. The police stand ready and willing to put a stop to the practice, but complaints have to be made in order for them to do their duty. The best way is to call a hack, get in it, ride to your destination and pay the driver twenty-five cents when you get out. Then if he asks for more tell him you will have his license revoked. It is true that the haul is harder now, but the men know when they go into business that they are expected to carry people in all kinds of weather, and they should be contented with what the law allows or seek some other occupation.

"The proposition for the adoption of the Walsh Act is again to be submitted to the voters of Orange. The experience in practically every city that has thus far adopted Commission Government has been that it so centralizes power as to be detrimental to the liquor industry. The fact that the Anti-Saloon League will support the measure should be sufficient warrant for all dealers and other liberal-minded citizens of Orange to oppose it."

The above appeared in "Justice," the official organ of the brewery interests, and is worthy of note, insofar that it gives forth one more reason why Plainfield should adopt the Commission form of government. When the brewery interests seek to regulate the liquor traffic through large local governing bodies, it is well nigh time to remove the temptation from their path.

A vacant house located on Liberty street, between Second and Third streets, which was referred to by nearby business men as a menace to the neighborhood and mentioned in our editorial columns on Friday, was inspected at once by Building Inspector T. O. Doane. The owner of the building was immediately notified to strengthen the foundations to prevent the structure from falling. The Chief is always on the job.

LADIES' AID SOCIETY GIVES BIRTHDAY SOCIAL

Under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Monroe Avenue church, the annual birthday social and entertainment was held in the church, last night. Notwithstanding the intense cold there was a large attendance of members and friends. The members returned the small bags containing their birthday offerings and in all about $40 was realized. As the guests arrived each was given an envelope containing fifteen numbers, there being corresponding ones, and the recipient was epected to match the numbers and in this way sociability was promoted.

There was an informal program comprising selections by a chorus of twenty children, recitations by the children, piano selections by Miss Dorothy Manning, vocal solos by Mrs. William Flood. The program was opened with prayer by Rev. F. J. Hubach. The church was attractively decorated for the occasion with American flags.

The entertainment committee comprised Mrs. F. J. Hubach, Mrs. William Stine and Mrs. Harry Gardener. Mrs. John J. Praed and Mrs. John Daub were in charge of the candy table. Mrs. Andrew McDowell was chairman of the refreshment committee. The reception committee comprised Mrs. Theodore VanPelt, Mrs. J. C. Pierson, Mrs. Nicholas Brouard, Mrs. Robert Lee, Mrs. John J. Praed, Mrs. John Daub and Mrs. F. J. Hubach.

FOOD LAW IS HARD HIT BY HIGH COURT

Must Prove Added Substances Are Poisonous.

Washington, Feb. 25.—A decision handed down by the supreme court will have a farreaching effect on the enforcement of the federal pure food and drug act and similar state laws. By many the fear is expressed that the decision will greatly handicap the federal authorities in their efforts to fight against "treated" or adulterated foods.

The decision was in what has come to be known as the "bleached flour case." In an opinion by Justice Day, concurred in by the entire court, the principle was laid down that in order for the government to maintain a libel under the food and drugs act to condemn articles alleged to contain "added poisonous or deleterious substances" it is necessary to prove that the added substance is present in sufficient quantities that it may injure health.

The "bleached flour case" grew out of an attempt by the federal authorities to libel a shipment of flour made by the Lexington Milling and Elevator company from Lexington, Neb., to Castle, Mo. The flour was admittedly bleached by having been treated with the Alsop process, which was accomplished by subjecting it to a treatment of nitrogen peroxide gas.

The court found as a matter of fact that the added substance was poisonous and deleterious. The government asked the trial judge to charge the jury that it was only necessary for the government to prove that the shipment contained the added poisonous or deleterious substance in order to maintain the libel and that they were not required to establish by proof that the adulteration was present in such quantity that it might injure the health of consumers.

SMALL ATTENDANCE AT FAIR.

Owing to the extreme cold weather of last night the attendance at the Company K fair was very slim. Although the number of persons present was small the total receipts of the various committees was gratifying. Captain Charles A. Peterson, general chairman of the fair committee is well satisfied with the results of the fair thus far and has commended all the committee chairmen on the work done by their individual committees.

GLASER SUFFERS ANOTHER FIRE LOSS

Partly Constructed Building at South Plainfield is Destroyed.

The partly constructed building being erected by Theodore Glazer for his fertilizing plant at South Plainfield, was destroyed by fire late Sunday night, resulting in a loss of nearly $1,000. The fire is said to be of incendiary origin, and Mr. Glaser has reported the matter to the prosecutor of Middlesex county. About two weeks ago Mr. Glaser's toolhouse was wrecked and a large quantity of cement was destroyed, as well as tools.

Ever since Mr. Glaser removed to his present place there has been considerable opposition to the erection of his fat rending plant, and his recent fire is said to have aroused considerable suspicion. When Mr. Glaser operated a plant at Alton he met with the same opposition there and he suffered several losses including the destruction of his plant and valuable stock by fire.

THOUGHT HIS SATANIC MAJESTY WAS CALLING

When Pigeon Appeared in Chimney Girl Was Thrown Into Faint and Is Ill.

A popular belief existing among the simple peasant folk of far-off Lithuania, that His Satanic Majesty frequently visits people's homes in person, making his entrance by way of the chimney, is responsible for the serious illness of Miss Mary Wolga, a domestic in the employ of Morris Abrams, of Grove street. She was alone in the house a few days ago, performing her customary duties in the kitchen when a pigeon from a neighboring loft, through some unknown cause fell down the chimney to a point where a small register opens out over the range. The young woman was attracted by the noise and glanced towards the source just in time to see a small head with a pair of beady, blinking eyes protrude through the aperture. Instantly, the familiar tradition of her native land occurred to her mind, causing her to shriek and faint.

The members of the household were all at Muhlenberg hospital on a visit to Mrs. Abrams, who recently underwent an operation. When they returned they found Miss Wolga in a hysterical condition from shock and fright, firmly convinced that she had looked upon the sponser of all evil. All attempts to dissuade her from the belief were fruitless, until the noise in the chimney was heard again and the cause was ascertained. The pigeon was extricated from its uncomfortable position and was found to be unharmed. What caused it to fall down the chimney could not be learned.

Despite the fact that Miss Wolga realized fully that the inoffensive bird was the only occupant of the chimney, she continued to grow nervous after being put to bed. It became necessary to summon medical assistance and she is now under the care of Dr. Campus, of New York, a nephew of Mr. Abrams. The young woman was reported today greatly improved but is still confined to her room.

Ossining, N. Y., Feb. 25.—"I knew I would get a square deal," said ex-Lieutenant Charles Becker in his cell in the death chamber at Sing Sing, when informed by John J. Malloy, confidential clerk to Warden Clancy, that the court of appeals had reversed the decision of the supreme court.

These were Becker's words when he heard the decision of the court of appeals from John J. Malloy, confidential clerk to Warden Clancy. His voice choked with emotion.

In a few minutes his happy voice resounded through the gloomy death house, and all of the condemned men learned the news.

The four gunmen took the decision as though it was a victory of their own. They did not know their doom had been sealed by the same judges. Their jubilant yells echoed and reechoed through the corridors.

"Lefty Louie" and "Dago Frank" were the leaders in the little celebration.

"Well, boys, let's begin to pack up our belongings. Pretty soon we will be back in the old Tombs, and then we will be freed again," shouted "Lefty."

"That's right, 'Lefty;' that's the stuff," answered back his death house companion. "Gyp" and "Whitey" Lewis joined in the noisy celebration.

Then the warden handed him the request from the newspaper men to make a statement.

"Tell them all to read the Book of Ecclesiasticus, chapter 51, first to seventeenth verse, inclusive," he said.

That Becker has been closely following the teachings of Father Cashin was demonstrated when he rattled the passage from memory.

Then it fell upon the good natured warden to break the sad news to the four gunmen. They had not heard of the telegram to the prison, which read:

Appeal of the four gunmen denied.

"Lefty Louie" was happy and smiling and grabbed the message. The smile disappeared.

Grasping the hand of the warden, he said:

"Warden, I am sorry it is you who has to break this sad news to us."

"Let me see it," asked "Dago Frank." The message was shown to him.

"God's will will be done," was his comment.

The other two heard the doleful voices. They did not need to be told what the telegram contained.

As the warden was leaving "Gyp the Blood" called after him:

"Warden, I wish you would deny the stories that we have quarreled or that we have lost our nerve. We are still game."

Wife Hears Verdict.

New York, Feb. 25.—Word came to Mrs. Helen Becker, wife of former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, as she sat by the body of her mother, Mrs. Ellen Campbell Lynch, who died at her home, 2291 University avenue. A ring at the telephone, the exulting voice of Lieutenant John Becker, "It's a new trial, Helen," and the woman who has undergone an ordeal since July 29, 1912, that few women have passed through, dropped the telephone receiver and leaned against the wall for support. There was no outbreak, no giving away to feelings, no relaxation from the nineteen months of strain. If Mrs. Becker's husband is iron nerved, as they say, her nerves are fine steel, her feelings are always under control. She replaced the telephone receiver quietly and said to her sister: "They have granted him a new trial. I must go downtown."

Soon after she came into the office of Joseph Shay at 50 Broad street, where the lawyer, Jackson Becker and Police Lieutenant John Becker, brothers, and a host of reporters were waiting.

Under Severe Strain.

Men who have been closely connected with the case since its inception marveled as the woman came into the lawyer's office. The marvel was that a human being could go through so much and show so little the effects of the strain. Since July 29, 1912, there has been the worry, the strain of a husband accused of murder and all other crimes, tried, convicted and sent to the death house at Sing Sing prison. In the meantime there was the suicide of her housekeeper, the robbery of her home, the death of her husband's mother, and there, too, had been the additional strain, for the mother had never been told of her son's situation. She died without knowing that he was in the death house, and her last word was the question, "Where is Charley?" All that finesse had taken it out of members of the family.

Before that had been the baby, the child who lived a few hours, whose birth nearly killed the mother, and last of all had come the death Sunday of her own mother, just at the moment of the greatest strain, when it was practically assured that her husband's fate would be known Tuesday.

Kisses Lawyer.

Yet as Mrs. Becker entered the office, clad in black, heavily veiled, her step was alert, her eyes as she withdrew the veil were bright, her cheeks rosy, but there was not a trembling of the lips or tears. She walked right past everybody, past the Becker brothers and up to Joseph A. Shay, the lawyer. "Oh, you darling!" she exclaimed, and a moment later the dark features of the lawyer were as red as the woman's, for she had thrown her arms around his neck and kissed him a good hearty smack. Then she sat down, and it seemed as if the memory of her most recent bereavement was submerged, for she was smiling. "I am too happy to say a word," she said.

Whitman Reticent.

After the first excitement in the neighborhood of the offices of District Attorney Whitman and his staff had subsided somewhat—and on that floor of the criminal courts building there was a good deal of telephoning and running back and forth when the action of the court of appeals became known there—the opinion seemed fixed among those who had been very close to the whole Rosenthal matter since its beginning that Becker never will be placed on trial again.

Mr. Whitman himself on this question refused to make any statement. In fact, to all the questions shot at him by the reporters his answer was that he had no predictions or comments to make at this time.

"I haven't even read the opinion handed down," he said, "except in piecemeal as bits of it have come to me. One statement, and the only one, which I make, and you may spread it broadcast, is this—the district attorney is the last man who would want to see a conviction stand that is not justified in law."

CHAIN WATCHMAN; GET $6,000

Expert Cracksmen Blow Open Safe of Baltimore Theater.

Baltimore, Feb. 25.—Easily overpowering the watchman and handcuffing him to a post, where he remained for seven hours, three yeggmen blew open the safe in the box office of the Academy of Music here and extracted between $5,000 and $6,000 in cash.

From all appearances it is the boldest exhibition of the work of expert cracksmen seen in this city in many years, and Headquarters Detective Peter B. Bradley, who, with Detective Brennan, is investigating the case, says the job was a most thorough one. It is similar, they say, to a safe job done in Pittsburgh about ten days ago.

TRAINS NEED CARRY NO DRINKING WATER

Supreme Court Sets Aside Utility Board's Rule Governing Runs.

Trenton, Feb. 25.—The order of the Board of Public Utility Commissioners requiring railroads to provide drinking water on all passenger trains the runs of which within the State are a half hour or more, was set aside by the Supreme Court, yesterday.

The opinion handed down by Justice Swayze held that the evidence before the board did not justify a hard and fast rule, such as that made by the board, as a reasonable restriction.

In his opinion, Justice Swayze said:

"Upon certiorari to review an order of the public utility commissioners, we are not limited by Section 38 of the act in our right to set aside the order to cases where it clearly appears that there was no evidence before the board to support reasonably the order; that limitation is applicable to the procedure by petition only.

"Involuntary practice of common carriers under less onerous conditions of furnishing water to passengers on all trains, does not of itself justify an order requiring the carriers to furnish water under more onerous conditions and on those trains only whose schedule run within the State is half an hour.

"The public utility act does not justify merely arbitrary orders and any one injuriously effected by such an order may justly complain, even though the order is less onerous for him than it might properly have been.

"The duty of the common carriers to supply passengers with water depends upon the practicability of the passengers obtaining water in case of need within a reasonable time—not on the time spent in traveling nor on the distance or zone traversed, but on the frequency of stations, the season of the year and the character of the travel on different trains.

"The evidence in this case does not justify a hard and fast order to supply water on all trains with a schedule run of half an hour."

The railroads directly affected by the order are the Lackawanna, Erie, Susquehanna and Northern New Jersey and New York.

JOURNALISTIC OPINIONS

John Ulrich, past grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias of New Jersey, last Wednesday night visited Crescent lodge in this place. We enjoyed a very pleasant hour with Judge Ulrich on Thursday morning in our sanctum. It was our pleasure to enjoy this gentleman's close friendship a third of a century ago, and it was a delightful hour we enjoyed on Thursday renewing that old friendship.

A quarter of a century ago Judge Ulrich was one of the very foremost young lawyers and rising Republican statesmen in the State. From 1888 to 1890 he represented Union county in the Legislature, serving three terms, and his ability as a public speaker made him one of the very foremost members of the Assembly. He was admitted to be the best parliamentarian in the House. For a number of years, which he was City Judge of Plainfield, previous to being elected in the Legislature, he was noted in that not one of his decisions were ever reversed by the higher courts.

When elected to the Assembly he received the largest majority of any man who had been elected from his district. By the whole State, Judge Ulrich was looked upon as one of the State's coming statesmen and a brilliant political career was before him, when by overwork he lost his health and for twenty years he fought to regain it, which he did in the end, but those twenty years were the ones that he needed to place him before the people of the State in the high positions which those who were in the public life of twenty-five years ago have since died.

We are pleased to see that Judge Ulrich today is, to all appearances, in the best of health, and among his fraternal organizations, which he has made his life work, none stand higher in the estimation of his brethren. We are sure the members of Crescent lodge not only enjoyed but were benefitted by his visit. Judge Ulrich is now the editor of The Craftsman and Fraternal Record, a magazine devoted to the Masonic and Knights of Pythias fraternity.—Hunterdon Democrat.

city, where the successful features of all the Associations are recorded, plans are made for advance work, and volunteer workers and association secretaries are trained by means of the National Training School, summer conferences and publications.

The National Board, through its field committee, renders invaluable service in organizing new associations ad in unifying the work that already exists, but its greatest usefulness is in initiating departments and in extending the association privileges to new groups of women. uring the past few years, the Immigration Department has been established and is rendering immeasurable service to young women upon their arrival in this country. The International Institute in New York city has classes in English for young women speaking seventeen different languages. Secretaries visit every young woman wholands in America unattended withi na week of her arrival and render all possible assistance in finding employment and helping the strangers to become adjusted to their new surroundings. Similar institutes will be established in all of the main ports of entry. The National Board has also taken the initiative in organizing work for women in the rural districts in the India nreservations and among the colored schools of the South.

"The breaking of these new roads must be done by a national movement, and since every local association has access to the accumulated experience of the country through the National Board and depends upon it to experiment and to extend the association privileges, it is natural that each association should bear some responsibility in the general work. At a recent National convention, it was voted that each local association should give four per cent. of its budget for supervisory work, so that the National Board and the Field Committees might be able to respond to the numerous appeals for organization, unification and initiation of work in this country, and also to enable it to have some share in the development of the association movement in thirty-five countries in which it already exists."

ENJOYED SOCIAL EVENING.

MISS BURTIS THE STAR

Little Forward Beats Home Quintet Single Handed—Second Victory of the Week for North Plainfield School Girl Athletes.

Another victory went to the credit of the North Plainfield High School girls' basketball team, yesterday afternoon, when the Nutley High School team went down to defeat at that place by a score of 19 to 5. This is the second meeting of the season of these two teams and the first was an easy victory for the locals.

As in the former game against this team, Miss Marjorie Burtis proved to be the whole show and kept the home guards working every minute of play. The home girls were guilty of numerous fouls and Miss Burtis took advantage of three free tries. The local guards played an exceedingly tight game.

Miss Staats won a great hand of applause when she caged the prettiest basket of the game. She scored one foul and Miss Witbeck tallied another field goal. After the contest the girls were entertained until train time by the Nutley girls.

"Sportdom Tips"

NEARLY OUT OF SIGHT.

Annoyed by the pace the Daily Press is setting as a chronicle for the distribution of sport news and because he has been lost to sight in the race for supremacy honors, our contemporary pro tem comes to the fore with a petty rebuke, taking out his spleen in a few rather poorly chosen words. Among other things he deals out a little fatherly advice to his rival giving him the inside tip that it would be far better for the Daily Press sporting editor to spend more time in writing sports. And yet in the issue of last night, the one nearest to date, the sporting pages of the Daily Press contained THIRTY-THREE EXCLUSIVE stories of various lengths. After we pass the thirty mark time is a minor asset and the fact that we do not spend more time on sport writing is our misfortune and our contemporary's cause to be grateful. The pace setter and scratch man has lapped the other competitor so many times that the latter is no longer looked upon as a foe worthy of notice and the devotion of more space to this cause would be a waste of energy.

SITUATION COMPLEX.

Now that Leal School has broken into the spotlight arena with a victory over its ancient foes, the Plainfield High School basketball players, the basketball situation in this city will take a new lease of life. The private school victory was a cause for much rejoicing in several quarters and caused much consternation in the High School. All kinds of rumors are current concerning the treatment planned for the Front street youths when they lineup against the boroughites and some have even ventured so far as to predict a one-sided victory for Leals and the claim to the runner-up position in the league race which goes with it. Rivalry between Leals and Plainfield is keen and we look forward to some more good contests in the scholastic league race before the curtain is drawn on the 1914 season.

A BIG SURPRISE.

Reviewing the basketball game played at the Trenton Y. W. C. A., Saturday, between the local girls and the feminine quintet from the Capitol City, we note that the Plainfielders played circles around their worthy opponents in every department of the sport. Seldom has a Plainfield team scored such a triumph as this one at the expense of the Trentonians and the Plainfield Y. W. C. A. girls are to be congratulated on their notable achievement. The locals were as much surprised in winning the game as the home team was in losing it and the Plainfielders were willing to admit upon their return home that they never really thought seriously of depriving the home talent of the victor's spoils until the tide changed in the second period.

Are there any more titles lying around loose in this vicinity? North Plainfield High School has stored away the interscholastic and Somerset county arguments and are still in quest of unconquered territory.

Jack Martin avers that he is getting "in" on all of the banquets that come his way these days for the time for departure is near at hand. Sumptuous feasts are rare in the Boston Bean camp while on the Southern trail.

What has happened to those Plainfield pinners who have been splitting the wood in the Elks' League this year? Don't recognize any Plainfield faces in the running for trophies.

Bowling has taken the place of basketball in the Scotch Plains Parish House these days and the alleys are the scene of some good matches every week day night.

That North Plainfield-Plainfield High Schools girls' game comes off this week. The feminine players are slow and deliberate in their movements. There is a reward offered for the sport who can remember the date of the last game.

Dame Rumor has it that the Federals are after Jack Martin to act as an umpire. Whaddayamean, call fouls?

"Hub" Stine is splitting the wagon tongues up at the Springfield Training School this year. "Hub" is acting as first team backstop and expects to make good on the varsity.

Another good little athlete who got away from the Queen City unseen is "Curly" Taylor. The boroughite is making things hum in the mining camps.

BEATTY IS DECLARED THE MODEL ATHLETE

Former Schoolboy is Physically Perfect According to Examiner.

Captain Russel Lawrence Beatty, formerly a member of the Leal School track team of this city, where he got his early training, has been declared a perfect specimen of physical development by Dr. Meylan, the famous examiners of athletes. He is the present holder of the intercollegiate record for shot putting, and is expected to be the chief point winner for Columbia this season.

Ever since the tryouts for the Olympic team held last year Beatty has been under the doctor's care owing to a strained ligament in his shoulder but has now so far recovered that he is able to heave the iron ball with his old-time form. He has been advised not to enter the twenty-four pound shot put event as this task was considered too heavy for his shoulder.

During a recent physical examination by Dr. Meylan, Beatty was declared physically fit. He has wonderful power in his shoulders and arms and is herculean in stature. Even as a schoolboy Beatty outclassed by far all of his fellow schoolmates in athletic enterprises and when he announced his intention of entering some college he was sought by nearly every collegiate track manager in the country.

REASONS WHY SOMERSET SCHOOLS WILL NOT ENTER

Because North Plainfield High School would not agree to go in for football, baseball and basketball as league sports, the Bound Brook High School manager would not consent to the formation of a Somerset county league when approached by Manager Charles Beckman of the boroughites, recently. Bernardsville High School, the other proposed club for the circuit, refused to consider the matter because of the fact that the school boys of that place are already entered in a tri-county league.

This makes a league out of the question as far as baseball is concerned and may also be instrumental in abolishing basketball organizations of this nature. North Plainfield High School has eliminated football from its athletic routine and as a consequence could not consider the formation of an all around league where the gridiron sport would be included.

O'DAY TO BE RETAINED.

Chicago, Feb. 25.—Henry O'Day the veteran umpire, whom Charles W. Murphy named as manager of the Chicago National League team to succeed Johnny Evers before the club was sold to Charles P. Taft, of Cincinnati, will be retained in his new position during the coming season.

LOCAL SHARPSHOOTER MISSED BUT ONE SHOT

Neaf Apgar Tops the List in Championship Tourney at Madison Square Garden.

Neaf Apgar, of this city, and Hank Stevens, of Bound Brook, topped the professional sharpshooters in the opening round of the championship tournament that opened in Madison Square Garden, New York, last night, in connection with the annual sportsmen's show. Apgar and Stevens returned forty-nines and Mrs. L. G. Vogel, the feminine crack, of Detroit, one of the finest gunners in the country, came second with forty-seven.

The work of the Plainfield and Bound Brook pair was the bright feature of the first day's shoot. Accommodating themselves to the sighting conditions of the big garden the squads of trap shooters began to pile up big scores in both the morning and evening competition. Scores of the gunners found the blue-rock targets more than forty out of their fifty shots. Apgar missed but one bird out of a possible fifty and is looked upon as the dark horse in the remaining rounds of competition for the title.

BASEBALL NOTES

Up steps Eddie Collins and says as how he hopes the Federal League may succeed for the benefit of the players.

Pitcher Ralph Glaze who used to zizzle 'em over the plate for the Boston Red Sox has signed with the Topeka Club of the Western League.

"Hobe" Ferris, former Boston-Minneapolis second baseman, has been appointed referee of the Rhode Island Boxing Club, at Thornton, R.I.

Mackinaw coats made from Navajo Indian blankets will be worn by the Boston Braves this season. Seeing Charlie Schmidt in an Indian blanket will make a great story to tell his children.

President Tom Chivvington, of the American Association, is somewhat nettled over the doings of the Federal League. From where Tom stands it looks as though the Feds contemplated putting the A. A. and the International League out of business.

Shortstop Johnny Lavan, who was shifted from the lowly Browns to the champion Athletics last season, has been returned to the Browns. As Johnny hooked up with the Athletics in time to share in the world's series money last fall he "ain't saying nothin'."

Connie Mack says that when a manager is no longer wanted by the club with which he is under contract, he should be released outright. That's all right for Connie, who practically owns the team he manages, but how about the club owner who signs a star player as manager at a fancy salary.

WITH THE BOXERS

Jerry Lucente, the Spokane 115-pounder, offers to back himself against any boy of his weight.

Promoter McCarey, of Los Angeles, is endeavoring to arrange a battle between Leach Cross and Jack Britton.

"Kid" Williams is figuring on a trip to Australia in case he fails to get a match with Johnny Coulon.

Digger Stanley, the bantamweight champion of England, has been put out of the game by a broken hand.

A new boxing club has been organized in Cambridge, Mass. Only amateurs will be permitted to don the mitts.

The San Francisco boxing promoters are loose again. They are in one fine tangle over the question of permits.

Bob Fitzsimmons is going to show ring followers that he is a "comeback" if he has to go all the way from New York to Steubenville to do it.

Jimmy Clabby got $2,814 for defeating Sailor Petrosky at Vernon the other night. If Petroskey had been a copper instead of a sailor Jimmy wouldn't have taken the money.

CANCEL 1, SCHEDULE ANOTHER.

Manager Duclos VanMater, of the North Plainfield High School basketball team, received word yesterday from the manager of the New Brunswick High School team that it would be unable to entertain the boroughites at that place next Saturday afternoon because there is no available place to be had to play in. No other date could be agreed upon so the match will be dropped for the season. The team will go to New Brunswick on March 6 to play the Rutgers Prep. team.

COAKLEY COACHES COLLEGIANS

Andy Coakley, formerly a member of the Plainfield Baseball Club and one of the best known baseball promotors in the State, has been signed up by the Columbia University baseball management to coach that team during the coming season. Fifty-nine candidates have reported to Coakley and the latter is putting them through a regular schedule of preliminary drills.

BRUGGY A HOLD-OUT.

Frank Bruggy, left-fielder for the Plainfield Pets during the championship race of last season, is a hold-out, having refused to sign a contract tendered him by Manager Pieper, of the Lawrence, New England League Club. Bruggy will not say anything regarding his plans except that he is after more kale.

DRISCOLL FLIES SOUTH.

Davy Driscoll, formerly captain of the Plainfield Baseball Club, has left for Porto Rico with a squad of baseball stars to perform in the southern climate prior to the opening of the season here.

GYMNASTIC PROGRAM FOR LOCAL AUDIENCE

Athletic Festival Arranged for the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium Next Month.

Local followers of gymnastic work and those interested in the various forms of college athletic activity will be treated to one of the best programs of this nature ever presented in this city, Saturday evening, March 14, when the Springfield Training School gymnastic team is scheduled to appear in the local Y. M. C. A. gymnasium. The Springfield team is one of the best turned out in recent years and the official program received here this morning is an elaborate one.

The Y. M. C. A. college was represented in an exhibition here two years ago by a gymnastic team and two of the athletes who were here on that occasion will be present again March 14, Manager H. A. Lorenz and Captain E. D. Gottsch being the repeaters. The other members of the team are R. E. Brasaemele, George W. Mackey, Raymond A. Anderson, A. L. Taylor, L. F. Laun, R. Esbjornson, H. R. Babcock, E. Heidt, G. W. Garniss and E. W. Pennock.

The program will include free hand drills, exhibitions on the flying rings and horse, pyrotechnic club swinging, wand drills, Swedish gymnastic demonstrations, parallel bar work and pyramid building by the team and a Hungarian Csardis dance by the team. A trio composed of Messrs. Anderson, Heidt and Taylor will render vocal selections and the program will be concluded by an athletic fest. This latter is an athletic dance divided into three parts, the first going back to the old Greek habit of consecrating the body before participating in the Olympic games, the second part deals with the modern world where a whirling movement introduces many of the characteristic motions and poses of field contests and baseball and the last movement expresses with still more abandon some of the most spectacular plays and attitudes in football.

N. P. H. S. BASEBALL STOCK SOARS, TOWNLEY RETURNS

As predicted exclusively in these columns last week, George Townley returned to North Plainfield High School as a post-graduate scholar yesterday, and was welcomed with open arms by those interested in the baseball team, particularly Ralph Smalley, the captain. Townley was considered the best all round athlete in the Borough High School last year and was awarded the Yale cup for superior all around school work.

The North Plainfield High School team needs a good pitcher just at present and Townley is just the man to fill the vacancy. He led the pitching staff for three years in the Canadian institution of learning and captained the team for one year. With a good batter, fielder and pitcher such as Townley back in harness the chances of the borough team have taken a considerable boost.

FORMER Y. M. C. A. DIRECTOR GAINING WORLD-WIDE FAME

Thomas Whitaker, formerly physical director of the local Y. M. C. A., and at the present time coach of the aquatic men of the Missouri Athletic Club, is gaining fame in all parts of the country at the present time as a developer of champion swimmers and recently he has turned out Norman A. Buck and Chauncey Heath both of whom attributed their entire success to Whitaker's coaching.

In an interview recently, Heath said: "I learned to swim in Grand Rapids, where there were no swimming coaches. I met a man from New York who had fifteen lessons in written form presented to him by Coach Whitaker, when Whitaker was in New York.

"I abandoned the form I was using and tried to follow the style as exponded in Whitaker's lessons. It made me a greatly improved swimmer; in fact, whatever progress I have made is due to hard work and close study of Whitaker's written lessons."

ARRANGEMENTS FOR FINAL GLASS TEAM COURT BATTLE

Plans are now underway for the final class basketball game of the season for the Borough High School and the Senior and Sophomores teams will meet the early part of next week in the final clash. The second year men are champions of the inter-class league and the Seniors, who could not enter a team in the league because of the rules that first team men could not take part in class athletics, are aching to get a chance at the champions.

The contest was to take place next Friday night, but Manager VanMater has arranged a game for that date and the contest was postponed. All first team men will be allowed on this game and the Seniors will be strengthened by the presence of Love, Burner and Dunning, while the Sophs will have no new men. Beckman, Lowe and Fairman will compose the rest of the Senior team.

MARTIN OREDERED TO REPORT THIS WEEK

Stallings Claims That He Will Use Jack as a Utility Infielder.

Jack Martin has received orders from Manager George T. Stallings, of the Boston National League baseball team, to be ready to report to the Hub city next Saturday afternoon when final instructions will be handed out to the players prior to the departure for the South, Sunday.

Stallings is ready to admit that he has a pretty nifty bunch of players on his string and Martin may be used as a utility infielder. Rather than warm the bench Jack claims that he will apply to the Bean town management for a release and try to get his old berth back on the Rochester team. All Martin needs to become a star in fast company is daily work and unless he is used daily he can never show his best form.

Frequent lay-offs during his career in league baseball have been disastrous to Martin's chances of landing a permanent berth as on each occasion when he just got under way he has been subjected to a setback by an injury or some other misfortune. This was particularly true when he played with the Yankees and the old Jinx appears to be hovering around his camp.

Stallings, in a preiminary announcement, states that Maranville will play the shortstop position and Martin will have to compete against seemingly unsurmountable odds to grab this berth from the versatile little Cuban. Ever since the Plainfielder broke into league baseball he has been up against big odds in the way of competitors, however, and many of his friends are optimistic of his chances of taking the veteran's place, although the latter has the favoritism of the manager on his side in the fight.

BASEBALL SUBSCRIBERS WILL GET FREE TICKETS

The baseball campaign that has been held in the North Plainfield High School camp during the past two weeks was brought to a close at a meeting of the financial committee yesterday. The canvassing was allowed to run over the appointed time for a few days owing to the many interruptions due to the important basketball games that have been played during the past week. When the final count was made it was found that there was just $200 that had been pledged by the citizens of the borough.

This is a little above the amount that was started out for but it will be used to remodel Hyde Oval and the spectators will be provided with benches this season as well as a fine level diamond on which they can expect to see many good games for their money. The job has been put into the hands of a contractor and work will be started on the remodelling in the near future. At the meeting held yesterday it was decided to give every subscriber of the campaign a complimentary season ticket which will be good for all of the home games.

P. S. R. ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION'S BANQUET

Members of the Public Service Railway Social and Athletic Club enjoyed the first annual banquet of the organization at the Hotel Waldorf, on East Front street, last night. McKeeley, Samuel Neill, Bernard Yansch and Gus Meisner, Jr., the latter the accompanist, played musical instruments and sang the latest popular songs and ragtime ditties to the enjoyment and edification of the many guests.

The officers of the club are H. J. Smith, president; B. B. Partain, vice-president; William G. Huenke, financial secretary; H. J. Eick, recording secretary; George J. Luhr, treasurer. The trustees of the organization are F. J. Keenan, O. P. Dumont and George Mundy. Superintendent J. J. Gettings was toastmaster at the dinner.

EMBASSY GUARD FOR MEXICO CITY

Considering Sending Strong Force to Capital.

WILSON MEETS CABINET.

State Department Notified That Benton's Body Will Be Given Up—Villa Says He Won't Now—Asserts Ranchman Killed Four.

Washington, Feb. 25.—The administration is considering the question of sending a sufficiently large military force to the American embassy in Mexico City to dominate the situation there so far as the protection of the foreign legations is concerned.

Great Britain has set up machine guns at her legation and Japan has a small marine guard at hers. France is said to be planning a similar step.

The state department has been advised by Diplomatic Agent Carothers of El Paso that Villa will surrender the body of William S. Benton, the British subject, but Villa declared at Chihuahua that he would not do so at present. He said he might surrender the body later.

Villa has made a new statement about Benton, declaring that the ranchman was a criminal and killed four men without provocation.

President Wilson talked the situation over with his cabinet.

Before the meeting a half hour was set aside by the president for a conference with Secretary Bryan. The latter wanted to present more details on the Benton episode as received in overnight dispatches. Mail reports from American consular officers also were due to reach here.

Every world power, with the exception of the United States, will shortly have armed marines or bluejackets guarding its interests in Mexico City. Germany and England already have legation guards there France and Japan have let this government know that they have decided on similar action. And the other nations maintaining separate embassies or legations in Huerta's capital have let it be known that they will follow the example. But this government will maintain its present position.

The question has been thoroughly canvassed, and it was understood that Rear Admiral Frank Fletcher, commanding the American fleet on the east coast, reported that he can get all of the men needed to guard Americans through from Vera Cruz in twenty-four hours. It was feared, however, that the presence of armed Americans in the capital might precipitate the dreaded anti-American demonstration.

Wants Benton's Body.

Every act of this government during the last two or three years in regard to Mexico has been in effect intervention, Senator Fall of New Mexico declared in an interview. Senator Fall believes that there should be intervention of a more positive kind than that which has been undertaken by the present administration.

"I do not think that this country should declare war against Mexico," said Senator Fall. "Mexico is a country that has done nothing to warrant such a declaration. But it has become evident that the Mexicans are not able to handle the situation which has developed within their own country. It is the part of this country to give the Mexicans who desire peace the needed assistance in bringing about this peace.

"It is the part of this country to see to it that property owned by American citizens and by citizens of the other nations be safeguarded."

The state department has wired Consuls Edwards, Corrothers and Letcher to renew their demands on Pancho Villa, the Mexican rebel leader, for the body of Benton. Villa has shown an utter indifference to the original representation of the Washington government. Just what course of reasoning he might have adopted to reach this degree of self assurance does not appear. The only reason that students of the situation here can offer for his attitude is the outlaw spirit that has kept him at the head of his army.

SCOURGE OF TYPHUS IN SPAIN

Deaths In Torrenueva Average Two Out of Three Cases.

Madrid, Feb. 25.—Typhus has decimated the population of Torrenueva. Two-thirds of the inhabitants are affected and the deaths average two out of three cases. The cemeteries are so full that bodies buried some time ago have been exhumed and the remains of typhus victims interred in the graves. Infected water is said to have caused the deadly outbreak of disease.

A TUDOR ROSE DESIGN FOR A RUNNER OR TABLE CLOTH

In the past few years designs more or less conventional have taken the place of naturalistic flowers of decorating covers to be used in the living rooms. Conventional designs lend themselves to almost any color scheme that may be harmonious with the walls and draperies, while a naturalistic design is annoying if it is not carried out in the colors nature gave to the original flower. Such a design as 14450, for instance would be equally effective developed in three shades of blue, blues and dull orange, yellows and browns, old rose and grey, green or in practically any combination one may wish to use. Embroider the leaves in flat unpadded solid work or outline-stitch and darning in the darkest shade. The stems may be done in either outline or flat solid work in a lighter shade of the color of the leaves, and the roses may be carried out in three shades of any color, using the darkest shade for the centers. On a runner, table-cover or pillow of Russian crash, monks' cloth, crafts canvas or heavy linen, the design should be worked with mercerized cotton, while if the covers are made of pongee silk, rope silk should be used for the embroidery.

Transfer pattern 14450, includes 4 corners, each 9 by 9-inches. These designs are appropriate for use on screens, pillows, bags, couch-covers and portieres as well as table-covers.

Guaranteed, hot-iron transfer pattern 14450 will be supplied to readers on receipt of price, 15 cents.

Some Cookery Suggestions

OYSTERS IN VARIOUS WAYS.

OYSTERS are the most popular and among shellfish the most extensively eaten. They are also the most important of all cultivated water products and with the exception of the sea herring the most valuable of all aquatic animals. Some desirable ways of serving them are given here.

Oysters and Macaroni.—Take boiled macaroni and raw oysters and place in alternate layers in a buttered baking pan, seasoning each layer with salt, grated lemon rind and a bit of red pepper. Add a small cupful of cream, cover top with breadcrumbs and bake in a hot oven. Serve with celery and thin slices of buttered brown bread.

For Special Occasions.

Chaudfroid of Oysters.—Blanch twelve large oysters in their own liquor, drain them and remove the beards. Have ready some aspic mayonnaise, coat each oyster well with this and let them set on the ice on a wire tray. Stamp out some dot shapes of red pimento, place these in rings of olives and set one in the center of each oyster. Mask with a little dissolved aspic and place them on little round croutes of fried or toasted bread. Serve and garnish with parsley sauce.

These Are Digestible.

Panned Oysters.—Toast thin slices of stale bread, butter and place in a shallow baking dish. Moisten with the liquor from the oysters and cover with raw oysters. Season with salt, pepper and small bits of butter. Cover with a tight lid and cook in a hot oven for seven or eight minutes or until they swell and the edges curl. They can also be panned in their own juice in a frying pan, seasoning with butter, pepper and salt. Serve on toast.

Cooked In Shells.

Oysters and Mushrooms.—Take some scallop dishes, as many as there are persons to serve. Put a small piece of butter into a hot stewpan. Add the oysters when the butter melts, with an equal quantity of chopped mushrooms, a minced shallot, some chopped parsley, salt and pepper to taste. Let these cook over a brisk fire for a minute or two; then fill the shells with the mixture. Put bits of butter here and there. Sprinkle with powdered cracker crumbs and brown the top with a red-hot poker or small shovel.

Daddy's Bedtime Story

How the Fairies Rescued the Gray Squirrel.

The Squirrel Was Rescued by the Fairies.

"IT was half snowing and half raining, and the fairies were hoping it would get just a little colder," said daddy. "Then it would freeze, and the snowy rain would stick to the trees and make most beautiful crystals and icicles, and they could play the castle game."

"What was that?" asked Evelyn.

"Whenever there were icicles," continued daddy, "or pretty ice shapes the queen of the fairies would call the other fairies and say, 'Let's play the castle game.' Then the fairies would come from all around and get in their places for the castle game. The queen of the fairies would pretend that she was to have the castle taken for her. They made believe that the icicles were turrets and towers, back of which was a huge wandering castle in which were prisoners held captive. The queen of the fairies would pretend that she was the new queen of a land whose subjects had been badly treated. And she would begin her reign with no prisoners. So all the fairies who were her followers helped her to destroy all the turrets and towers of icicles. So then the castle could come down and the prisoners get away without being seen.

"Well, they got plenty of snowballs ready first and hit at the icicles with the snowballs. The biggest and strongest icicles which wouldn't come down with just the snowballs they would pull down.

"And, oh, such fun and laughing as they always do have over this game!

"The day I'm telling you about it did freeze, and they did commence their game of pulling down the castle. The playground they chose was in a quarry where there were plenty of icicles attached to the rocks.

"But behind an icicle what do you suppose they found? A little gray squirrel had jumped to a rocky cliff where he had seen some nuts stowed away. After eating some of the nuts he had evidently felt so tired and sleepy that he had fallen asleep, for he was a very young squirrel. And as he slept it had grown suddenly very much colder, and the icicle by the rock on which he was had grown so thick that he couldn't pass it. So when the icicle was hit by a snowball and still did not fall down one of the fairies went up and pulled it down. You know fairies have a great deal of strength, even though they are so dainty and light.

"You can imagine the joy of the fairies when they found their imaginary game had really become true and that they had rescued a little squirrel. The squirrel was very cold, but he'd kept somewhat warm sleeping, and he soon revived by jumping around. He was so grateful to the fairies for saving his life that he invited them to the squirrel's next nut party."

VOTES FOR WOMEN

Conducted by the Equal Suffrage League of Plainfield and North Plainfield.

SUCCESS OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN CALIFORNIA.

A circular letter addressed to county clerks and registrars of California by the College Equal Suffrage League has made it possible to get the exact number of women in 37 out of the 58 counties who registered during 1912. These 37 counties contain 84% of the State's total population, so the results would seem to be representation of what happened throughout the entire State: in other words 70¼% of the women and 82 1-5% of the men registered.

Of the 4 counties showing a registration of from 90 to 100% of the women—of voting age—two were mining districts and two farming districts—near the thickly settled urban district of Oakland and Alameda.

Besides the above mentioned four counties—29 others out of the 37—showed registrations, varying from 50% to 90%, eighteen of the 29 being above 79%;; while the 4 with lowest registration were sparsely settled grazing districts.

It is interesting in this connection to note, that although no separate records have been kept as to the number of women and men who vote—it is possible to approximate the number. In the election for Governor in 1910—made interestingto a—on account of the strength of the Progressive party, the number of men voting is given by the Secretary of State as 393,893, while in 1912—the total vote cast for President (not likely to be of more account to Californians than the election of Governor) was 707,776—leaving a balance of 313,883 votes which can fairly be credited to the women voters.

When Senator Marks and others deplore the lack of interest in elections, they censure the men as we are the women—though naturally in the heat of this suffrage agitation throughout the country if the women do not turn out in full force at every election, the "antis" will consider an argument against granting suffrage to women. Being human it is possible to assume that local conditions and local interests will influence to a considerable extent the number of women voting, and that they do note vote on every issue with the same overwhelming percentage—still one might conclude—that representation of women is valuable for service along the lines which women understand—perhaps better than men—and that if they leave other issues chiefly to the male voters to decide, the community gets just the advantage most suffragists believe in; namely, that the women's vote supplements that of the men, their interests not being, in every instance identical.

As it happens—the calculation and to analysis of the vote in 1912—shows 61 3-10% of the registered women, as having voted—and 58 2-5% of the men—or as a woman writing from California to a friend here in Plainfield puts it—"We, who realized most painfully how few women really cared about the ballot before they got it, are astonished at the alacrity with which thousands—tens of thousands of women had registered in 1912.' She adds, "Of course the trouble with us lies in the multiplicity of elections—(12 in 18 months in San Francisco) and in the complexities of the recall, initiative and referendum, nomination by petition and other innovations. Many of the men positively refused to vote On local and moral issues—and qualifications of candidates—the women come out strong! They hold meetings where the issues are discussed—and candidates have to present themselves—and even men are glad to avail themselves of information secured through Women's Clubs—and civic meetings."

The good work done by the women—even in the short time they have been given the right to express their opinion at the polls is well exemplified by such laws as these passed this year by the California Legislature, the only measures endorsed by the women voters of the State, they tell us,—Equal guardianship act—giving father and mother equal custody of a minor child—and making them equally entitled to its services and earnings.

The Bastardy Ace—requiring fathers to support their illegitimate children.

An act limiting hours of labor of women and children: increasing the scope of the eight-hour day—that no woman shall be employed more than 48 hours a week—or more than 6 days in one week.

An act increasing the penalty for the crime of rape—from five to ten years' imprisonment, to a minimum of ten and maximum of fifty years.

The establishment of a State training school for delinquent girls, this act carrying with it an appropriation of $200 000—an important matter sometimes overlooked in this kind of welfare legislation.

An act providing for the free use of public schools—and the establishment of a civic centre at each and every public school in the State.

This same correspondent already quoted, remarks that "no really well informed person, actively participating in the affairs of this State, would dream of saying anything but that woman suffrage has been a success; that only good has resulted." "Personally, I know many an 'anti' fully and frankly converted," she adds.

The recall of Judge Weller is thus commented on by the San Francisco Press. I quote from two of their newspapers.

From the San Francisco Daily News:

"The recall of Judge Weller is due solely to the work of the good women of San Francisco. The new voters with little or no help from the men have won a great moral victory."

This is the police judge who in the so-called Hendricks case, reduced the bail of a man who had assaulted a girl. Bail of $3,000 set by one judge—he put later at $1,000, thereby allowing the man to escape. Indignant over this matter, the Oceanside Women's Club started a movement to recall this judge—and the women of the city conducted the campaign thereafter. Crist, the reform candidate, won in the residence districts where the women's vote was heavy.

The San Francisco Examiner says of the election:

"All indications point to the activity of the women voters in this election, and their high regard for their privilege of citizenship. The women of San Francisco by the charity of their judgment are giving a valuable object lesson to the world, of the wisdom of giving their sex the suffrage irrespective of their most obvious right to it."

In regard to this vote from the residence districts, I would like to add a few figures also compiled by the College Equal Suffrage League relatives to the percentages of votes of women in San Francisco. Mr. George recently quoted discouraging statistics as to the percentage of women voting in 4 or 5 of the precincts of San Francisco, without however, stating in what neighborhood they were—or of what character. Perhaps they were merely business centres—in which case the 4 to 10% of women voters would not be surprising. At any rate the following is vastly more encouraging and certainly illuminating: "In 16 precincts, one-half of the city, 50% of more of the registered persons are women. In 8 precincts, one-quarter of the city, women cast 50% or more of the vote. The smaller women vote was cast in precincts of the manufacturing, factory and laboring section, notably along the water front. The average woman's vote was cast in the precincts where men of modest means, clerks, mechanics, etc., live and the larger women's vote was cast in precincts where the prosperous professional and business people reside. The very wealthy Claremont district cast less than the average woman's vote. As in Berkeley, the most respectable residence section show the highest comparative registration of women; such as the 31st district, where 6,807 men, up to August 2, 1913, and 5,141 women registered, while the 21st, not a desirable residence district, shows 7,03 men registered and 1,356 women. This puts the balance of power into the hands of the most intelligent and conscientious women in the city with the great resultant advantage seen in the defeat of the race track amendment, the failure to return Eddie Wolf to the Senate and the recall of Police Judge Willer."

THE PLAINFIELD THEATRE

Fresh from a three weeks' triumph at the Park Theatre in Boston, where "The Clever Woman," was given its first metropolitan presentation, May Robson, America's premier comedienne in James Forbes' latest comedy and satire on modern-day life, will come to the Plainfield Theatre, Saturday afternoon and evening, February 28. No play which has appeared in Boston this season has received from the Hub critics such favorable notices as did May Robson. "A riot of laughter," is the Boston Journal's characterization of "The Clever Woman." "A hit—the kind of play that will always be popular," was the Boston American's verdict. "It is well worth seeing more than once," said the Post. "May Robson has a big success in 'The Clever Woman'," was what the Record said. "It's clean and funny," wrote the Herald critic. Mr. Forbes is well known to American play-goers because of his authorship of "The Traveling Salesman," "The Chorus Lady" and "The Commuters." His newest play gives May Robson a happy field for the display of her most remarkable versatility in parts of pathos as well as comedy. The story is a human one—human because it is happening every day. It is a story of the trials and tribulations and triumphs of a newly rich Western family, and of the magic of a wife and mother blest with a saving sense of humor and the art of diplomacy. Mr. Patch has surrounded his star with a well-balanced cast and a product second to none offered this season. The cast incudes Paul Decker, Ann MacDonald, John Rowe, Edith Conrad, Kathryn Clarendon, Phil Bishop and Burr Caruth.

"HOME SUNDAY."

Next Sunday will be known as "Home Sunday" at the Park Avenue Baptist church. All of the old church members are to be invited to attend the services. In the morning the subject of the Rev. Gabriel Reid Maguire will be "Home," and he will preach on the topic, "Mother," at the evening service.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

CHAPTER XXIV.

Miss Evelyn Rhodes, Reporter.

"YOU heard?" he said helplessly. "My God! It's funny, isn't it?" He laughed hysterically, and drawing out his handkerchief passed it across his forehead. "A pleasant thing to think about—a pleasant thing to remember."

"I thought I'd join you," said Professor Bolton. "Why, David, what is it? What's the matter?"

"Nothing," replied Kendrick wildly. "There's nothing the matter. Let me—by—please." He crossed the swaying platform and disappeared into the other car.

The train slowed down at a small yellow station. Mr. Magee peered out the window. "Hooperstown," he read, "Reuton—Ten Miles." He saw Mr. Max get up and leave the car.

Noiselessly Max returned to the group and stood silent, his eyes wide, his yellow face pitiful, the fear of a dog about to be whipped in his every feature.

"Jim," he cried, "Jim! You got to get me out of this. You got to stand by me."

"Why, what's the matter, Lou?" asked the mayor in surprise.

"Matter enough," whined Max. "Do you know what's happened? Well, I'll tell"—

Mr. Max was thrust aside and replaced by a train newsboy. Mr. Magee felt that he should always remember that boy, his straw colored hair, his freckled beaming face, his lips with their fresh perpetual smile.

"All the morning papers, gents," proclaimed the boy. "Get the Renton Star. All about the bribery."

He held up the paper. It's huge black headlines looked dull and old and soggy. But the story they told was new and live and startling.

"The Mayor Trapped," shrilled the headlines. "Attempt to Pass Big Bribe at Baldpate Inn Foiled by Star Reporter. Hayden of the Suburban Commits Suicide to Avoid Disgrace."

"Give me a paper, boy," said the mayor. "Yes—a Star." His voice was deep, his face unmoved. He took the sheet and studied it, with an easy smile. Clinging in fear to his side, Max read too. At length Mr. Cargan spoke, looking up at Magee.

"So," he remarked, "so—reporters, eh—you and your lady friend? Reporters for this lying sheet—the Star?"

Mr. Magee smiled up from his own copy of the paper.

"Not I," he answered, "but my lady friend—yes. It seems she was just that. A Star reporter you can call her and tell no lie, Mr. Mayor."

It was a good story—the story which the mayor, Max, the professor and Magee read with varying emotions there in the smoking car. The girl had served her employers well, and Mr. Magee, as he read, felt a thrill of pride in her. Evidently the employers had felt that same thrill. For in the captions under the pictures, in the headlines and in a first page editorial, none of which the girl had written, the Star spoke admiringly of its woman reporter who had done a man's work—who had gone to Baldpate inn and had brought back a gigantic bribe fund "alone and unaided."

"Indeed?" smiled Mr. Magee to himself.

In the editorial on that first page the triumphant cry of the Star arose to shatter its fellows in the heavens. At last, said the editor, the long campaign which his paper alone of all the Reuton papers had waged against a corrupt city administration was brought to a successful close. The victory was won. How had this been accomplished? Into the Star office had come rumors a few days back of the proposed payment of a big bribe at the inn on Baldpate mountain. The paper had decided that one of its representatives must be on the ground. It had debated long whom to send. Miss Evelyn Rhodes, its well known special writer, had got the tip in question; she had pleaded to go to the inn. The editor, considering her sex, had sternly refused. Then gradually he had been brought to see the wisdom of sending a girl rather than a man. The sex of the former would put the guilty parties under surveillance off guard. So Miss Rhodes was dispatched to the inn. Here was her story. It convicted Cargan beyond a doubt. The very money offered as a bribe was now in the hands of the Star editor and would be turned over to Prosecutor Drayton at his request. All this under the disquieting title, "Prison Stripes For the Mayor."

The girl's story told how, with one companion, she had gone to Upper Asquewan Falls. There was no mention of the station waiting room nor of the tears shed therein on a certain evening, Mr. Magee noted. She had reached the inn on the morning of the day when the combination was to be phoned. Bland was already there. Shortly after came the mayor and Max.

"You got to get me out of this," Magee heard Max pleading over Cargan's shoulder.

"Keep still!" replied the mayor roughly. He was reading his copy of the Star with keen interest now.

"I've done your dirty work for years," whined Max. "Who puts on the rubber shoes and sneaks up dark alleys hunting votes among the garbage while you do the Old Glory stunt on Main street? I do. You got to get me out of this. It may mean jail. I couldn't stand that. I'd die."

A horrible parody of a man's real fear was in his face. The mayor shook himself as though he would be rid forever of the coward hanging on his arm.

"Hush up, can't you?" he said. "I'll see you through."

"You got to," Lou Max wailed.

Miss Rhodes' story went on to tell how Hayden refused to phone the combination; how the mayor and Max dynamited the safe and secured the precious package, only to lose it in another moment to a still different contingent at the inn; how Hayden had come, of his suicide when he found that his actions were in danger of exposure—"a bitter smile for Kendrick in that" reflected Magee—and how finally, through a strange series of accidents, the money came into the hands of the writer for the Star. These accidents were not given in detail.

"An amusing feature of the whole affair," said Miss Evelyn Rhodes, "was the presence at the inn of Mr. William Hallowell Magee, the New York writer of light fiction, who had come there to escape the distractions of a great city, and to work in the solitude, and who immediately on his arrival became involved in the surprising drama of Baldpate."

"I'm an amusing feature," reflected Magee.

"Mr. Magee," continued Miss Rhodes, "will doubtless be one of the state's chief witnesses when the case against Cargan comes to trial, as will also Professor Thaddeus Bolton, holder of the Crandall chair of comparative literature at Reuton university, and David Kendrick, formerly of the Suburban but who retired six years ago to take up his residence abroad. The latter two went to the inn to represent Prosecutor Drayton and made every effort in their power to secure the package of money from the reporter for the Star, not knowing her connection with the affair."

"Well, Mr. Magee?" asked Professor Bolton, laying down the paper which he had been perusing at a distance of about an inch from his nose.

"Once again, professor," laughed Magee, "reporters have entered your life."

The old man sighed.

"You got to get me out of this," Max was still telling the mayor.

"For God's sake," cried Cargan, "shut up and let me think!" He sat for a moment staring at one place, his face still lacking all emotion, but his eyes a trifle narrower than before. "You haven't got me yet!" he cried, standing up. "By the eternal, I'll fight to the last ditch, and I'll win. I'll show Drayton he can't play this game on me. I'll show the Star. That dirty sheet has hounded me for years. I'll put it out of business. And I'll send the reformers howling into the alleys, sick of the fuss they started themselves."

"Perhaps," said Professor Bolton, "but only after the fight of your life, Cargan."

"I'm ready for it!" cried Cargan. "I ain't down and out yet. But to think a woman—a little bit of a girl I could have put in my pocket—it's all a big joke. I'll beat them. I'll show them. The game's far from played out. I'll win, and if I don't"—

He crumbled suddenly into his seat, his eyes on that unpleasant line about "Prison Stripes For the Mayor."

"If I don't," he stammered pitifully, "well, they sent him to an island at the end. The reformers got Napoleon at the last. I won't be alone in that."

At this unexpected sight of weakness in his hero, Mr. Max set up a renewed babble of fear at his side. The train was in the Reuton suburbs now. At a neat little station it slowed down to a stop and a florid policeman entered the smoking car. Cargan looked up.

"Hello, Dan," he said. His voice was lifeless; the oldtime ring was gone.

The policeman removed his helmet and shifted it nervously.

"I thought I'd tell you, Mr. Cargan," he said. "I thought I'd warn you. You'd better get off here. There's a big crowd in the station at Reuton. They're waiting for you, sir; they've heard you're on this train. This lying newspaper, Mr. Cargan, it's been telling tales—I guess you know about that. There's a big mob. You better get off here, sir, and go downtown on a car."

If the mighty Cargan had looked limp and beaten for a moment he looked that way no more. He stood up and his head seemed almost to touch the roof of the car. Over that big patrolman he towered; his eyes were cold and hard again; his lips curved in the smile of the master.

"And why," he bellowed, "should I get off here? Tell me that, Dan."

"Well, sir," replied the embarrassed copper, "they're ugly. There's no telling what they might do. It's a bad mob. This newspaper has stirred 'em up."

"Ugly, are they?" sneered Cargan. "Ever seen the bunch I would go out of my way for, Dan?"

"I meant it, all right, sir," said Dan—"as a friend to a man who's been a friend to me. No, I never saw you afraid of any bunch yet, but this"—

"This," replied Cargan, "is the same

"Did you hear what he said? A mob!"

old bunch—the same lily livered crowd that I've seen in the streets since I laid the first paving stone under 'em myself in '91. Afraid of them? H—! I'd walk through an ant hill as scared as I would through that mob. Thanks for telling me, Dan, but Jim Cargan won't be in the mollycoddle class for a century or two yet."

"Yes, sir," said the patrolman admiringly. He turned out of the car, and the mayor turned to find Lou Max pale and fearful by his side.

"What ails you now?" he asked.

"I'm afraid!" cried Max. "Did you hear what he said? A mob! I saw a mob once. Never again for me!" He tried to smile to pass it off as a pleasant jest, but he had to wet his lips with his tongue before he could go on. "Come on, Jim. Get off here. Don't be a fool."

The train began to move.

"Get off yourself, you coward!" sneered Cargan. "Oh, I know you! It doesn't take much to make your stomach shrink. Get off!"

Max eagerly seized his hat and bag.

"I will if you don't mind," he said. "See you later at Charlie's." And in a flash of tawdry attire he was gone.

The mayor of Reuton no longer sat limp in his seat. That brief moment of seeming surrender was put behind forever. He walked the aisle of the car, fire in his eyes, battle in his heart.

"So they're waiting for me, eh?" he said aloud. "Waiting for Jim Cargan. Now, ain't it nice of them to come and meet their mayor?"

MISS WARD ON SUFFRAGE

Catt expressed herself as being much concerned because of the misconception of the new definition of feminism. In her mind feminism means 'The Freedom of Women Everywhere.' It means that the women of Turkey can abandon their veils and go about unashamed with faces exposed to view. In China it means that the feet of little girls shall be no more maimed and makes for education. Mrs. Catt's definition is a beautiful one and means so much to women throughout the world. Unfortunately, however, feminism has come to mean loose thinking, and, in the minds of some, loose living also. I wish that I could here today allay any dread of feminism that you may have in your minds.

"There are many suffragists who, while favoring the cause, are yet lukewarm, and this because of their conservatism. We want the conservatives with us as well as the progressives, but we want most of all that they shall all be honest. It is very humorous to my mind to hear the women who are anti-suffragists go out and speak upon the street corners in order to prove that the place for woman is in the home. English women have been organized for the past thirty years. In 1885 the women of England forced the passage of the Corrupt Practices Act. In fact the majority of men who have been returned to Parliament within the last thirty years have been pledged to equal suffrage. So you see they are in a position to give the women of England the vote if they so desire. In 1910 we succeeded in securing a majority of 176 for our conciliation bill, which was designed to reconcile the discordant elements in parliament on the mooted question of equal suffrage. This bill provided that women rate payers, or 'occupiers" as they are known in England who now have the privilege of a limited vote, should have the full vote. There are only a few of such in England, about 1,250,000, but the women felt that if this could be accomplished it would be an entering wedge.

"Militant suffragists met with an unexpected reaction in England. The militant movement was a great contribution made to the cause of woman by the Pankhurst family. Men of England have outraged the feelings of the militants and have offered them insults and indignities of all kinds upon every possible occasion. As regards militancy the English government has, it can be said, never done the right thing. The attitude of the government in this respect has always been wrong. Militant suffragism is really due to government interference. The militants believe that the only way in which they can reach a thick skinned English man is to attack and destroy his property. Hence the window smashing, bomb throwing and other acts of violence which have been perpetrated from time to time in England.

"Women in America are more highly respected and far better treated than in any other country in the world."

Another speaker at yesterday's meeting was Mrs. Esther Ogden, president of the Elizabeth Equal suffrage League, who spoke of her pleasure that the Legislature of this state had expressed its willingness to amend the constitution so as to grant the women of this State the right to vote. She also spoke of a political canvass which the equal suffragists of Elizabeth made last election, canvassing one of the wards of that city by means of letters, with postal cards enclosed, and requesting the voters who received them to state on the card whether they favored equal suffrage or not. Only 18 per cent. of all the letters sent out were replied to, the speaker said, and the experiment was not deemed successful, although of the 18 per cent. of replies 70 per cent. were favorable to the cause. In conclusion, Mrs. Ogden urged that all suffragists be steadfast and loyal to the cause at all times, pointing out the fact that apathy of feeling did not avail much at any time in the way of accomplishment.

WOMAN FOUND HALF FROZEN

Children See Her Wandering Along Passaic River.

Garfield, N. J., Feb. 25.—Children on their way to school saw a woman wandering along the Passaic river between the Passaic and Monroe street bridges. She was shivering, her face turned toward the sky, her hands folded as if in prayer. Her lips, blue from the cold, mumbled something, but the children could not understand her. She told them to go away when they asked questions. One of the boys ran to police headquarters and told Chief Forss.

"There's a woman praying near the river, and it looks as if she's going to jump in if she can find a hole in the ice."

An officer took the woman in charge. Her ears and hands were numb from the cold. They gave coffee and food to her and she told the police she was Miss Fannie Suda, thirty-two years old, of Passaic. She would say no more.

Friends at the house in which she lives said she had been acting very queerly for several days.

NO DIVORCE FOR MRS. DUDLEY

Court Dismisses Case, but Separation Suit Is Pending.

Jersey City, N. J., Feb. 25.—Vice Chancellor Stevenson, sitting in the chancery chambers here, dismissed Mrs. Marie Mulock Dudley's suit for absolute divorce against Edward Dudley, a lawyer of Philadelphia and Camden. Mrs. Elizabeth Batelle Vanderpoel, a divorcee, of Saugerties-on-the Hudson, was named.

Mrs. Dudley had two suits pending, the other being for separate maintenance and alimony. Mr. Dudley filed a cross bill for divorce. He charged desertion. Until the lawyers can agree on what part of the suit expenses shall be borne by Mr. Dudley the court will withhold decision in Mrs. Dudley's suit for maintenance and the bill for desertion started by the husband. The case will be disposed of next Tuesday.

The Dudley litigation has been in the divorce courts since 1907.

RECALLS LAFAYETTE'S VISIT.

Reading Without Glasses Another Feature of His Ninety-fifth Birthday.

Long Branch, N. J., Feb. 25.—Recalling seeing General Lafayette on his visit to this country in 1824 and reading the Bible without glasses were two of the features of E. Tuckers Welsh's ninety-fifth birthday. The old gentleman received a shower of postal cards and to all callers he gave some friendly advice, declaring that his ninety-fifth birthday was one of the pleasantest in all his life.

Mr. Welsh is of English ancestors and born in Jersey City. He lived at Oceanport sixty-four years, moving here a year ago. Mr. Welsh is a temperance advocate and a Democrat. At ninety one he walked four miles alone. He is now quite feeble.

PAY INCOME TAX BEFORE MARCH 2

Collector of Internal Revenue Sounds a Note of Warning to Those Affected.

PENALTY FOR NEGLECT

All Returns from Corporations or Individuals Must Be in by Next Monday—Ignorance Not Taken as An Excuse.

Warning is being sounded by the Internal Revenue Collector, who his charge of the collection of the income tax in this vicinity, and whose office is in Newark, that there remain yet but a few days in which Plainfielders can file their affidavits as to the amount of their income. This is also true as regards corporations doing business in this section of the State.

All returns must be filed in the office of the Collector of Internal Revenue, before the close of business next Monday, March 2. Heavy penalties are provided for all those individuals and corporations that neglect to do so, unless it be, it is said, that they were unable to do so because of illness.

All corporations, whether they have made money or lost it, and all individuals whose incomes equal or exceed $3,000 a year or whose incomes from March 1, 1913, to December 31, 1913, equalled or exceeded $2,5000 must comply with this part of the law. There is a special provision in the law which, when March 1 falls on a Sunday, as it does this year, the following day is designated as the last day for the filing of the required returns. This is Article 176 of the Income Tax Regulations, and reads:

"When the due date as above defined fails on Sunday or on a legal holiday, the last due date will be held to be the day next following such Sunday or legal holiday, and the return should be made to the collector not later than such following day, or, if placed in the mails, it should be posted in ample time to reach the collector's office, under ordinary handling of the mails, on or before the date on which the return is thus made due in the office of the collector."

Advices received from Washington and which will be of interest to Plainfield persons and corporations, call especial attention to the penalties for failure to file returns, and enumerate them, as follows:

"For neglect or refusal to make a return within the prescribed time, corporations are liable to a penalty not to exceed $10,000.

"And in case of neglect or refusal to make, or for a false or fraudulent return made, 100 per cent. is to be added to the tax.

"And in the case of neglect or refusal to make and verify a return within the prescribed time (except in case of sickness or absence) 50 per cent. is to be added to the tax.

"And in the case of an officer of a corporation, or like institution, charged with the duty and responsibility of making and verifying a return, who makes a false or fraudulent return with the intent to defeat or evade any assessment or tax, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be subject to a fine not to exceed $2,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, together with costs.

"For neglect or refusal to make a return within the prescribed time the penalty is not less than $20 nor more than $1,000.

"And in case of intentional neglect or refusal to make, or for a false or fraudulent return made, there shall be added 100 per cent. of the tax.

"And in case of neglect or refusal to make a return within the prescribed time (except in case of sickness or absence) there shall be added 50 per cent. to the tax."

FOLA LAFOLLETTE TO SPEAK TO LOCAL SUFFRAGE BODY

Local suffragists are looking forward with much interest to the talk which will be given Tuesday night, March 3, by Miss Fola LaFollette, daughter of Robert M. LaFollette, the famous United States Senator. Miss LaFollette will speak in Columbus Hall, taking as her subject, "Democracy of Women's Suffrage," and she has gained a reputation as a gifted talker which should attract a large audience. Miss LaFollette was on the stage for several years, and is said to have a remarkably fine delivery and an interesting way of drawing the attention of those who hear her. She recently spoke to 3,000 at a big mass meeting in Jersey City, and made many converts for the suffrage cause.

N. W. PIKE DIES AFTER BRIEF ILLNESS

Was Prominent Citizen for More Than Half a Century.

Noah Webster Pike, a resident of this city for more than fifty years, died yesterday afternoon at his home on East Front street, after an illness of six weeks. Heart trouble is given as the cause of death. Mr. Pike came to Plainfield from New York. He leaves a wife and six children. His children are Bert, Joseph, J. A. Garfield, W. D. Garfield, Lottie and Carrie. Both of his daughters are married. His son Bert is engaged in the drug business in the South. A twin brother of the late Mr. Pike, is a lawyer in New York. For a long time Mr. Pike was a member of the First Presbyterian church, under the pastorate of Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham. He was one of the charter members of the Asbestos Club, of this city, but withdrew from that well-known organization about ten years ago.

Mr. Pike was known by his friends and associates to be a man of great strength of character, and of pronounced religious views. He was a close student of the Bible and was very fond of engaging in controversial arguments with others on Biblical subjects. He was also a versifier of no mean ability. Some of his verses have been published and circulated here in Plainfield, from time to time, in pamphlet form. At one time Mr. Pike used to drive a fine team of horses. His father left him a comfortable income. During his long residence in Plainfield, Mr. Pike occupied the house in which he died.

Just before he was taken ill Mr. Pike remarked to a friend that he had seen the "handwriting on the wall" and felt that he would never leave his house again. His death occurred six weeks later.

Funeral services will be held at his late residence, at 408 East Front street, Saturday morning at 11:30 o'clock. Burial will be in Greenwood cemetery, Brooklyn.

PROF. RASHLAND ADDRESSES STUDENTS

Gives Splendid Interpretation of "Evangeline" and "Billy's Rose."

Before the students of Mt. St. Mary College, yesterday, Professor Frederick Rashland, Ph. D., of New York, gave an able address; also reciting "Evangeline" and "Billy's Rose." It was a literary treat to listen to the perfect rendition by the professor of the beautiful story of "Evangeline," exactly as written by Longfellow.

The poem is a charming one in itself and its beautiful composition was enhanced by the interpretation given. Mr. Rashland possesses exceptional descriptive powers and it is said that seldom has a lecture been so well received by the student body.

Dr. Rashland was connected with the New York public schools for a number of years and later was employed by Miss Helen Gould, now Mrs. Sheppard, for the furthering of settlement work among the residents of the East Side, New York city. He is a speaker of much note and has won a reputation for his brilliant recitations.

FATHER MILLER'S STIRRING SERMON AT ST. JOSEPH'S

The services held at St. Joseph's church in the borough, last night, were largely attended. The sermon was preached by the pastor, Rev. W. H. Miller. He spoke of the mutability of life, of how everyone must die some time, whether rich or poor and said that where such a little thing as earthly honor was concerned, people should work indefatigably both day and night, but that where religion was concerned people were often apt to be delinquent in their observances, and apathetic.

WEEK OF PRAYER SERVICES.

The speakers for the special week of prayer and evangelistic services to be held at Hope chapel next week have been announced by the pastor, Rev. Frederic L. Greene, as follows: Monday, Rev. Philip B. Strong D. D., of the First Baptist church; Tuesday, Rev. Dr. Charles M. Anderson, of the First M. E. church; Wednesday, Frederick H. Andrews; Thursday, Rev. C. C. Cain, of Grace M. E church. The speaker for the preparatory service to be held on Friday evening will be announced later. Holy communion will be celebrated on Sunday, March 8.

Y. W. C. A. BREAKS ALL RECORDS

Campaign Thus Far Nets Total Subscriptions of $7,199.75.

FROM 319 INDIVIDUALS

Miss Dorothy Fleming's Team Now Leads, Collecting $572.75 Yesterday—Reports Received With Enthusiasm.

Plainfield women have in only two days' work collected almost three-quarters of the $10,000 fund which they are seeking for the Young Woman's Christian Association, of this city. The total amount of the two days' subscriptions is $7,199.75. Yesterday the collections totaled $3,034.50. The previous day, when the financial campaign was begun, brought in returns of $4,165.25. There were 101 women canvassing the city for subscriptions yesterday. Money was collected from 319 individuals. Good work was done by each of the ten teams of solicitors.

For the number of workers engaged and the total amount collected on the first day of the campaign the women of the Plainfield Y. W. C. A. have broken all records of sister organizations of the kind. This announcement was made yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock, when the members of the various teams met at the Y. W. C. A. headquarters to make up their lists of the total collections for the day. A telegram announcing the record breaking accomplishment of the women of this city and congratulating the association for its unusual success was received from the finance committee of the National Board of Y. W. C. A.'s, which met in New York yesterday afternoon. Miss Harriet Taylor, executive secretary, who is in charge of the Y. W. C. A. in Plainfield, was present at the meeing.

The campaign for funds will continue throughout today and tomorrow. It is expected that the total collections, at the close, will exceed $10,000, the amount it was determined to raise.

Details of the work done by the several teams of canvassers yesterday are interesting, showing that no team greatly exceeded the amounts secured by others.

Team No. 1, of which Mrs. Rufus Lincoln is captain, collected $126.50 from 34 subscribers, with ten canvassers at work. Team No. 2, of which Mrs. Frank W. French is captain, had ten canvassers at work, collecting from 27 subscribers, $169.50. Team No. 3, of which Miss Edith Mellick is captain, had nine canvassers working, collecting from 37 subscribers, $364.25. Team No. 4, of which Miss Dorothy Fleming is captain, had ten canvassers at work, collecting from 46 subscribers, $572.75. Team No. 5, of which Mrs. Francis de Lacey Hyde is captain, had eight canvassers working and collected from 32 subscribers, $562.25. Team No. 6, of which Mrs. Lewis Williams is captain, had ten canvassers at work, collecting from 22 subscribers, $106. Team No. 7, of which Mrs. Walter McGee is captain, had nine canvassers at work, collecting from 37 subscribers, $338.75. Team No. 8, of which Mrs. Leslie R. Fort is captain, had nine canvassers at work and collected from 21 subscribers, $206. Team No. 9, of which Mrs. W. D. Murray is captain, had ten canvassers working, collecting from 30 subscribers, $234. Team No. 10, of which Mrs. W. A. O'Donnell is captain, had sixteen canvassers at work and collected from 32 subscribers, $352.50.

Talk to Miss Harriet Taylor, executive secretary of the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association, and who is now directing the present financial campaign of the Plainfield Y. W. C. A., and learn something about the work that the world-wide organization has done and is now doing, as a reporter for The Daily Press did today. She is an interesting talker as well as an able speaker and added to the charm of her manner is a winning personality that undoubtedly does much to aid her in her work.

"This morning you put down your daily newspaper," said Miss Taylor, "and through your mind, still stirred perhaps by foreign news telling of the forging ahead of some nation and the remaking of others, there paced a shadow pageant of womanhood; womanhood with eyes startled by the light of a new liberty; the little Chinese 'Daughters of the Revolution'; the Argentine woman adrift in the chaos of changing social conditions; the Japanese school girl coming forth into bewildering new religious freedom; the Hindu girl, forced into an incomprehensible new economic life. Who is there by the women interested in the world-wide work of the Young Woman's Christian Association to lead them over 'the rough roads' of this changing order?

"What was it that the Chinese progressives, in the thick of the Revolu-

PART OF COSTLY JEWELS RETURNED

Including the Large Necklace With Eighty-five Pearls.

OTHER STONES MISSING

Police Chief P. S. Kiely Discusses Phases of the Robbery and Says He is Anxious to Capture the Guilty Man.

A representative of the General Accident Insurance Company, of New York city, visited former State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman in his New York office, yesterday, and returned a portion of the $15,000 worth of loot that was taken from the Ackerman home on West Eighth street the night of January 3. Included in the returned swag was the string of eighty-five pearls which has been left intact, also a smaller pearl necklace from which several gems and a pendant are missing and a diamond ring.

When Chief Kiely was sought for a further description of the returned articles this morning, he said:

"Mr. Ackerman has not acquainted me with the nature of the articles returned to him by the insurance company. I can readily understand the attitude the insurance company has taken in the matter as the return of the jewels will mean that the company will not have to pay the amount of the policy which protected the gems. It was to their interest to secure the jewels and I am equally as ambitious to put the thief behind the bars. I have secured evidence that will incriminate Charles Connors, the real culprit, and my attention will be directed to apprehending the robber.

"The finger prints descovered by Detective-Sergeant John Flynn at the Ackerman home which I had photographed by Michael Evans, of the Chicago Bureau of Identification, tally exactly with those of the noted criminal and this evidence cannot be wrong. There is not a single case on record where finger print evidence has proven inaccurate and Connors is without a doubt the burglar in this instance."

It is definitely known that "Ice Wagon" Connors was in Plainfield several days before the Ackerman robbery was committed and it has been since learned that Connors and an accomplice had been negotiating with a tourist agency for a trip around the world at that time. There was a hitch, however, in the tour plans, and the two prospective travelers left the agency office, saying that they would make arrangements elsewhere.

Inquiry at the office of the casualty company in New York brought forth the information that part of the jewelry had been recovered, as stated in these columns yesterday. George W. Johnson, who handled the case for the company, said that after advertising the $5,000 reward a man had called him up and told him to have the money ready, for an emissary would bring part of the loot into the company's office.

Mr. Johnson says that the man stated no time, adding that it would occur sometime within the next two weeks. Five days later he did arrive, said Johnson, after business had closed one night, and received part of the reward for the jewelry he had delivered. Mr. Johnson said that no promise of immunity from prosecution was made the man, who departed immediately after receiving the money without leaving either his name or address.

The Connors mentioned is 35 years old and hails from Chicago. Although a noted criminal, he has served only one short term in the Joliet Penitentiary during his career as a "porch climber." He was arrested in London three years ago and although he escaped conviction he was forced to leave England. Connors was arrested on December 13, 1913, in Westthester county, with three other men as they were about to commit a burglary by climbing a porch. They were discovered in the act by a chauffeur who gave the alarm and after shots had been exchanged all the thieves were captured. Somehow, Connors induced the authorities to release him on a bond of $250 on his promise that he would return jewelry stolen from another house at Irvington on the Hudson some time before. Cash bond was given and Connors sent an emissary to the police with a message to the effect that all negotiations were off unless the other three prisoners were released on a nominal bond of $250 each. The other two were held and are still in jail awaiting trial.

CHURCH OBJECT OF HELL'S HATRED

Declares Father Bogan in a Strong Sermon at St. Mary's Church.

REVIEWS CHRIST'S LIFE

Preacher Urges His People to Be Temperate in Indulgence, Pure in Thought and Fearlessly Upright in Their Dealings.

Declaring that the Catholic Church stands today, as always, the object of hell's hatred and its agents calumnies, but that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, Father B. M. Bogan preached to a congregation of more than 1,200 persons, at St. Mary's church, last night. It was the beginning of the religious services of Lent. Men and women from every walk of life attended last night's services. There were professional and business men, working men and women the toilers of the city, women of leisure, and both white and colored people in the large audience that listened with the greatest interest and attention to the sermon.

Nothing new or novel was presented by Father Bogan for the consideration of his hearers. He took from inspired lips the injunction "Except ye do penance, ye shall all likewise perish."

"An unpopular consideration as a topic of even present day religious opinions," said he, "but a subject none the less as important as the vital truth of Christianity, that God's son became Man. Fifty years ago Lent, in America, was included in that comprehensive condemnation called 'superstition.'

"Today an unwilling world includes it among the very trade considerations of business. Churches are opened and fashionable society gives at least other titles to the unhampered pleasures it enjoys. For you, my dear people, the Church of the Living God rehearses the scenes of early Christianity and directs your steps toward the hill of Calvary. You gather again about the figure of your Murdered Friend and as you trace the work of the infuriated mob—the thorn-crowned head, the cloven side, the nailed hands and feet—and know it is the price that justice demands for your redemption, you bow your hearts in deep contrition, and ask 'what, my God, what part have I played in this dread tragedy of my redemption?"

For forty minutes the preacher brought his congregation through the scenes of the Saviour's public life that led up to the summit of Calvary—His sermons, His miracles and His home-like sympathy for the poor. Through it all he traced the right of human investigation for proofs of His divinity.

"And so stands His Church today," he said, with dramatic earnestness "the object of hell's hatred and its agents' calumnies. And so has it ever stood; yes, and shall so stand to the end of time, vulnerable in the Judases that still recline at table with Him in His Church, but confident in His divine assurance that 'the gates of hell shall not prevail against you.'

"'As they have done unto me, so shall they likewise do unto you! Christ took men, not angels, to use as His instruments in doing the work of His Church. That among them there have been recreants whose perverse will, whose freedom was left to them, and in its malevolence betrayed Him, is indeed deplorable; that within the family of the faith His children have turned against Him is the frank acknowledgement of her history. That despite this cankering influence from within and the incessant malevolent attacks from without, the Church still lives, still carries His message to the waiting world, not conceding one iota of her divine principles to kings or emperors, this is the proud signet of her divine character. It is the fulfillment of the astonished world of the injunction of the Son of God to His human messengers, 'Go forth and teach, and behold I am with you.' See to it, my brethren that your business life, your work-day life, your domestic and social life be the open book from which the world about you shall read the meaning of your faith. Be temperate in all indulgence. Be pure in thought as well as act. Be fearlessly upright in your dealings with your fellow-men and your 'scorn of scorn' will be tempered with the thought of conscience in line with principle and to you who believe in the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man shall not long be denied."

The temperature report from The State Trust Company today is as follows: 9 a. m., 23 degrees; 11 a. m., 41 degrees; 1 p. m., 45 degrees.

"DOLLAR DAY" TO BE BIG EVENT HERE

New Subscribers Can Get Daily Press for One Year For One Dollar.

If there were doubts about the success of the "Dollar Day" which the Plainfield Merchants' Association has planned for Saturday of this week, they have been dispelled. The merchants are falling in line rapidly, and some of the bargains which they will offer on that day will be such as have never been equalled in Plainfield, if anywhere. The first of the Dollar Day bargains are advertised in today's Daily Press, but the offers which will appear tomorrow night will mean dollars to every Plainfield housewife.

The merchants have been advertising the sale for a week or more by placing big banners on the sides of their delivery wagons, and in the advertisements of the Merchants' Association in the daily papers. In addition to this posters have been put up in the country towns surrounding Plainfield.

There is no line of trade in which this will not bring forth big savings. Unusual campaigns have been worked out, by which certain specified articles will be sold in lots at one dollar each. Some of the shoe dealers will make one dollar reductions on the price of every pair of shoes above a certain figure. In Somerville, where a similar day was held last week, one firm sold forty overcoats for men at one dollar each. Whether or not a bargain as large as that will be offered here remains to be seen when the advertisements of the progressive business men appear in tomorrow's Daily Press.

The Daily Press is playing an important part in advertising the day. It has sent out 3,000 circular letters to people not now reading the paper, calling their attention to the offerings by the merchants, and offering to send the paper for one year for one dollar to any person not now subscribing to The Press. Although these letters did not go out until yesterday over one hundred replies had been receivd by noon. Many people who are now subscribers are having copies sent to distant friends, so that they can keep in touch with what is going on at home. Under no circumstances will these one dollar subscriptions be received from subscribers now receiving the paper, as the offer is purely an introductory one, made for advertising purposes only.

AGED JEWELER TRAPPED AND ROBBED

James T. Vanderveer Lured to Vacant House by Well-Dressed Bandit.

Somerville, Feb. 26—James T. Vanderveer, who for more than fifty years has kept a jewelry store in the TenEyck Hotel building here, was induced to carry diamonds worth $500 to an unoccupied house on the outskirts of town last night by a bandit, where he was beaten into insensibility and robbed of the diamonds, his own gold watch and a considerable amount of money.

A well dressed young man, who gave his name as Richard Fox, visited the Vanderveer store several times in the past week and inspected diamond rings. The stranger said that he had formerly lived at Bound Brook, four miles from here, but had recently taken up his residence in East Somerville.

He asked Mr. Vanderveer to meet him at the Hotel Somerset at 7 o'clock last night with the diamond rings and to accompany him to his home, in order that his wife, who was an invalid, might make a selection. The man met the aged jeweler and walked with him to a vacant house near Peters Brook.

The bandit left him standing near the front portico under the pretext of going to the rear of the house to gain an entrance, but instead he made a circuit around the building and struck Mr. Vanderveer on the head from behind. A second blow on the head knocked the jeweler senseless and the highwayman robbed him.

Mr. Vanderveer recovered and walked to the main thoroughfare a block away.

DR. STRONG TO SPEAK.

POINTS OUT SOME DANGERS

Former Mayor Newton B. Smalley Discusses the Sewer Question.

SOUNDS WARNING NOTE

Pending Solution of County Lines and State-wide Question of Sewage Disposal Suggests Another Remedy for Present Situation.

Former Mayor Newton B. Smalley, of North Plainfield, in an interview today presents some interesting views regarding the proposed plan of Plainfield and North Plainfield, as well as Dunellen, to build a joint sanitary sewage system with disposal works on the Darling farms and points out what he considers as some of the real dangers sure to attend the carrying out of this project and sounds a note of warning to the governing bodies. He also touches upon the pending solution of county lines between the city and borough and consolidation of the interested territory. Mr. Smalley made the following statement:

"Plainfield and North Plainfield are approaching the danger line in taxation resulting in forcing up values on property to meet the demands.

"The ability to sidestep trouble before it lands is vested in the governing bodies known as the Mayor and Council.

"The present status of the sewer question is well worth calling to their attention, the danger in front. The enormous cost of litigation to enable both city and borough to change from the present location to the one proposed can hardly be estimated. Plainfield would be involved in new law suits for damages, and the borough would be on the defensive. The location having been decided on before purchase furnishes another reason for public funds to slip into the sewer from whence no return has ever been found.

"The Darling farm cannot be called a permanent location and while New Brunswick, Somerville and Bound Brook are sewering into the Raritan river, against the advice of the State Board, and thereby playing a waiting game, Plainfield is urged to go ahead under the same authority without looking far enough into the future to avoid the inevitable.

"Pending the solution of county lines and the consolidation of the interested territory and the State-wide question of sewer disposal, let North Plainfield install sewers through its streets where most needed, and through its main line along the brook take from Plainfield enough to relieve the strain on their main line now over-loaded, and pump it all into the Plainfield present beds and get results before the great mistake is made.

"Conditions are changing rapidly, and what looked a good location a few years ago is now, under improvement and should not be disturbed by the people of this city and borough, just because of plans prepared or money spent.

"I have watched the proceedings for years, and believe I am fully justified in sounding this note of warning."

CARVALHO PORCELAINS BRING GOOD PRICES

The Total Proceeds of Yesterday's Sale Reach $4,425.

The total proceeds of the opening day's sale of the remarkable collection of rare Chinese porcelains belonging to S. S. Carvalho, of Plainfield, was $4,425. The sale will probably end today. It is being held at the American Art Galleries, in New York. Some well known Plainfield people were in attendance on the opening day.

The highest price paid was for a blue and white garniture of five pieces, two being cylindrical vases, 10½ inches high, and three being pear-shaped jars of the K'ang-shi period. The purchaser paid $262.50 for the pieces.

A splendid pair of blue and white beaker-shaped vases was bought for $135. These vases were also of the K'ang-shi period. They stood eighteen inches high and were of most unusual design.

For a single ovoid ginger jar, blue and white, of the Ch'ien-lung period, eight and a quarter inches in height, $115 was paid.

A pair of vases in dense Ming porcelain, in the shape of bottles and with bulbous necks, 16¼ inches in height, brought $90.

A blue and white temple jar of the K'ung-shi period, inverted pear-shaped, was sold for $85.

Much intrest was shown in the offering of plaques and plates, most of which were of the rarest kinds. Two large circular blue and white plates of the K'ang-hsi period, seventeen and one-quarter inches in diameter, were purchased for $25. Two blue and whte deep plates of the K'ung K'anf K' wang-hsi period, with a "four season decoration in pale and deeper blue, were bought for $50. These plates were thirteen and three-quarter inches in diameter.

Many other important purchases were recorded at the opening session of the sale, including a blue and white temple jar of the Ming period, with unique hat-shaped top, by Block. The price paid was $65. A tall oviform blue and white vase, with short neck and tapering foot, brought $100.

In opening the sale, Thomas E. Kirby, the auctioneer, pronounced the Carvalho collection the finest of its kind ever offered to the public. He said that many of the items were not to be duplicated anywhere, and the eagerness with which the antique lovers who attended the opening session sought the offerings caused much lively bidding.

PLAINFIELD LODGE OF ELKS ADOPT NEW HOUSE RULES

Plainfield Lodge, No. 885, B. P. O E., at its regular meeting held last night, passed an entire new set of house rules to govern the Watchung avenue clubhouse. They comprise in all twenty-eight sections and in some respects make a radical departure from the existing rules. The Elks' minstrel troupe held a short rehearsal after the meeting and from now on will meet twice a week until the show is given shortly after Lent.

SWIMMERS' CORNER

Followers of college water sports have commented on the lack of new records in the season's league tournaments, for it was confidently anticipated last fall that almost every association standard would go by the board. The confidence was not unwarranted, as there are several swimmers in the varsity ranks fast enough to establish better figures than those on the books, but want of opposition and poor luck have so far interfered with their form.

The only mark that is practically out of danger is the plunge for distance. Not a man has come within yards of the 80-foot classic created by Willis, of Pennsylvania, about two years ago, and it is unlikely that it will be surpassed or even approached.

Yale and Princeton are tied for intercollegiate honors in both swimming and water polo and the dual meet between them two this week will be worth going miles to see. Records will probably topple in several of the swimming events, while in water polo two teams of evenly matched strength will take the water.

The graduate and undergraduate committees of the Intercollegiate Swimming Association gathered yesterday at the New York A. C., to make arrangements for the league championships to be held on March 6 at the College of the City of New York, and several important questions came up for decision.

Chief among them was the system of scoring in fancy diving contests. It was the consensus of the delegates that the rules of the Amateur Athletic Union should be adopted, but they are so complicated that it was thought advisable not to put them in effect until next season.

WHITMAN WILL RETRY BECKER

May Be Witness Himself at Second Trial.

WILL PROSECUTE IN PERSON

Ex-Police Lieutenant Accuses Vallon. Says He Was the Actual Rosenthal Slayer—Latter Calls It a Move In Another Frameup.

New York, Feb. 26.—Ex-Police Lieutenant Charles Becker will be tried again for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, within a very short time. The final decision rests with the judge before whom Whitman moves trial.

Whitman himself will take the stand, and his evidence may be in a measure corroborative. He does not believe the case is injured by the court of appeals' decision.

Becker's attorney, Joseph A. Shay, said that Becker will testify in his own defense. He asserted that Bridgie Webber might tell a different story this time.

Charles G. F. Wahle, counsel for the four gunmen, will appeal to Governor Glynn in their behalf.

Harry Vallon denied Becker's charge that he (Vallon) fired the shot that killed Rosenthal. He said that Becker is trying to keep the four gunmen from confessing by making them believe that he will save them.

Ossining, N. Y., Feb. 26. — Charles Becker came from the death house in Sing Sing after an emotional half hour in his cell with Joseph A. Shay, the lawyer who won a reversal of the murder decree from the court of appeals, and talked with reporters of his life during the last seventeen months and of his hope for the future.

Becker is confident that because he was automatically removed from the police force when charged with the murder of Rosenthal, he must be reinstated, for the former lieutenant is positive that Whitman will quash the indictment against him. After reinstatement Becker will undertake to "sacrifice his life in the work," he declared, to drive gunmen from New York, into prison, into the river, or into the country. And if the police commissioner refuses to put him over a band of ten or twelve men and give him carte blanche for this work, Becker will resign from the force.

As a member of the police force or as a layman Becker declared he would try to run to earth the murderers of Rosenthal, who he says are still at large, one of them being without doubt Vallon.

While the four men in the death house, Becker declared, are thieves and crooks of the worst sort, he feels sure they didn't do the murder. Becker plainly stated that he felt his conviction was due to improper defense at his trial.

"I have been suspicious," he said, "of all those lawyers, and I am sorry that I was suspicious of Shay at first until he delivered the goods."

Life In the Death House.

The rest of Becker's talk was concerning his life in the death house during the last seventeen months, in which time he has seen twelve men go from their cells into the death chamber. Since the court of appeals decision has been expected, Becker says he has been saved from excruciating agony on every Tuesday because of definite presentiment by reason of which he has known that the decision was postponed. When he examined his mind, he says, he was convinced the decision would no longer be postponed, and he spent the day in trying to keep his hope within bounds.

Coming into the warden's office, dressed in a flannel shirt, gray striped trousers and felt slippers, Becker put his arms around Father Cashin. It was the first time the chaplain had seen him since the reversal was announced.

"Father," Becker whispered, "come to me tomorrow morning. Come early, at sunrise if you will, and give me absolution."

"I'll come," said Father Cashin, and, turning to a newspaper man, the chaplain added, "Justice has been done."

CHURCHES AND THE CITY.

In his speech at the Plainfield Board of Trade dinner, Rev. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of Grace Methodist church in New York, emphasized the fact that the tendency on the part of ministers to preach about the hereafter, and do little or nothing for the present day material welfare of the whole people, is one of the greatest causes of empty pews. Of course Mr. Reisner did not refer specifically to Plainfield, but he did tell how, by modern methods, he had built his congregation up from a struggling one of about three hundred, to one of fifteen hundred. The enthusiastic approval of what this gifted clergyman said to an audience composed of members of practically every known faith, proved that the business and professional men there assembled agreed with every word he said.

Are not many of our churches neglecting the present day welfare of the people in the mad rush for the new Jerusalem in the far distance? Is it not the case too often that they turn their faces to the streets of gold and gates of pearl, leaving their people to dwell as best they may in order to better appreciate improved conditions in the hereafter? It is true that in a community like Plainfield, where moral conditions are of the best, and where the city is well and honestly governed, there is much work done for the betterment of the whole people, but the business of "making people happy," which Rev. Mr. Reisner said was his principal occupation is one which might well be elaborated upon in this Queen City of the State.

While the making of happy people is perhaps the first thing for the churches to consider, they also can help in the betterment of the city, no matter how well it is run. That has been proven here, when the question of liquor licenses has been paramount, but there are plenty of other things which can be helped by more co-operation on the part of religious bodies. This does not embrace the acceptance of partisan politics or personal or geographical aggrandizement. Rather it includes social service, such as is being worked out in a few local organizations on a small scale. It deals with the moral betterment and goes further, including the educational, esthetic and physical improvement as well. If the churches wish to accomplish the greatest possible amount of good they must keep continuously and everlastingly at the task of making ideal cities for the dwellers within them.

SHARING OF PROFITS.

Profit sharing in business has developed to a point where it is consuming the attention of practically every industry and all localities. Isolated employers in various lines have put the proposition into action with generally satisfactory results noticeable in an increased interest and efficiency on the part of employes so favored. No less an authority than Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard, has declared for equitable profit sharing in all and every branch of industry. George W. Perkins accepts the proposition as forecluded and advises that melon-cutting for employes take the form of stock in the company rather than of cash.

Mr. Perkins argues that surplus cash given the employes is readily consumed by the recipient who raises his standard of expenses to eat up the new excess of money of which he becomes possessed. The worker merely spends what he makes, according to this idea, with no more benefit to him than if his wage is small. Given a bonus in stock in the corporation for which he is working, it is declared he will have a greater interest in the business.

The Perkins plan has its shortcomings. The employe, except in rare cases, will spend his cash bonus in bettering his living conditions and in making a better home for his family. For the exceptios, there is no remedy. The granting of stock bonuses instead of cash ones will in years bring about, by so constantly watering of stock each year, a corporation in which the employes may outvote the original employers. Moreover, the cash bonus looks bigger to the employe than the offer of stock. It may be put to whatever use or investment he wishes, often to relieve some stress in finances. So it may be argued that, instead of increasing the employe's interest in the business, the stock bonus may not be so effective as the cash donation.

Mr. Perkins evidently proposes his plan to increase the working capital of a corporation. Should such capital be needed, the employe like his employer should forego receiving his annual dividend. By so doing the employe increases his investment in better working conditions and a larger capacity for employment while the employer profits in the enlarging of the factory and capacity for producing money.

In view of the local discussion on the question of votes for women we hesitate to bring the subject into these columns, but the article by George Creel in the current "Century" is the strongest argument we have yet seen in favor of the vote being given to the "opposite sex." He is authority for the statement that "in all the older equal suffrage states there is yet to be recorded an instance of insult to women in connection with the franchise," which rather effectively offsets the argument that the people which the women will be brought into contact with at the polls, are not proper persons for them to meet.

"With regard to the liquor traffic," says Mr. Creel, "there can be no question that the voting woman is as bitterly opposed to the saloon as she is to the brothel. Kansas, of course, has had state-wide prohibition for years; and Illinois, Oregon and Arizona, where the woman vote is scarcely a year old, cannot be fairly counted either one way or the other. All the other seven, however, have local option laws that are drying up the liquor like some huge blotter. Wyoming is 90 per cent. dry. Colorado has fifty dry counties out of sixty-two. Only eighteen of Utah's twenty-eight counties are wet and sixteen of these are mining camps. Idaho, 90 per cent. dry, passed a search and seizure bill at the last session, also a law compelling an oath from patrons of drug stores, and California's list of dry towns has grown from 200 odd to over 600 since suffrage."

A former Plainfield councilman, who has given much time to the study of city government in various parts of the country, will furnish the contributed editorial for Saturday's Daily Press. He goes into an exhaustive description of the successful operation of commission government in a city made famous by President Wilson, and every word he has to say is well worth reading.

THE FORUM.

(With the issue of last Friday the Daily Press notified the public that it would no longer carry on the discussion, in its columns, which had been in progress for two weeks preceding. That rule will be adhered to. We print herewith two letters from Percy S. Brown which are self explanatory, and in connection with them will state that aside from one communication, either accepting or declining Mr. Brown's challenge, we will not print anything more on the subject unless it becomes a matter for the news columns of the Daily Press.—Editor.)

Editor Plainfield Daily Press:

I enclose for publication an open letter address to Rev. John Mulry, whose speech before the Knights of Columbus was published in your paper on the 24th inst. Although this letter is to Mr. Mulry, I would also advise that it is hereby extended to Rev. B. M. Bogan, who so argued against the Menace in your columns. I have no desire to slight the home talent and would be pleased to afford first refusal for a debate to Mr. Bogan. In this connection I would state that if Mr. Bogan will take up the gauntlet I will agree to extend the subjects of the debate to cover some claims made in his paper, the Plainfield Messenger, bearing on the patriotism of his co-religionists. The debate, if held, will be conducted on lines to be agreed upon by those most concerned and to be open to the general public.

Yours very truly,
PERCY S. BROWN.
439 East Seventh St.

OPEN LETTER.

Rev. John A. Mulry,

Dear Sir:—In a speech which you delivered before the Knights of Columbus, in Plainfield, on Washington's Birthday, you stated, if correctly reported in the newspapers, that there is nothing in the teachings of the Catholic (Roman) church that menaces the government. You called all who object to the political aggressions of the Papal Hierachy "Bigots." You made other statements that I hasten to deny. Newspaper arguments lead nowhere, but an open discussion before the public would be very beneficial.

Therefore I offer the following suggestion, you, or someone whom you may select, take the affirmative of the following and I, or someone whom I may select, will take the negative.

The Roman Catholic church is not in politics.

The Roman Catcholic church is not un-American.

The Roman Catholic church does not wish temporal control in this country.

The Roman Catholic church is not an enemy of our public schools.

The Roman Catholic church is not opposed to free speech and free press.

These will do to open the question. You need merely state that you are willing to debate these or similar questions and we can then perfect plans and "start the ball rolling." The burden of proof lies on the shoulders of "the Bigots."

Yours truly,
PERCY S. BROWN.

Editor Plainfield Daily Press:

As the incident mentioned in the accompanying letter of Miss Clara Markeson's visit to Butte, Montana, has been used against the National Anti-Suffrage Association, by suffragists of Plainfield as well as Westfield I would beg the courtesy of your space for its publicity.

To the Editor of The Standard:

In the last issue of your paper statements were made concerning Miss Clara Markeson, an anti-suffrage organizer, charging her with complicity with the liquor dealers of Montana. The paper which is quoted, the "National Forum," is a liquor sheet of exceptionally low character. Miss Markeson was said to have interviewed the editor and it is implied that she worked with the liquor men.

The following statement issued by the national president of the Anti-Suffrage Association, Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge, clears up the points in question. Let me add one further word of explanation. "The "National Forum" had printed anti-suffrage material on its own responsibility, deliberately conveying the impression that it was contributed by anti-suffragists. The paper was asked by letter to desist. It paid no attention. The statement follows:

"The suffragists, repeating in new form the oft-disproved charge that the National Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage co-operates with the liquor interests have published the report that this organization is now working with the liquor people in Montana. They base their accusation on the fact that Miss Clara Markeson while in Butte, Montana, as the official representative of the national association called on the assistant editor of the "National Forum," a publication devoted to liquor interests and demanded that he cease at once and entirely the publication of articles written by me, taken from the Protest, issued as our leaflets.

"In other words they claim that their assertion is proved by the fact that Miss Markeson was sent across the continent for the express purpose of telling the Montana liquor people that this organization would in no way identify itself with them and their activities. Miss Markeson was sent to Montana. She did announce that under no circumstances would this organization make the fight against suffrage with the help of the liquor men. She spoke for the national association which would not permit itself to be stigmatized by even the appearance of such a co-operation. She did this because the national association asserted then as it asserts now its right to choose the agencies with which it shall work and to refuse to be chaperoned by undesirable persons or group of persons.

"Mrs. ARTHUR M. DODGE."

This gives quite clearly the facts. It seems strange that reputable Christian people should be so eager to blacken the fair name and impeach the intelligence and sincerity of other equally reputable and we trust equally Christian people who are weary of denying a lie that "will not down," but that appears anew with every new day. The choice of weapons shows to what a pass have come those who want to enter politics to purify them.

Very truly yours,
GRACE DUFFIELD GOODWIN.

In conclusion I would add my word to that of Mrs. Goodwin regarding the tactics used by the suffragists in this matter of the eternal "Liquor Interests."

Did any male campaigner ever succeed simply on the making of UNSUSTAINABLE charges against the other side?

Do our suffrage friends believe it is a step towards their success to have their pet arguments downed and their charges proved unfounded and false?

This merely in addition to the admirable criticism contained in the last paragraph of Mrs. Goodwin's letter.

Yours very truly,
R. A. LAWRENCE.

SUFRAGISTS SECURE PROMINENT SPEAKERS

Final Arrangements Made for Mass Meeting in Elizabeth on March 16.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Mrs. Beatrice Forbes-Robertson Hale, George M. LaMonte, Judge James C. Connolly, Mayor Victor Mravlag and Champlain L. Riley will be among the speakers at the big county mass meeting to be held in Proctor's Broad Street Theatre, Elizabeth, Monday night, March 16, under the auspices of the New Jersey Men's League for Suffrage, of which Mr. Riley is the president. Final arrangements for the meeting were made at a meeting held in the office of Judge Connolly, in Elizabeth, last night.

Reports from the various committees showed that the details for the meeting are progressing and that there is a great demand for tickets. Plainfielders can get tickets at Armstrong's drug store and box seats from Mr. Riley, 7 Myrtle avenue, the borough. This meeting will mark the opening of a vigorous campaign of education which suffragists will wage pending the election next fall.

The suffrage amendment having passed both the Assembly an Senate by large majorities, suffragists throughout the State are working harder than ever to bring the question to a successful conclusion and those desiring information on the subject are urged to attend the approaching meeting.

tion, called the Y. W. C. A.? They declared that it was the most needed organization of the day in China.

"It would seem as if possibly this great world-wide and undenominational sisterhood, with its flexible machinery, its purpose founded only upon the love of Christ and of humanity, can perhaps step in the breach far better than any other agency, in troubled times, to help the women of new made or new making democracies to find themselves.

"There is another side of the story, just as there is 'the other side' to the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans. Into the melting pot of the nations of the earth dark skinned women and girls are pouring with their husbands and fathers. The problem of protecting immigrant women against exploitation when they enter the United States has been taken up by the Y. W. C. A. The immigrants are assisted to a social life in their new and strange surroundings. Surprisingly adequate results have already been accomplished in this direction at the railway stations and steamship piers in New York. The same system is to be extended throughout the country. Plans are already being laid to handle the immigrant problem at the time of the expected large influx of women and girls into Pacific ports after the opening of the Panama canal.

"Through the good offices of the Y. W. C. A. that city-ward lure which once seemed so overpowering among country reared girls is quite likely to slacken and will in time perhaps, disappear. For the country girl, better than most of us, is learning by remaining at home and where her life has set her, that 'verily the city is the great; joyous, significant heart of things, but the country is the soul.'

"Plainfield women and girls have come to realize that membership in the local Young Women's Christian Association entitles them to share in all the interests which the National Board of Y. W. C. A.'s is conceiving and offering to young women all over this country. Such membership enables them to come into more or less close relations with all of the types and the problems of young womanhood throughout the world. Plainfield's Y. W. C. A., like its sister organizations everywhere, looks for inspiration, stimulation and enlightenment from the parent organization, the National Board, the time and attention of the members of which is devoted to an attempt to solve the problem of girls you know, of all the girls you read about, of all those girls who want to share their problems and tell of their solution of problems with others.

"The leaders of girlhood find more complete satisfaction in their work than any other life work could possibly have given them. These leaders of young womanhood are of two kinds. There is the trained secretary who leads the way, yet never forgets the girl at the other end, and the so-called 'woman of leisure,' who serves in a volunteer and an advisory capacity, contributing from the rich experience of a woman of affairs and often from the still deeper experience of wifehood and motherhood. It is difficult to determine which learns the more from the other—the girl from college, factory or country-side, who looks to these older women for leadership, or the women who are thus given the happiness of working and playing with girlhood, for 'the greatest art in the women's business is that of using youth.' It is no easy matter, this. Youth is a terrible force. It has all to learn, but it is youth, the most beautiful as well as the most hopeful thing in life. And youth is the thing upon which the full development of life for every woman depends. Always she must have youth by her side if she is to know her own full meaning in the scheme of things.

"It is such women who are doing great and noble work for the girl you saw from the train window, she whom you read of in today's newspaper; for the girl who makes what you wear, and all the girls whom you know. All these and others are being led to a new and joyous land of new horizons; new enterprises."

LEVERIDGE WITNESS IN STATE'S PROBE

Local Electrical Engineer Tells How Expenses Were Incurred by Officials.

Roland W. Leveridge, of West Eighth street, was one of the witnesses examined yesterday during the three-hour session of the Economy and Efficiency Commission probe into that body's affairs in Trenton. Six witnesses, all connected with the department, were on hand ready to be questioned but few were heard at that time. The probe will be resumed Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

It is alleged that absolutely no supervision is kept over the twenty-one inspectors employed by that department and although the law stipulates that they must serve eight hours a day there is no check kept on the time they actually spend in the service of the State. They put in reports weekly on their work and these were accepted apparently without question.

Mr. Leveridge, the electrical engineer in the employ of the department, admitted under fire of questioning by John P. Murray, counsel for the commission, are allowed carfare when they report at the office in Trenton, "about half the week." They also allowed lunch money according to the Plainfielder's testimony. Mr. Murray continued to bore in with persistent inquiries concerning those expense accounts. "When these engineers stay over, as you say they sometimes do, they engage a room at a hotel, we are supposed to assume?" "Yes," said the structural engineer, "and they charge that up, they do."

It was stated that Mr. Leveridge's expense account amounted to $757.-95. When seen by a Daily Press representative this afternoon, Commissioner Lewis T. Bryant, who has been conducting the State Department of Labor during the last nine years, refused to commit himself on the subject.

Grace George is to be seen soon in a new play by Desmond Coke, an English writer, called "One Hour of Life."

Tyler, president of the Board of Education, will preside.

The address which he is to deliver before the "People's Forum" has been given before some of the strongest civic and social organizations in the country. It is said to be a masterly, popular presentation of the causes underlying political progress. Admission is free to everyone. FIRE CAPTAIN TO BE NAMED MONDAY

Councilmanic Fire Committee Agree Upon Appointee But Withhold Name.

The fire committee of the Common Council held a caucus last night, at which the selection of a man to fill the vacant captaincy in the fire department was discussed at considerable length. While none of those present would speak for publication, today, it is generally understood that all parties concerned are working harmoniously and the private to be selected was fully agreed upon. There are two aspirants for the position, James Fitzpatrick who is now acting captain at headquarters, and Edward Vail, who is stationed at No. 1 house. No hint was given out as to which would be honored.

It was stated, however, that Mayor Percy H. Stewart will present the name of the man who is to be confirmed at the regular meeting of the Common Council to be held next Monday night. According to the usual mode of procedure the appointee is first recommended by Chief Doane and after the name is given to the Common Council by the Mayor it is then referred to the fire committee. If the latter agrees with the selection the name is then referred back for final confirmation.

A considerable portion of the time at last night's caucus was devoted to a discussion of the budget for the coming year. This requires considerable time to complete and is to be taken up at regular intervals before the final result is announced.

CHIEF CONDEMNS TIER'S ICE HOUSES

In Consequence No Ice Will Be Stored There This Winter.

On the ground that the three ice houses owned by William Tier and situated on Tier's Pond, on Front street, near Watchung avenue, are in such an unsafe condition as to endanger the lives of workmen who were about to engage in repairing them, Chief Doane has condemned all three structures.

Further use of the buildings, which have a storage capacity for over 40,000 tons of ice, has been forbidden. All of the buildings are fully fifty years old. The recent heavy snowfall has caused the roofs to sag and the side walls to bulge. Chief Doane was fearful of his own safety when he visited the houses yesterday, and made a thorough inspection as application had been made to him by the owner for permission to make repairs.

In consequence of Chief Doane's edict of condemnation Mr. Tier will house no ice this winter. Instead, it is said, he will purchase ice from Watchung Valley as he needs it. The ice formerly cut on Tier's pond and which was stored in the three old houses was used in the freezing of ice cream. None of the ice taken from the pond mentioned was sold to householders of this city as its sale is forbidden by the Board of Health.

McKelvey, pastor of Warren chapel. The wedding march was played by Mrs. William Trembath. The bride was attended by Miss Edith Kreutzfeldt, and Walter E. Stevens was the best man. The house was attractively decorated for the affair which was attended by twenty-five guests. The groom is employed by the Spicer Manufacturing Company, and the couple will make their home in this city.

SNAKE TALK FOR BOYS IN Y. M. C. A. RALLY MEETING

The man who has expelled the fear of snakes from the minds of innumerable Plainfielders, Dr. Allen Samuel Williams, of New York city, is coming to teach a new generation of Plainfield boys snake lore Saturday morning, February 28, at the Y. M. C. A. Dr. Williams will show some of his new stereoptican pictures of various species of reptiles, and their anatomies and colored views of snake charmers in India, scenes in the Florida Everglades with Seminole Indians who were his companions on his snake hunts there and a portrait of "Richie" Mole, aged thirteen, Boy Scout, of the Island of Trinidad, British West Indies, who assisted Dr. Williams on his recent hunt after big constrictors in the tropics and who, Dr. Williams declares, is the most courageous snake hunter he ever knew.

The success of Dr. Williams' lectures are in part due to his humor, as his audiences are kept laughing almost continuously. The elementary knowledge of the life-histories of reptiles taught includes how a snake sees, hears, moves, eats, drinks and sheds its skin. Dr. Williams is an enthusiast on camping for boys and girls, has visited over fifty camps in seven different states, including the Jersey Boys' Camp of this State Y. M. C. A., at Lake Wawayanda and Kamp Kiamesha, of the Newark Y. M. C. A., and is the "Father" of the Camp Directors' Association of America. He has served in the faculty of the Summer camp and Training Schools of the National Boy Scouts of America. By New Jersey's public schools authorities Dr. Williams' work is welcomed and highly valued and one of its most enthusiastic advocates is Superintendent of Schools, Ira W. Travell, of Ridgewood, who first heard Dr. Williams at the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. when Mr. Travell was principal of Plainfield High School.

LOCAL SCHOOLBOYS TRIMMED BERKELEY

Metropolitan Aggregation No Match For Plainfield Youths.

During forty minutes of scrappy play on the Y. M. C. A. court yesterday afternoon the Leal School basketball team defeated the Berkeley School aggregation, of New York city, by a score of 31 to 20. The rival forces were evenly matched and the battle was closely waged from whistle to whistle. Many decisions were rendered by the Metropolitan official throughout the issue which did not come up to the standard and as a result there was much "kicking" on the part of the locals and their cohorts.

Dribbling featured the visitors' play and they had trouble keeping within the bounds prescribed by the A. A. U. rules. Time and again the visitors brought the ball down the floor by rapid dribbling only to be penalized for some infraction of the rules.

Murray Hall, a Fanwood boy, appeared in the New York teams' ranks in a forward position and topped the goal getting list for the losing side with a trio of the two point counters to his credit. The winners turned many of the penalties into points, Dickerson getting two from the fifteen foot mark and Stewart capturing a half dozen. Captain Dickerson led the field goal scoring with a quintet of field goals and a total of twelve points, while Stewart came second in caging baskets with a quartet.

POPULARIZING BASKETBALL.

The scholastic basketball season now fast drawing to a close has been one of the most successful in the history of the sport locally. The sport is becoming more popular every year in the city and borough schools and, in the opinion of those closely affiliated with the results of contests, it is only a question of a short time when the court game will rank with baseball and football. In the past Plainfield scholboys were very slow in taking to basketball and few spectators attended the games. During the last three years, however matters have changed perceptibly and the sport is no longer a losing proposition for the school athletic associations. A record number of candidates have reported in each of the local and borough schools this season and second teams have become popular. Old timers who attended the two biggest games this season expressed surprise at the size of the crowds and the enthusiasm brought out at the title matches here.

Query—Is there any way a woman can get her husband to support her? I mean a man who never cared for work.—N. J. H.

Sporting Editor:

Query—If a person was born on February 29, on what day would he celebrate his birthday this year?—K. S. T.

Answer — Whaddayamean celebrate? That would be a matter for the person himself to decide. It could be celebrated on either February 28 or March 1.

Answer—No, this was a different company.

Sporting Editor:

Query—Has Christy Mathewson's contract with the New York Giants expired?—D. J. T.

Answer—Some authorities claim that one year remains before Matty's contract matures while others say it has expired. The exact date of the signing of the contract is known only to Matty and the New York Club and they are certainly not going to give this information out while the Feds are stirring things up in the Giants' camp.

Sporting Editor:

Query—Will there be any more games played in the Interscholastic Basketball League this season?—H. E.

Answer — There certainly will. Plainfield and Leals have to fight for that second place rung.

Query—When will the pay-as-you-enter cars be placed on the local trolley lines?—N. S.

ANOTHER TITLE MATCH.

When the feminine basketball teams of the Plainfield and North Plainfield High Schools meet on the P. H. S. court, tomorrow afternoon, another interscholastic title will be at stake. The boroughites, having won the first issue, are naturally the favorites for the championship, but the fact that the contest will be played on the local court gives the Plainfielders an advantage that the boroughites will no doubt have difficulty in trying to overcome. Plainfield has been inactive for some time on the court, while the Canadians have gone along taking one game after another with clock-like regularity.

An all-star quintet has been organized to meet North Plainfield on the Saengerbund Hall court Friday night. Another opportunity for P. H. S. players to get a crack at the champions.

Cedarcroft hockey players are keeping up the interest in the ice sport hereabouts this season. Every time the coating appears on top of local waters the Plainfielders get on the trail of the hockeyists from Cranford. The series is now tied and a third game is pending.

U. OF P. HAS ENTERED TEN STAR PERFORMERS IN MEET

More entries have been received from colleges this year than ever before for the Indoor Athletic Championships of America, to be held at Madison Square Garden, New York, next Monday night. Pennsylvania, Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Columbia and Massachusetts Institute of Technology will be represented. The University of Pennsylvania will send on the following men, four of which were members of the American Olympic team which won the premier honors at Stockholm in 1912: J. C. Patterson, 75-yard championship; D. F. Lippincott, 75 and 300-yard championships; G. B. Dewey, 75-yard championship; J. E. Lockwood, 300-yard championship; J. H. Kelly, 300 and 600-yard championships; Ted Meredith, 300, 600 and 1,000-yard championships; R. B. Furgeson, 70-yard high hurdle championship; L. C. Maderia, 1,000-yard championship, and Wallace M. McCurdy in the 1,000-yard and two-mile championships.

Harvard University has sent the entries of ten of their best athletes, four of whom played on the championship football team last fall; Massachusetts Institute of Technology has entered eight men while Yale and Columbia will have two each and Princeton one.

The fact that Wallace McCurdy of the U. of P. has entered the two-mile championship, makes this championship race all the more doubtful. McCurdy is the two-mile intercollegiate champion. Both Kramer and Kolehmainen have their hearts set on breaking the world's record in this race and it promises to be the greatest two miles ever run in America. The other good distance runners in this event are Oscar Hedlund, of Boston; M. A. Devanney, of the Irish-American A. C.; Harry Smith, of the Bronx Church House. Sid Leslie, of the Long Island A. C., asked to have his entry cancelled as he is not running well enough at present to stand a show with the above named stars.

BAKER'S ENTRY ADDS SPICE TO INDOOR CHAMPIONSHIP

Lovers of foot racing will be treated to one of the greatest series of special races ever witnessed in New York city next Monday night at Madison Suare Garden. The calibre of the men that have entered and the splendid work the majority of them have shown in board floor competition this season are an indication that more than one record is in danger of being wiped off the books. Of course, the race that will attract the greatest attention is the 600-yard run in which six of the greatest middle distance runners in the world will meet. Homer Baker, the half-mile champion of American, called at the office of James E. Sullivan, chairman of the championship committee, yesterday, and when he was informed that the 1,000-yard championship would be staged early in the evening and the 600-yard championship near the end of the program, he stated that he would positively start in both races and expected to give a good account of himself in each. Last year Abel Kiviat decided to do this at the last minute, and won both championships. Among others, Baker will meet the following star mid-distance runners in these two races: Tom Halpin, of the Boston A. A.; Ted Meredith, of the University of Pennsylvania; Abel Kiviat and Mel Sheppard, of the Irish-American A. C.; Ollie DeGruchy, Horace Hocking and William Anderson, New York A. C.; L. C. Maderia and L. A. Cross, University of Pennsylvania, and S. D. Rose, of the Boston A. A. With the possible exception of the Olympic games there has never been a fleeter set of runners entered for championship honors and they should furnish the greatest middle distance race ever witnessed in America.

Alvah Meyer, the Irish-American A. C. sprinter, will have his work cut out for him in both the 75-yard and 300-yard championships, in which he will meet J. C. Patterson, Donald F. Lippincott, G. B. Dewey, J. H. Kelly and J. E. Lockwood, the University of Pennsylvania star sprinters; Hal Heiland, the holder of the world's record for 300 yards indoors, and Fred Burns, the present 300-yard champion of America.

"RUBY" ROBERT TAKES A SWING AT SULLIVAN

Former Ring Rivals Battle in Words — One Shoveling Snow in the Tombs.

John L. Sullivan vs. Robert Fitzsimmons in a terrible battle of words! "Poor old Fitz," says John L. "Lazy old farmer," returns Fitz. John L. got in his crack just after he came to New York to fill a vaudeville engagement. John L. couldn't resist commenting on the decision of the State Athletic Commission forbidding "Ruby" Robert from donning the gloves again and chasing all the white hopes out. The lanky man came back at John L. yesterday afternoon, when he appeared in the Supreme Court with his lawyer to argue an appeal from the decision of Justice Seabury in upholding the State Boxing Commission.

Being a non-resident of New York State Fitz was supposed to file a bond before arguing the motion of the appeal. Here is what he had to say about John L. and the boxing business in general yesterday afternoon:

"I put up a bond of me own free will and accord—a bond of the National Surety Company. But what gets me goat is for that big stiff John L. Sullivan to come out in an interview saying the Boxing Commission did right in putting the 'blinkers' on 'poor old Fitz.' What license has that lazy old farmer to be telling the Boxing Commission what they ought to do? Sullivan hasn't had a punch in him for the last fifteen years. But that's no reason why I shouldn't be allowed to get in and chase these white hope sprinters out of the ring.

"I suppose Sullivan is still sore because I licked the vaudeville actor who put him to sleep. I guess he would like to see me shovelling snow in the Tombs yard along with poor Tom Sharkey."

John L.'s reply is awaited with much interest.

MATTY FAVORS GIANTS.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 26.—Christy Mathewson, the New York National League pitcher, who has been offered the berth of manager of the Federal League club of Brooklyn, left here yesterday for Marlin Springs, Texas, the spring training camp of the New York Giants. He carried with him his unsigned contract to play with the Giants, and while reiterating his intention to consider seriously the Federal offer, declared he was confident of coming to terms with the New York National League team.

KING WILL SEE GAME.

(By Telegraph to The Daily Press.)

London, Feb. 26—King George has made known his intention of witnessing the first game between the New York Giants and Chicago White Sox, today, at Chelsea athletic grounds. A reception and luncheon was given at the Savoy hotel yesterday in honor of the world's tourists. A number of Lords and Dukes were present. About three hundred and fifty persons had a jolly time, including the players, notwithstanding the fact they were called on for speeches.

FOOTBALL WARRIORS WHO REPRESENTED PLAINFIELD IN THE GRIDIRON SPORT

Although it failed to win the championship of the State for football clubs, the Holy Cross eleven, pictured above, has closed a most successful season after lining up against a galaxy of teams from all parts of the State, winning eight, losing two and tying one. Among the teams defeated were the Pearl A. C., U.S.S. Washington, Erie Field Club, Trojan A. C., St. Stephens, Vikings and U. S. S. North Dakota. The Franklins were tied in one game and the teams that defeated the locals were the Dexters and the Franklins.

Twenty-five players took part in the contests played by the team during the season but eleven of those either dropped out before the season was over or were too modest to appear for their pictures at the appointed place. Jack Wilson captained the eleven during the season and "Doc" Doyle was the manager. Financially the team was a great success and at the conclusion of the season the players were awarded coat sweaters for their work on the gridiron during the season. As a scoring machine the team was little short of phenomenal, having totaled up 249 points during the season against its opponents' 39. This record is remarkable when the fact that eleven teams have been played is taken into consideration.

EFFECT SOME PITCHERS HAVE ON THE PLAYERS

It is a matter of comment during the on and off seasons of baseball that certain teams bat harder and field better behind certain pitchers than they do behind others and it would naturally be assumed that the major league hurler who emerges from a season with the greatest total of victories to his credit would be the man who had obtained the finest backing—both on the offense and the defense. Inspection of the records, therefore, should reveal the fact that Walter Johnson, of the Nationals, the man whom the Chalmers jury of newspaper experts voted the player most valuable to his team, had a great number of runs procured for him by his associates, who ought also to be reasonably supposed to have given him nearly air tight support so that he could have led the field. The Senators neither hit heavily nor fielded very accurately when their star artillerist was laboring—at least they didn't in the twenty-nine complete games he pitched, 23 of which were victories and 6 of which were defeats. In these games the Federalists obtained 81 runs to their opponents' 42, 224 hits to their opponents' 179, 34 errors to their opponents' 58 and 22 double plays to their opponents' 16. Thirteen of Sir Walter's wins (complete games pitched only considered) were by a one run margin, two by a two run margin, three by a three run margin, one by a four run margin, two by a five run margin, and two by a six run margin. Sir Walter had no reason to complain of the nerve displayed by his associates in rasping finishes, for they won five games for him in the ninth inning and one over-time battle.

Christy Mathewson, whom many fans would like to see oppose Johnson in the World's Series, was furnished with an average of four runs per game by the Giants, or 1.21 more than Johnson received from the Nationals. An odd thing about "Big Six's" showing in the complete games he pitched was that the opposition made eight more hits than did the Giants, but 44 fewer runs.

An artillerist who had just cause for complaint about the weak hitting behind him was "Reb" Russell, of the White Sox. He was furnished with an average of 3.15 tallies per conflict and frequently had to deny his adversaries a run in order to pull through a winner. The Phillies did not hit heavily behind their star, Grover Cleveland Alexander, getting for him in each combat only a trifling more average of runs than the Sox supplied to Russell. When Nap Rucker twirled, the Superbas were not in the fence breaking class, though once they did make 20 hits behind him.

Vean Gregg got an average of 4.30 runs per game from the Naps; A. Demaree, an average of 5.09 from the Giants; Joe Wood, an average of 5.50 from the Red Sox; Eddie Plank, an average of 5.61 from the White Elephants, and Bert Humphries, an average of 6.46 from the Cubs. Of the ten star twirlers named Alexander got the best support and Gregg the worst, while Rucker had the most double plays made behind him and Wood the fewest. These figures give further information on the subject:

	Ave. Runs.	Ave. Hits.
Cubs—Behind Humphries	6.46	10.05
Athletics—Behind Plank	5.61	8.83
Red Sox—Behind Wood	5.50	8.77
Giants—Behind Demaree	5.09	9.9[illegible]
Naps—Behind Gregg	4.30	8.5[illegible]
Giants—Behind M'the'son	4.00	8.08
Superbas—Behind Rucker	3.82	8.87
Phillies—Behind Alexan'r	3.17	8.13
W'te Sox—Behind Russell	3.15	7.96

ENGLAND GETS TASTE OF AMERICAN SPORT

King George and Other Notables Applaud Tourists in Exhibition Game.

(By Telegraph to The Daily Press.)

London, Feb. 26.—The White Sox beat the Giants here today, by the score of five to four. King George was present this afternoon at the baseball match between the New York Giants and the Chicago White Sox, played on the ground of the Chelsea Football Club. His Majesty arrived at the ground at 3 o'clock, attended by a numerous suite and was accorded a great ovation. He was received on arrival by the United State Ambassador Walter H. Page and the United States Consul General Griffith. A large number of prominent society people were present at the game, including the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough and the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire. The crowd of spectators numbered fully 20,000. A notable feature of the crowd being the large proportion of women. The arrival of the Giants and White Sox in five automobiles was the signal for a great outburst of applause from the thickly filled stands around the ground, the picturesque garb of both teams calling forth many admiring comments. The United States flag was in evidence everywhere.

Judging by the applause given to the different plays by the men in practice you would think you were in New York witnessing a game. Sir Colin Keppel was the only member of the Royal Entourage possessing any personal knowledge of baseball and he made the most of his scant knowledge. With the assistance of Ambassador Page, Sir Colin managed to give His Majesty a fairly good explanation of the details of the game. During the progress of the game the King repeatedly discussed with much animation the relative merits of the National games of England and the United States. He expressed the hope that baseball would obtain a good footing in England, but doubted whether it would ever be able to oust either cricket or football from the affections of the British people. The spectators appeared to be hugely delighted with the antics of the pitchers, especially towards players who attempted to steal bases and seemed to be much amused by the elaborate armor worn by the catches and umpires. The crowd was immensely impressed by the superb fielding of both teams, although in the opinion of an American expert who was present, the game was mediocre in character, neither team showing anything like the form usually displayed in league games in the United States. The game resulted in a victory for the White Sox, the final score being, White Sox, five runs; Giants, four.

LOCAL AND BOROUGH SCHOOL GIRLS' GAME

North Plainfield Will Try to Clinch Title in Game Tomorrow Afternoon.

Hostilities between the North Plainfield and Plainfield High School feminine athletes will be transferred to this side of the brook tomorrow afternoon when the two factions meet in their second game for the interscholastic championship on the Plainfield High School court, North Plainfield won the first contest by a comfortable margin and the Plainfielders will have to display some phenomenal playing in order to reverse the decision.

The Plainfield court is much smaller than the one on which the boroughites are used to playing on and as a result the Canadians will be somewhat handicapped in this match.

The teams will lineup as follows:

Plainfield	North Plainfield
Miss Phillips, forward	Miss Burtis
Miss Moy, forward	Miss Spencer
Miss Beidelman, center	Miss Douglas
Miss Morris, guard	Miss Smith
Miss Rothberg, guard	Miss Debele

NEAF APGAR TAKES THE LEAD IN BIG TOURNEY

Neaf Apgar, of this city, took the lead in the Sportsmen's Show international trap shooting tournament held at Madison Square Garden, New York, last night, when he cracked forty-nine out of a possible fifty clay birds. Hank Stevens was second with forty-eight shots and Jim Hawkins third with forty-seven.

A number of Plainfielders watched Apgar's work at the traps last night, and also the exhibition given by Mrs. L. G. Vogel, of Detroit, who clipped thirty-five.

LEARN HOW TO GIVE FIRST AID TO ASSOCIATES INJURED ON DUTY

Local Linemen of New York Telephone Company Hear How to Prevent Accidents—Dr. M. J. Shields, Member of Medical Reserve Corps, is the Lecturer.

ARTIFICIAL RESPIRATION, SHAFFER METHOD, SECOND MOTION.

Linemen of the local branch of the New York Telephone Company were given instruction on the prevention of accidents and told how to apply first aid to the injured, at two lectures delivered before those employes at 1 and at 3 o'clock this afternoon. The lecture was given by Lieutenant M. J. Shields, of the Medical Reserve Corps, U. S. A., at 109 East Fourth street.

It would be difficult to estimate the number of lives which are lost every day through accident and yet might have been saved if persons near by had known how to care for the injured.

The New York Telephone Company has earned four medals in the United States and abroad for welfare work in behalf of its employees. The latest step made by this company is the engagement of Lieutenant M. J. Shields, Medical Reserve corps, U. S. A., to deliver a series of lectures to its employees on accident prevention and first aid. This work is being conducted under the auspices of the American Red Cross.

An important fact is that the greater number of fatal accidents are not caused by big things, such as railroad wrecks, mine disasters, etc., but by the individual accidents which happen every day. No matter how many safeguards, safety devices and rules of safety are made, only a small portion of accidents may be prevented without co-operation of the workers themselves. Consequently, Dr. Shields figures human element at 70 per cent and safety devices and rules of safety at 30 per cent.

LIEUTENANT M. J. SHIELDS, MEDICAL RESERVE CORPS, U. S. A.

How often we have seen a person injured with a number of persons gathered around him, each one at a loss what to do. Every second at such a time is precious, and the entire object of these lectures is to impress upon the hearer just what to do in certain cases and the right way to do it.

STOPPING BLEEDING IN THE UPPER ARM, USING AN IMPROVISED TOURNIQUET MADE OF A HANDKERCHIEF IN THE MIDDLE OF WHICH IS TIED A HARD RUBBER "WINDOW BLOCK."

Illustrated by a series of pictures, the New York Telephone Review prints a list of the first things to do in case of accident. How to stop bleeding, care for wounds and broken bones, burns, prostrations, shock, etc., how to make a stretcher out of simple handy objects and convey the patient; how to revive the patient when unconscious from any cause—all these are taken up in detail and explicit directions given.

Accident prevention and first aid are subjects which should be seriously considered by persons in all walks of life. When these preventive measures are understood and practised, then we may expect to see the daily toll of life lessened more and more. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

GRACE CHURCH BOYS DEFEAT BOROUGH SCHOOL FRESHIES

The Freshman basketball team of the North Plainfield High School, met defeat at the Grace church court, last night, by the score of 45 to 24. The home boys were the superior team in every respect, especially along the shooting lines, and they caged shots from all angles. The play was featured by many fouls committed by the visitors. The final half ended 25 to 10.

The last period was by far the most interesting and fine teamwork was mixed up with good shooting. All of the Grace boys had a hand in the scoring, Dunham being high man with eleven points. For the losers, Denny and Force did most of the scoring.

Bryan Has Talk With the English Envoy—Rebel Leader's Proposal Is Accepted—Call In the House For Facts About Mexico.

Washington, Feb. 26.—The gravity of the Mexican situation has not been lessened by developments. Not only has the United States government been unable to obtain any satisfactory assurance from General Francisco Villa as to when the body of William S. Benton, the British ranchman, may be examined by American representatives, but Villa has laid down conditions for the examination, when it does take place, that are regarded as insolent.

The increased tension here was reflected in the form of a resolution offered by Congressman Ainey of Pennsylvania calling upon the president to transmit to congress information as to the treatment of Americans in Mexico. In speaking on his resolution Mr. Ainey characterized the present administration policy as "deadly drifting."

Secretary Bryan and Ambassador Spring-Rice in conference reached an understanding as to the latest phase of the Benton case. It was decided that Villa's offer of the exhumation of the body and its examination by American representatives will be accepted.

The question of obtaining permanent custody of the body will be taken up later, the stress now being laid upon what is regarded as the all important fact of a medical examination of the wounds on the corpse.

Charles Perceval, the British consul at Galveston, who has been sent to El Paso to look after British interests, will go to Juarez for the examination of the body. He will accompany Consul Edwards and will escort Mrs. Benton, widow of the dead man, and such other persons whose presence may be necessary for purposes of identification. Mr. Bryan agreed to have the American military authorities assign a competent army surgeon to the case, who will make what will probably amount to an autopsy. This arrangement has been made between the ambassador and Secretary Bryan on the assumption that Villa will permit the exhumation of the body not later than today. It is also assumed that he will permit a medical examination, though Villa has not definitely stated that he will do so. There is no doubt but there will be serious difficulty for him if he refuses to permit it.

Bauch Not at Chihuahua.

Advices reaching the state department regarding Gustav Bauch and other Americans in Villa's jurisdiction who cannot now be found failed to clear up the mystery of the fate of these men.

Consul Letcher reiterated his previous statements that Bauch is not in Chihuahua, as was told Consul Edwards by the rebel authorities at Juarez. General Villa is quoted as saying first that Bauch was in Juarez and then later that he knew nothing about him and again that the man had been released from the Juarez prison, and it is now seen by officials that absolutely no dependence can be placed upon the words of the rebel commander.

The ten Americans whom Villa said he rejected for enlistment in the Constitutionalist forces are not to be found, either. According to Villa's statement he offered them a special train back to Juarez, which they refused.

SHARP FOR RUSSIAN POST.

Confident That Ohio Representative Will Be Named.

Washington, Feb. 26.—Senator Pomerene of Ohio expressed the opinion that Representative William G. Sharp of Elyria, O., would be appointed ambassador to Russia. Mr. Sharp is one of the wealthiest members of congress from Ohio and is said to have amassed about $2,000,000 from the manufacturing business and is not averse to entering the diplomatic service. He has served as a member of the foreign affairs committee of the house and was indorsed for ambassador to Russia by the foreign affairs committee and the entire Ohio delegation in congress. Senator Pomerene will confer with the president regarding the matter. Representative Sharp has made no formal application for the office, and his name was taken up by his colleagues in the house without his knowledge and submitted to the president while Representative Sharp was absent in Ohio.

He has indicated that he would be willing to accept the appointment since his return to Washington.

BURN VICTIM TO HIDE CRIME.

North Carolina Merchant's Body Is Found In Blazing Store.

Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 26.—The charred body of Preston Lyerly, a merchant of Barber, 150 miles west of Raleigh, was found in his burning store. The safe was open, and evidences of murder and arson to cover the robbery were found. The crime occurred early in the night. Neighbors who discovered the body found the clothes had been covered with oil.

NEEDLEWORK

By MARGARET LAWRENCE

A DISTINCTIVE AFTERNOON BLOUSE

Such a chic and unusual little blouse as this would be just the thing to wear with the new spring suit. It is surprisingly easy to make for pattern 8109 is cut entirely in one piece, and the collar, cuffs and revers facings are just sewed on after the garment is made. This pattern is cut in sizes 32-42, requiring only 1⅞ yards of 36-inch material for size 38. A very inexpensive model, for it takes so little cloth.

If you prefer a silk blouse, buy heavy crepe de chine, Canton crepe or silk poplin in either green, flesh, or a delicate shade of the color of your suit. The facings of the revers may be of old rose, old blue, tango red or bright green to give the brilliant color note to your costume, or of silk matching the shade of the skirt. The very effective embroidered collar, cuffs and sprays may be stamped with transfer pattern 14653 and developed in rope silks in two or three shades of the silk used for the facings. The design can be embroidered entirely in outline and Wallachian knots with the edges of the collar and cuffs in buttonhole stitch worked with the heavier weight silk.

To make a washable blouse of this style, purchase five yards crepe de chine, and embroidery in mercerized cotton and transfer pattern 14653 can be supplied to readers on receipt of price, 15 cents each.

Some Cookery Suggestions

SERVING MUSHROOMS.

MUSHROOMS are a delicacy, yet a light nutrient. There are but few persons who do not relish them but such fatal mistakes are made by gatherers that many are disinclined to eat them, or at least do so with more or less reluctance. Mushrooms may be bought in the markets, or the dried ones are sold in the shops.

Grilled Mushrooms.—Mushrooms for grilling must be of a large and even size. After having washed them and cut off the stalks, dip them in olive oil, season with salt and pepper, then grill over a bright fire, turning them when done on one side. Arrange in a vegetable dish, the hollow side upward, then place in the center of each mushroom a very small pat of maitre d'hotel butter or parsley butter and serve hot.

Mushrooms in Cases.

Wipe and peel eight cup mushrooms, cut them into small dice and fry them with an ounce of butter in a saute pan. Butter some soufflé cases, paper or china, lay a thin slice of lemon in each, three parts fill with prepared mushrooms and season to taste. Spread a layer of potted deviled meat mixed with a yolk of egg, over the mushrooms, brush over with melted butter and bake for fifteen minutes.

A Dainty Way.

Mushroom Croutes.—Take slices of stale white bread, stamp these out into rounds or oblongs with a fancy or plain cutter, fry them in butter to a golden color and drain. Have ready the required quantity of large button mushrooms, peeled, minus stalks and fried in butter; also a mixture of finely chopped beef and ham, moistened with a little rich brown sauce. When quite hot spread the meat mixture over the croutes, place a mushroom on each; season with salt, pepper, cayenne and a little lemon juice. Put them in a hot oven for a few minutes, dish up, garnish with fried parsley and serve.

Served on Toast.

Mushroom With Eggs.—Peel and take the stalks from four or five mushrooms, wash and drain them, then cut them into small slices, place them in a stewpan with two ounces of butter and season well with salt and pepper and allow them to stew gently for twenty minutes. Break six eggs into a basin and beat them up thoroughly; add two tablespoonfuls of milk and pour the mixture over the mushrooms in the stewpan. Stir them gently with a spoon until the mixture is set.

All the Little Boys Helped.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

The Winter Home For the Wren Family.

"A NUMBER of little boys living in a small town were very much interested in carpentry," said daddy. "They made boxes and chairs and tables and all sorts of things.

"They had a nice tool shop in an unused barn belonging to the daddy of one of the little boys.

"In the late autumn one of the little boys, who was very fond of birds and especially so of the house wren, suggested that they should build some little bird houses under the low roof of the barn.

"So all the little boys helped because they thought it was such a nice plan."

"What is a house wren?" inquired Evelyn.

"A house wren," said daddy, "shows his difference from other wrens by having black and gray lines on his brown back. His tiny tail points upward and his breast is grayish white. He is very friendly and loves to keep the same home.

"Now, the boys had noticed that one family of wrens had built a nest on the side of this same barn two summers. They had flown away when the cold weather came each time.

"The boys built a fine little house with great care and watched to see if the wrens would go to it. And, sure enough, they did! Apparently they thought it was a beautiful house, although they, of course, wished to furnish it in their own way."

"How did they furnish it?" asked Jack.

"They filled it with twigs, and in the center of the house they put masses of dried grass and twigs.

"The boys were interested watching the wrens, and the wrens seemed perfectly happy. There were no sparrows near by. They saw that the boys were friendly, and they found the wooden house kept out the cold air.

"Week after week passed, and still the wrens didn't show any desire to move to a warmer place. On the very coldest day they would come out, flit about, hop and bow and be as energetic as possible.

"Of course the boys never touched the house after they'd built it, for the wrens then would have left, and the wrens made their front door so small that a sparrow couldn't possibly have gone inside and bothered the little ones.

"You can imagine how delighted the boys were, and to keep the wrens from feeling homesick for a warmer home each day they'd scatter crumbs around near the wrens' home; then watch the wrens hop down and take them up to the nest, and the wrens seemed to be very happy when they saw the boys. They acted as if they knew and appreciated that the boys had built them such a fine home."

MOTHERS' WORK

Contributing Staff.

Mrs. G. Stuart Simons, Mrs. Jos. Smith, Mrs. Herbert Parker.

The Daily Press for Thursdays containing the column on Mother's Work will be sent by mail for one dollar a year, in advance.

The change in industrial conditions has swept girls from their homes into the factories, has brought them face to face with the temptations of the street. We trust the education of youth too much to the public schools. It is the parents' work to educate their children in sex hygiene and to set an example of right living and right thinking, to know always where their children are and what they are doing for recreation. The home should be made the most attractive place to our boys and girls. To do this parents need to be educated. Let us extend the school system for the education of the parents as well as the child and run the schools twelve month in the year and six nights a week. School buildings are public property and the demand of the people is always met by taxpayers because the people are the taxpayers. So if parents would wake up to the fact that they need education, the State and city will furnish the means through the public schools by means of special courses and night schools.

In speaking of sexual immorality it is more important to refer to the injuries it inflicts upon character than its hygienic dangers. It can be pointed out that the worst disease which can be contracted by anyone is that disease of the character which develops when a man accustoms himself to a course of action which cannot be sanctioned by his better self. This disease destroys the consistency of a man's inner life and prepares him for unreliable conduct in all other spheres of activity. It delivers him over to the power of momentary impulses.—F. W. Foerster.

A list of books have been recommended by William D. Murray to the Parent-Teacher Associations as a help to parents and teachers in teaching the story of life to children. They are as follows: How Shall I Tell My Child, Revell Co., 25 cents; The Boy Problem, Revell Co., 10 cents; Life Beginning, Dr. W. S. Hall, 25 cents; From Youth to Manhood, Dr. W. S. Hall, 25 cents. These books can be ordered from Wanamaker's by mail C. O. D., and will be found most helpful.

I do not believe in reckless marriages where the man is unable to support a wife nor in couples who recklessly and thoughtlessly have multitudes of children whom they are unable to bring up properly, no in the man who forces upon an unfit wife excessive and unlimited child bearing. But this form of reckless and brutal selfishness is not as wicked as the cold calculating and most unmanly and unwomanly selfishness which makes so many men and women shirk the most important of all their duties to the State. Incidentally when they show this sordid and selfish cowardice they deprive themselves of that highest type of earthly happiness which is to be found only in the companionship of the husband and wife, who with deep and tender consideration, facing life with high courage, love one another and who love and care for the healthy and happy children whom it has been their supreme blessing to bring into the world.—Theodore Roosevelt.

The National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, The Woman's Home Companion and The American Medical Association have entered into an alliance for a nation-wide work for saving the babies and helping parents to the knowledge of babyology, which, when understood, reduces infant mortality sixty to seventy per cent. Every Parents' Association and Mothers' Circle is urged to appoint a chairman of child hygiene and send her name and address to Mrs. Anna Steese Richardson, The Adlan, 200 Fifth avenue, New York city. Mrs. Robert Tate, Portland, Oregon, will have charge of the work on the Pacifis coast.

Some States have passed laws to protect all young boys and girls from work in seafood canneries, factories, etc., and to limit to eight hours per day the work for girls under eighteen and boys under sixteen, but children will continue to live in overcrowded unsanitary quarters, to work for long hours and to miss every chance for play and school unless the American people will help the National Child Labor Committee in its efforts to bring each State into line, and this they will do if with the National Child Labor Committee they consider the child above the oyster and the shrimp.

There is no more direct way to educate and uplift millions of people than by putting an educating and uplifting influence in the "movies." Neither managers or film manufacturers are wholly to blame that more films of this nature are not exhibited. It is business, not philanthrophy, with them. The public taste creates the demand. Considering the fact that evidence proves that this taste, if left undirected, is far from being uplifting and wise, some sort of State censorship is deemed advisable. But our greatest hope lies in those censors of the future—the children—and we shall help much if we can educate and create in them a taste for the best in morals and art.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

To be well dressed does not necessarily mean that one must spend large sums of money, especially in these days when it is such an easy matter for a woman to make her own frocks and suits. All required is that she choose her materials and models wisely.

No. 7993 is a dress that would be appropriate for afternoon or informal evening affairs, if developed in a rather conservative material and color. This does not mean that the frock must be somber; it may be brightened in numberless ways. As sashes and girdles are so much worn just now, several of these may be made of the new figured silks for the same gown or different corsage bouquets may be worn with the dress at various times. There never was a season when the woman with a limited dress allowance had a better chance.

Charmeuse, silk poplin, or crepe, any of them would be suitable to this design; collar and cuffs may be of figured material and the chemisette of shadow lace, net or chiffon.

In size 36, this model requires 4⅞ yards of 36 inch material.

The pattern is cut in 6 sizes; 34 to 44.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to give right size, measuring over the fullest part of the bust for dimensions.

It may be obtained by filling out the coupon and enclosing 15 cents in stamps or coin, to the Pattern Department of this paper.

THE PLAINFIELD THEATRE

When one goes back stage to see May Robson who appears in "The Clever Woman" at the Plainfield Theatre, Saturday afternoon and evening, it is like walking in on a family group, for throughout the cast there are a dozen familiar faces one always sees associated with the clever comedienne. The answer is apparent why so many of the star's supporting company remain with her year after year, if one has the privilege of visiting her for half an hour or so. Behind the footlights, back of the painted scenery, there is a real home and May Robson is the mother of it all. It is a great big happy family one sees behind their grease-painted faces, and much of the homely atmosphere that reaches the audience on the other side of the footlights is the result of the real home atmosphere ever present behind the scenes themselves. Miss Robson is "Muzzy" to all her company from the leading man to the humblest member. All the members of Miss Robson's company have been with her for several seasons. The only one exception being Ann MacDonald. Paul Decker has been with her for five years, Edith Conrad three years, and John Rowe and Phil Bishop a like number of years, and so it goes throughout the entire company.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

CHAPTER XXV.

The Mayor Welcomed Home.

MR. MAGEE and the professor went into the day coach for their baggage. Mrs. Norton motioned to the former.

"Well," she said, "you know now, I suppose. And it didn't do you no harm to wait. I sure am glad this to do is all over, and that child is safe. And I hope you'll remember what I said. It ain't no work for a woman, nohow, what with the shooting and the late hours."

"Your words," said Mr. Magee, "are engraved on my heart." He proceeded to gather her baggage with his own and was thus engaged when Kendrick came up. The shadow of his discovery in the smoking car an hour before still haunted his sunken eyes, but his lips were half smiling with the new joy of living that had come to him.

"Mr. Magee," he began, "I hardly need mention that the terrible thing which happened—in there—is between you and me—and the man who's dead. No one must know. Least of all, the girl who is to become my wife—it would embitter her whole life—as it has mine."

"Don't say that," Magee pleaded. "You will forget in time, I'm sure. And you may trust me—I had forgotten already." And indeed he had, on the instant when his eyes fell upon the Reuton Star.

Miss Thornhill approached, her dark smiling eyes on Magee. Kendrick looked at her proudly and spoke suddenly, determinedly:

"You're right, I will forget. She shall help me."

A shadow had fallen upon the train—the shadow of the huge Reuton station. In the half light on the platform Mr. Magee encountered the mayor of Reuton. Above the lessening roar of the train there sounded ahead of them the voices of men in turmoil and riot. Mr. Cargan turned upon Magee a face as placid and dispassionate as that of one who enters an apple orchard in May.

"The boys," he smiled grimly, "welcoming me home."

Then the train came to a stop, and Mr. Magee looked down into a great array of faces and heard for the first time the low, unceasing rumble of an angry mob. Afterward he marveled at that constant guttural roar, how it went on and on, humming like a tune, never stopping, disconnected quite from the occasional shrill or heavy voices that rang out in distinguishable words. The mayor looked coolly down into those upturned faces, he listened a moment to the rumble of a thousand throats; then he took off his derby with satiric politeness.

"Glad to see one and all!" he cried.

And now above the mutterings angry words could be heard. "That's him!" "That's $200,000 Cargan!" "How's the weather on Baldpate?" and other sarcastic flings about tar and feathers.

A squad of policemen who had entered the car from the rear forced their way out on to the platform.

"Want us to see you through the crowd, Mr. Cargan?" the lieutenant asked.

New hoots and cries ascended to the station rafters. "Who pays the police?" "We do." "Who owns 'em?" "Cargan." Thus question and answer were bandied back and forth. Again a voice demanded in strident tones the ignominious tar and feathers.

Jim Cargan had not risen from the slums to be master of his town without a keen sense of the theatric. He ordered the police back into the car. "And stay there!" he demanded. The lieutenant demurred. One look from the mayor sent him scurrying. Mr. Cargan took from his pocket a big cigar and calmly lighted it.

"Some of them guys out there," he remarked to Magee, "belong to the Sunday school crowd. Pretty actions for them, pillars of the church howling like beasts."

And still, like that of beasts, the mutter of the mob went on, now in an undertone, now louder, and still that voice that first had plead for tar and feathers plead still for feathers and tar. And here a group preferred the rope.

And toward them, with the bland smile of a child on his great face, his cigar tilted at one angle, his derby at another, the mayor of Reuton walked unflinchingly.

The roar became mad, defiant. But Cargan stepped forward boldly. Now he reached the leaders of the mob. He pushed his way in among them, smiling, but determined. They closed in on him. A little man got firmly in his path. He took the little man by the shoulders and stood him aside with some friendly word. And now he was past ten rows or more of them on his way through, and the crowd began to scurry away. They scampered like ants, clawing at one another's backs to make a path.

And so finally, between two rows of them, the mayor of Reuton went his way triumphantly. Somewhere, on the edge of the crowd, an admiring voice spoke. "Hello, Jim!" The mayor waved his hand. The rumble of their voices ceased at last. Jim Cargan was still master of the city.

"Say what you will," remarked Mr. Magee to the professor as they stood together on the platform of the car, "there goes a man."

He did not wait to hear the professor's answer, for he saw the girl of the Upper Asquewan station standing on a baggage truck far to the left of the mob wave to him over their heads. Eagerly he fought his way to her side. It was a hard fight. The crowd would not part for him as it had parted for the man who owned the city.

"Hello, Mr. Holdup Man!" The girl seized Mr. Magee's proffered hand and leaped down from the truck to his side.

"Bless the gods of the mountains," said Magee; "they have given me back my accomplice, safe and sound!"

"They were black, lonesome gods," she replied, "and they kept whispering fearful things in my ear I couldn't understand. I'm glad they didn't keep me."

"So am I." The crowd surged about them. Many in it smiled and spoke admiringly to the girl. "It's great to be acquainted with the heroine of the hour," Mr. Magee continued. "I congratulate you. You have overthrown an empire of graft, it seems."

"Alone and unaided," she quoted, smiling mockingly up into his face.

"Absolutely alone and entirely unaided," said Billy Magee. "I'll swear to that in court."

As Mr. Magee and the girl turned they beheld the hermit of Baldpate staring with undisguised exultation at the tall buildings of Reuton.

"Why, it's Mr. Peters!" the girl cried.

"Yes," replied Magee. "His prediction has come true. We and our excitement proved too much for him. He's going back to Brooklyn and to her."

"I'm so glad!" she cried. She stretched out her hand to the hermit. He took it, somewhat embarrassed.

"Glad to see you," he said. "You certainly appear to have stirred things up, miss. But women are good at that. I've always said"—

"Mr. Magee tells me you're going back, after all?" she broke in.

"Yes," returned Peters. "I knew it. I told you so. It was all right in the summer, when the bands played and the warm wind was hermiting on the mountain too. But in the fall it's always been hard, and I've heard the white lights calling, calling—why, I've even heard her—heard Ellen. This fall you came, and there was something doing on Baldpate—and I knew that when you went I'd just naturally have to go too. So—I'm going."

"Splendid!" commented the girl.

"It'll be somewhat delicate," continued the hermit, "bursting in on Ellen after all these years. As I told Mr. Magee I wish I had an inaugural address or something like that."

"I have it," responded Evelyn Rhodes. "I'll write a story about you for tomorrow morning's paper—all about how the Christmas spirit has overcome the hermit of Baldpate and how he's going back to his wife with his heart filled with love for her. It is filled, isn't it?"

"Well, yes," agreed Mr. Peters. "I reckon you might call it that."

"And then you can send her a copy of the paper and follow it up in person."

"A good idea," commented Billy Magee.

"At first glance, yes," studied Peters; "but, on the other hand, it would be the death knell of my postcard business, and I'm calculating to go back to Baldpate next summer and take it up again. No, I'm afraid I can't let it be generally known that I've quit living in a shack on the mountain for love of somebody or other."

"Once more," smiled Magee, "big business muzzles the press."

"Not that I ain't obliged to you for the offer," added the hermit.

"Miss—er—Miss Rhodes and I will see you again," predicted Mr. Magee, "next summer at Baldpate inn."

The hermit looked at the girl, who turned her face away.

"I hope it'll turn out that way, I'm sure," he said. "I'll let you have a reduction on all postcards, just for old times' sake. Now, I must find out about the New York trains."

He melted into the crowd, an odd figure still, his garb in a fashion long forgotten, his clumsily hacked hair brushing the collar of his ancient coat. Magee and the girl found the check room and, after he had been relieved of the burden of his baggage, set out up the main street of Reuton. It was a typical up state town, deep in the throes of the holiday season. The windows of the stores were green with holly. The faces of the passers by reflected the excitements of Christmas and of the upheaval in civic politics which were upon them almost together.

"Tell me," said the girl, "are you glad—at the way it has turned out? Are you glad I was no lady Captain Kidd?"

"It has all turned out—or is about to turn out—beautifully," Mr. Magee answered. "You may remember that on the veranda of Baldpate inn I spoke of one summer hotel flirtation that was going to prove more than that. Let me"—

Her laugh interrupted.

"You don't even know my name."

"What's the matter with Evelyn Rhodes?" suggested Magee.

"Nothing. It's a perfectly good name. But it isn't mine. I just write under it."

"I prefer Mary, anyhow," smiled Billy Magee. "She called you that. It's Mary."

"Mary what?"

"You have no idea," said he, "how immaterial that is."

They came upon a throng blocking the sidewalk in front of a tall building of stone. The eyes of the throng were on bulletins. It muttered much as they had muttered who gathered in the station.

"The office of the Star," explained the girl. "The crowd is looking for new excitement. Do you know, for two whole hours this morning we had on exhibition in the window a certain package—a package of money!"

"I think," smiled Magee, "I've seen it somewhere."

"I think you have. Drayton came and took it from us as soon as he heard. But it was the very best proof we could have offered the people. They like to see for themselves. It's a passion with them. We've done for Cargan forever."

"Cargan says he will fight."

"Of course he will," she replied. "But this will prove Napoleon's Waterloo. Whether or not he is sent to prison—and perhaps he can escape that; he's very clever—his power in Reuton is broken. He can't possibly win at the next election. It comes very soon. I'm so glad! For years our editor has been fighting corruption, in the face of terrible odds and temptations. I'm so glad it's over now—and the Star has won!"

"Through you," said Magee softly.

"With—some one—to help," she smiled. "I must go upstairs now and find out what new task is set for me."

FRANK'S PLEA FOR A REHEARING REFUSED

Georgia Court Decides That Death Verdict Stands.

Atlanta, Feb. 26.—Leo Frank's chances in the supreme court to set aside the verdict of the superior court condemning him to die for the murder of Mary Phagan were dashed to the ground when Georgia's highest tribunal handed down a decision unanimously declining a rehearing.

Now Frank must appeal to the superior court direct in order to prevent the verdict of the court being carried out. It is understood that in the next few days this will be done by means of an extraordinary motion for a new trial, based upon alleged newly discovered evidence.

This evidence will consist of the opinion of Dr. H. F. Harris that the hair found on the lathing machine was not that of Mary Phagan, the repudiation of Albert McKnight of the testimony he gave on the stand, possibly an affidavit of Mrs. Nina Formby charging the detective department with coercing and "framing" against Frank, although her affidavit was never used in the trial, and probable affidavits from a number of character witnesses who appeared against the prisoner, in which it is reported they will go back on their testimony.

If this petition should be denied then there is to all practical purposes only one resource for Frank—an appeal to the prison commission and the governor for clemency.

A simultaneous development with the denial of Frank's petition by the supreme court was the filing by James Conley, admitted accessory after the fact in the murder, of a motion for a new trial. Conley was convicted on Tuesday and was given one year for a misdemeanor.

URGES BRIDGE OVER HUDSON

Let It Cost $100,000,000, Kuhlke Declares in Assembly.

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 26.—Declaring that New Jersey will never prosper up to expectation and come into its own until automobiles can drive straight into New York city, Assemblyman Harry Kuhlke of Hudson county declared for a bridge over the Hudson river from West New York to West Fifty-ninth street, New York.

He introduced a resolution proposing that congress be urged to promote the bridge in an interstate highway. "I do not care how big the bridge would have to be or if it costs $100,000,000, such a bridge ought to be built," Mr. Kuhlke said. "Make it the most wonderful bridge in the world. That was what the Brooklyn bridge was when it was constructed."

SAGE TEA TURNS GRAY HAIR DARK

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair.

That beautiful, even shade of dark glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray, streaked and look dry, wispy and scraggly, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred fold.

Don't bother to prepare the tonic you can get from any drug store a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," ready to use. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color, thickness and lustre of your hair and remove dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy, lustrous and abundant. —Adv.

QUIT MEAT WHEN KIDNEYS BOTHER

Take a Glass of Salts if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Troubles You.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications. —Adv

GREAT BARGAINS FOR 'DOLLAR DAY'

Plainfield Merchants Join in Novel Plan to Stimulate Trade Conditions.

BIG BUSINESS EXPECTED

Among the Attractive Offerings is a Yearly Subscription to The Press for $1—Reduced Prices Will Be Made in All Lines.

"Dollar Day" will be observed in Plainfield tomorrow. Bargains of all sorts will be offered the people of this city by merchants generally. One dollar spent over the counter of some Plainfield store, tomorrow, will buy more value than it is generally possible to acquire for that small amount. The idea of holding a "Dollar Day" is new and novel here. The innovation will, it is believed by those merchants who conceived the idea, prove decidedly profitable to shoppers. It is confidently expected that the big values which customers will be given on this occasion will go far towards popularizing the movement to keep local trade in the local stores.

Bargains that are to be offered shoppers in exchange for their dollar tomorrow are legitimate. The offerings, although surprising, considering the smallness of the amount necessary to purchase them, in many cases, are in every way genuine. Plainfield merchants who have joined the "Dollar Day" demonstration are determined not to let slip the unusual opportunity of showing citizens how much greater values they can obtain for their small expenditure than if they visited establishments in other cities. Purchasers will, in every instance, be privileged to see what articles or goods they buy. It is to be no so-called "catch penny scheme," this "Dollar Day" sale of tomorrow in the local shops. The movement was inaugurated by the Business Men's Association of Plainfield. The purpose is avowedly that of endeavoring to open up new channels and lines of trade and as a result it is confidently expected by the up-to-date and enterprising merchants of this community that many new customers will be gained. It will be the endeavor of every merchant in this city to keep the new customers as well as the old, by unfailing courtesy, first class merchandise offerings and liberality of treatment.

Unusually good bargains are offered in The Daily Press of today by some of those merchants who will participate in the "Dollar Day" plan of tomorrow. The specials advertised for a dollar will hold good for that day only. Merchants will all, it is said, give far more than usual values for a doller. In some stores articles that sell for considerably more will be cut to a dollar less.

It is expected that "big business" will be the order of the day in all of those Plainfield shops where the "Dollar Day" specials will be offered customers. One Plainfield merchant is to sell women's plaid coats for $1 tomorrow. Another will sell goods that have always retailed at $2 for $1. Still another storekeeper offers to reduce the actual retail price on many things $1 to every purchaser tomorrow.

Probably one of the greatest values offered is a subscription to new subscribers only to The Daily Press—for one whole year, for only $1. The regular subscription price of this newspaper is $5 yearly. It has never before been sold for less, and will not be except tomorrow. It is a newspaper of the highest class, has a large following of readers, both in this city and adjoining towns, and prints the news of Plainfield and of its people at all times without fear or favor. It is independent in its utterances and commands the respect of the people of the community in which it is circulated. The offer of a year's subscription to The Daily Press for $1 holds good for one day only—Saturday, February 28—and is open only to persons not now subscribers.

Offerings made by merchants tomorrow are multifarious. One jeweler in Plainfield is to sell gold cuff buttons of the value of $2.50 for $1, and a half dozen silver bouillon spoons, worth $2 for half of that amount. Another merchant will sell a dozen pair of men's sox, regularly priced at 15 cents a pair, for $1. If you buy a pair of shoes for $4 tomorrow at one of Plainfield's shoe stores the clerk will hand you back $1 of the purchase price, with a smile. If you should happen to make purchases amounting to $8 in this store you will receive a rebate of $2. One of the big dry goods stores here offers two aluminum stew pans, regularly priced at $1.56, for only $1 tomorrow, if the coupon printed in the advertisement is clipped. Another offering is a Japanese silk waist, valued at $1.98, for $1. In the carpet department of this store an allowance to the customer of $1 will be made on every purchase amounting to $5. And these are only a few of the hosts of bargains offered.

POLICE "EXAMS" TO BE LESS SEVERE

Councilmanic Committee Requests Ineligibles to Make Another Application.

The fact that only two applicants out of twenty-six passed the rigid mental and physical examinations required of candidates before becoming eligible for appointment to the local police force, has caused the councilmanic police committee to lift a portion of the embargo. As a result, some of the men who were discarded some weeks ago for various slight physical imperfections have been asked to re-apply and others desiring to become officers are requested to make application at once. As soon as a class is secured, the personnel will be examined at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium. Of the previous class, only eleven of the twenty-six appearing passed a physical inspection and nine more were eliminated by the mental test.

These figures convinced the Police Board that if it wanted to secure the seven new policemen desired, the capabilities of the applicants should not be held down to such stringent rules. In consequence, it is believed a large number of new applicants will appear.

It is understood that James Conway and Percy Allen were the only two candidates passing the recent examination, and it is probable that the police committee will present their names for confirmation at next Monday night's meeting.

J. P. STEVENS CHOSEN PRESIDENT OF P. C. C.

Other Officers and Heads of Committees for the Year Announced.

The trustees of the Plainfield Country Club met at the home of J. P. Stevens on Hillside avenue, Wednesday night, and elected these officers for the coming year: President, J. P. Stevens; vice president, William T. Kaufman; secretary, Dr. F. E. DuBois; treasurer, S. D. Lounsbery.

The following heads of committees were also announced for the year: Green, Jules E. Erickson; golf, W. Lester Glenney; tennis, S. Wallace Merrihew; house, R. H. Cox.

Plans for the year were informally discussed and the prospects are good for a prosperous season. The club's property is in the best of condition and it is predicted that the course will be equally as good if not better than last year. The golf and tennis schedules will be announced about April 1.

BETROTHAL OF MISS INMAN TO H. S. ROGERS

Interesting Event Announced Last Night at a Reception in Florida.

The friends of Herbert Rogers, son of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Rogers, of Myrtle avenue, will be surprised to learn of his engagement to Miss Eleanor Virginia Inman, whose home is in Florence Villa, Florida. The Rogers' have been spending the winter at Winter Haven, Florida, a short distance from Florence Villa, where several other Plainfield people are at the present time.

Miss Inman is the daughter of Mrs. Lillian Inman, and a niece of the late Dr. F. W. Inman, who developed a very large citrus territory, said to be the most prosperous in the State. The announcement was made at a reception and dance given last night by Mrs. F. W. Inman. The guests from Plainfield included Mr. and Mrs. George T. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Howell, of Myrtle avenue; Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Wilson, of Watchung avenue, and Mr. and Mrs. Boardman Tyler, of West Seventh street.

At the same time that Mr. Rogers sent word of the engagement he also wrote that he had purchased an orange grove at Florence Villa, and will make his home there permanently. He has a large circle of friends in this city, having been active in social affairs here for many years, and will be missed in many local activities. He originally went to Florida for the winter at the suggestion of Duncan Bruce, formerly of New York, who is well known in this city, and is now conducting a large orange grove in the South. Mr. Bruce has also recently announced his engagement to Miss Keyser, of Baltimore.

ARMED TROOPS WON'T MEAN WAR

Declares Miss Janet Richards in Bi-monthly Lecture at Hartridge Auditorium.

HUERTA HAS NO RIGHTS

Killing of Benton in No Way Implicated the De Facto Government of Mexico, Says the Speaker—President Wilson is Conscientious.

"Should the United States intervene and send an armed force in Mexico, in an effort to reclaim the body of the Englishman Benton, who is declared to have been murdered by General Villa, such action would not be tantamount to a declaration of war, in the opinion of Miss Janet Richards, of Washington, who spoke before a large gathering of women at Hartridge Auditorium, yesterday afternoon.

Reason for her belief is based upon the fact that while there is at present a de facto government in Mexico, of which General Huerta is the head there is no government de jure. The latter was held to be a government which has complied with all of the usages and requirements of constitutional law. This the Huerta administration, Miss Richards said, has never done. Because of the existing condition of affairs this country has told Huerta that he has absolutely no right to hold the office which he now occupies.

"Say what people will," said Miss Richards, with emphasis, "the Huerta or de facto government in Mexico has not been in the least involved in the incidents leading up to the killing of the Englishman Benton. It is Villa who is responsible and who must be held to accountability. There are those who are questioning whether or not it would be equivalent to a declaration of war on the part of this country should President Wilson order an armed force into Mexico, to compel the surrender of the body of Benton. I hold that it would not as the killing of Benton in no way implicated the Huerta, or as it is otherwise called, the de facto government in Mexico.

"The incident is one that happened 1,000 miles away from the present seat of government in that country. Should it be decided to send a large detachment of U. S. cavalry from El Paso, Texas, into Mexico, it is just possible that Villa and his insurgent adherents might still rebel against authority and the result would be that we would have a mimic warfare because of our invasion. But Villa, if he is the bandit it is said that he is, should, in my opinion, be speedily and summarily dealth with.

"It may, perhaps not be well known to some of those here today that England has no consuls resident in northern Mexico. Hence the application which England has made to the United States, asking that we provide safe conduct for the dead body of Mr. Benton, an English subject. It is desired to exhume the remains for the purpose of examination as to whether the body was really shot full of holes or otherwise mutilated. The fact that Villa has refused to give up Benton's body puts the United States in the position of being forced to take such steps as will compel compliance with our demands which we have made because of the friendly relations existing between this country and England. There is some question as to whether Bentor had foresworn his allegiance to Great Britain. It is known that he had married a very rich Mexican woman through whom he became possessed of an estate of some 100,000 acres.

"Significant, as showing the friendly feeling which exists between England and the United States, was the statement made in the British Parliament a few days since by Sir Edward Grey when he was asked if England would demand interference in the Mexican trouble by the United States. He replied that England would do nothing that would embarrass the government of the United States, but that negotiations would still be carried on between representatives of the two countries, in a friendly way. Such a statement reflects infinite credit upon the English diplomat as it would have been very possible for some very unpleasant things to have been uttered against this government owing to the dilatory methods of the administration.

"I can say, however, that while there is a deal of criticism over the refusal of this country so far to intervene in Mexican affairs, that the great majority of thinking people in the United States are in favor of again passing over the incident of Benton's death in order to avert the possibility of war. No matter how short and decisive the struggle we might have with Mexico it would cost the lives of many Americans. We cannot afford such human sacrifices and, too, our present pension list totals the enormous sum of $160,000,000 yearly.

TO ENGAGE ENGINEER

Not Alarmed by Note of Warning of Opposition—Officials are Preparing to Go Ahead With the Plans as Soon as Possible.

Building of the long contemplated sewer for the accommodation and relief of residents of Plainfield, North Plainfield and Dunellen will, it is said, be begun within a short time. There will be a meeting of the members of the joint sewage commission in the Council Chamber, in this city, next Wednesday evening, March 4.

Announcement is expected to be made at that time as to the choice of the members of the joint commission for the post of chief engineer, who will have charge of the building of the proposed trunk line. It is also believed that there will be encouraging news heard from the committee which has been carrying on negotiations for the purchase of the Darling farm, the agreed upon location for the sewage disposal beds.

While opposition has developed on the part of some of the residents of Piscataway Township to the location of the sewage disposal beds in that locality, the claim being made that it would tend to depreciate the value of surrounding property, it is not believed by the city officials that such protest will seriously hamper, or to any extent interfere, with the progress of the work. William A. Coddington is counsel for those residents who have entered a protest to the establishment of the beds on the Darling farm.

THIEVES RESUME OPERATIONS HERE

Visit Stores of J. B. Guttrdige and J. C. Blimm, But Get Little.

James B. Guttridge, a butcher, of the Netherwood section, reported to the local police this morning that someone had entered his store during last night, carried away a gum machine, a number of cigars and some valuable papers from a safe in the office.

Patrolmen Baeder and Saunders found the papers on the railroad near Leland avenue early this morning, and returned them to the owner. No trace of the thieves has been secured.

Thieves entered the grocery store of Joseph Blimm at 263 East Third street sometime during the night and took $4.60 from the till. The matter was reported to the police, but no clue has been obtained as to the thieves.

NEIGHBORS FOLLOW IN LINCOLN'S FOOTSTEPS

John Coughlan, of Leland avenue, was hailed before Judge DeMeza this morning in the city court, charged with disorderly conduct by Captain Christian Frederickson, his next door neighbor. After listening to a detailed review of the cases by both sides, during which troubles of the last six months were related, the court admonished Coughlan for his disorderly acts in the rear of his home and suspended sentence.

Samuel S. Swackhamer, counsel for the defense, suggested in his summing up that Judge DeMeza follow in the footsteps of Abraham Lincoln and help to promote friendship and good will by making the defendant apologize. Coughlan made a dash for the outstretched arm of his neighbor when the court accepted this as a compromise and the twenty-five year neighbors left the court-arm in arm.

Popular Basketball Coach Presented With a Gift of $50 in Gold as a Token of Appreciation—Toasts and Songs for All Present.

The North Plainfield High School basketball team, Plainfield and Somerset county interscholastic champions, and the baseball management of the High School were the guests at a dinner last night, in the school building, given by fifteen of the teachers of the Somerset School. There were fourteen seated at the table, including Principal Albert Early and Coach Paul Collier.

The affair was the finest that has ever been given in the history of the school and the hostesses did a great deal of work in composing poems about all those present and also in making parodies about the season and the league games. The room was decorated with three large American flags and about a dozen large High School banners were hung over the tables. In the middle of the room was a table draped with pennants with the cup that was won two years ago on it inside of which was placed the basketball.

The place cards were in the form of poems and had the picture of a basketball player on each. Buttonhole carnation bouquets were also given as favors.

The dinner was served in six courses and between each there were speeches and songs. The hostesses sang a very pleasing original song entitled, "Some Say There's No Style to North Plainfield."

After the repast the guests were given cards on which were original songs that were sung. Almost every detail of the game was brought into the piece and it was just like playing it all over again. After the singing was over Principal Albert Early was called upon to start the speechmaking and proved equal to the occasion. Coach Collier, Captain Burger and all the rest of the guests were called upon in order to make toasts and responded in fine shape.

Making the last speech for the guests, Captain Ashley Burner presented Coach Collier with $50 in appreciation of his services during the past season. It was presented on behalf of the Boys' Athletic Association.

The guests were then taken to the kindergarten in the main building, and danced until a late hour. The feature of this part of the program was a miniature baseball game staged by the basketball players.

Those in charge were the Misses Edna French, Agnes Boxold, Mary Robley, Maude Casselie, Olive Dugan, Bertha Spencer, Grace Winnie, Roxana Love, Bernice Attner and Eva Terry. Miss Grace Spencer, of Wayre, N. Y., a sister of the domestic science instructor, also assisted. The following persons were present as guests: Principal Albert Earley, Coach Paul Collier and Messrs. Ashley Burner, Duclos VanMater, Hyman Abrams, Roy Love, Addison Newkirk, Ronold Conroy, Warren Townley, Ralph Smalley, Charles Beckman, Franklin Lowe, Lester Chandler and Frank Dunning.

INAUGURATE NEW FARE SYSTEM TODAY

Patrons of Trolley Company Will Now Use "Pay-as-you-Enter" on Local Lines.

The pay-as-you-enter system of collecting fares was put into operation by the Public Service Railway Company on all the local lines today. Similar action was taken with respect to local lines in the other cities of the central division, which comprises Elizabeth, Plainfield, New Brunswick, Perth Amboy and South Amboy.

The type of car has been in operation in Newark, Jersey City and Hoboken for a long time and the system is not objected to by patrons who are used to it. Its chief advantage is, that the conductors are not forced to crowd their way back and forth through the cars collecting fares to the annoyance of passengers, but can stand on the rear platform and better control the operation of the car and help to prevent accidents. It is proposed to equip the cars on the other divisions similarly as soon as the fare-boxes can be secured.

The device to be used on the local cars will differ slightly from that to be used on the Main Line cars, and as soon as the patrons get used to the new system it is believed it will be appreciated by the traveling public.

SUPREME COURT REVERSES DECISION

W. Lester Glenney Upheld in Contention Under Employers' Liability Act.

W. L. Glenney, of this city, of counsel for the Barbour Flax Spinning Company, won a notable victory yesterday in the Supreme Court, when that judicial body reversed a decision of Judge Tennant, of Hudson county, in an action brought against the company by George Haggerty, an employe, who sought compensation under the employers' liability act for injuries received some time ago.

Haggerty's injuries, which were in the elbow, were received at the company's factory, when a bale of jute dropped through a shaft and bowled him over. In the trial before Judge Tennant, the latter in deciding in favor of the complainant allowed him $5 a week, the lowest amount under the law, for the full 150 weeks, his opinion being that a proportionate amount of weekly compensation in this case was $5, and his allowance for full time was the same as though the arm had been broken.

Justice Swayze, who wrote the opinion of the Supreme Court, reversing the first decision, states that under the law $5 should be allowed for a proportionate number of weeks. Haggerty was drawing a salary of $9 a week and the law provides that he is entitled to $50 per cent. of his wages as compensation.

The case will now be tried over again for the purpose of ascertaining exactly the extent of the injuries received by Haggerty. The case was appealed last November, the opinion being handed down yesterday. The complainant is represented by Raymond, Mountain, VanBlarcom & Marsh, of Newark. The case has attracted widespread attention and interest.

NEARING THE $10,000 MARK

Y. W. C. A. Teams Working Hard on Last Day of Campaign.

FUND TOTALS $9,547

Announcement of $500 Offer by C. W. McCutchen Received with Cheers Profits of Miss Janet Richards' Lectures Goes to Successful Team.

With a total of $9,547 cash in hand, the collections of yesterday having added $2,347.25 to the total of $7,199.75 gathered from Plainfielders in the two previous days solicitation, the Y. W. C. A. canvassers are today making efforts to add materially to the amount already received. Not only is it expected that more than the $10,000 aimed for when the financial campaign was started, will be collected, but a plan has been adopted, which if carried out successfully, will result in still more money being raised, for cancelling the $5,250 mortgage on the adjoining property to the Y. W. C. A. building, which the association purchased last spring. So far as the $10,000 fund is concerned the campaign ends today.

Announcement was made by Mrs. Percy H. Stewart at the meeting of the scores of women canvassers late yesterday afternoon at the association headquarters, that Charles W. McCutchen, of this city, had offered $500 towards a fund to be raised for paying off the $5,250 mortgage mentioned, if the members would raise the balance through voluntary subscriptions. The news was received with cheers and much applause by the many women present and they acclaimed the proposition with much eagerness. Final arrangements for the further solicitation of money, will, it is said, in all likelihood be made at the meeting of all the canvassers this afternoon. Tea will be served as usual at 4 o'clock and the reports of the various teams as to the amounts collected on this the last day of the $10,000 campaign will be received.

In announcing the $500 gift of Mr. McCutchen, Mrs. Stewart stated that fund of $500, from the lectures by Miss Janet Richards, which is to be assigned to that team which succeeds in collecting the largest amount of money today, would also be credited to the fund towards paying the $5,250 mortgage. This will leave but $4,250 to be raised through subscription. It is believed by the members that this amount can be raised speedily, and with but little trouble. Much eagerness was evinced at yesterday's meeting when the new project was broached and the campaign will be entered into enthusiastically. Those who have contributed money to the recent campaign and all others who are interested in the work which the Y. W. C. A. is doing for young womanhood, have been asked to be present this afternoon when final reports of the solicitation teams will be made. The gathering is expected to be a large one.

Team No. 1, of which Mrs. Rufus Lincoln is captain, had nine canvassers at work yesterday and collected from 20 subscribers, $133. Team No. 2, of which Mrs. Frank W. French is captain, had nine canvassers at work and collected from 31 subscribers, $219. Team No. 3, of which Miss Edith Mellick is captain, had ten canvassers at work and collected from 49 subscribers, $198.25. Team No. 4, of which Miss Dorothy Fleming is captain, had nine canvassers at work and collected from 30 subscribers, $241. Team No. 5, of which Mrs. Francis de Lacey Hyde is captain, had seven canvassers at work and collected from 26 subscribers, $313. Team No. 6, of which Mrs. Lewis Williams is captain, had ten canvassers at work and collected from 21 subscribers, $188.50. Team No. 7, of which Mrs. Walter McGee is captain, had nine canvassers at work and collected from 28 subscribers, $193.75. Team No. 8, of which Mrs. Leslie R. Fort is captain, had nine canvassers at work and collected from 45 subscribers, $179.75. Team No. 9, of which Mrs. W. D. Murray is captain, had ten subscribers at work and collected from 34 subscribers, $451.50. Team No. 10, of which Mrs. W. C. O'Donnell is captain, had sixteen canvassers at work and collected from 28 subscribers, $247.50.

Collections for the first day totaled $4,165.25, for the second day $3,034.50, and for the third day, $2,347.25. This is a grand total thus far, with today's subscriptions to be heard from of $9,547.

When the horse felt the sudden jerk, caused by the holding of the runner by the piece of pipe it became frightened and bolted, overturning the sleigh, breaking the harness and throwing the driver into the road. COMMISSION RULE CANVASS TO BE MADE IN WESTFIELD

Westfield, Feb. 27—Since the Town Council granted a renewal of all liquor licenses in the face of a vigorous protest, there has been considerable agitation for commission form of government for the town. The agitation has been taken up by a committee and in a few days each voter in the town will receive a circular letter and a return postal card on which he will be asked to state whether he is for or against the commission form.

If a sufficient number of the voters seem to be in favor of the change, petitions will be circulated for the number of signatures necessary to put the question up to a vote of the people. From present indications the advocates of the plan claim they will have no difficulty in obtaining the necessary number of signatures.

Plainfield, N. J., February 27, 1914.

A GREAT EXAMPLE.

Up in the little town of Mendham in Morris county, the Board of Education today inaugurated a new plan for finding out the wishes of the people that every board in the State might well copy. Every taxpayer in the municipality has been sent an appeal urging co-operation with the board in its effort to get the greatest efficiency from the schools. Advice and suggestions of all kinds are being sought by a unique post-card campaign, and it is hoped that the education of the children and the spending of school money will never be criticised as a result of the action of this progressive body.

On a return post-card, the reply part of which is addressed to the chairman of the teachers' committee, the following message is sent:

"We are plannng to send you during the next few weeks several statements about our schools. The expense of these cards is met by private funds, not school money. We want you to understand just how your school money is spent and what we are trying to do for Mendham children, in spite of lack of room in our building, and some discouraging conditions.

If there are questions in your mind about the way your children are being taught and what they are being taught, or about the school buildings, the Board of Education wants to know.

We shall answer your questions in these statements or send you the information directly if we can. You can help by tearing off and mailing back to us the attached postal card after you have written on it any

1—Questions you want us to answer.

2—Suggestions, no matter how small, for improving schools or school work.

If you prefer not to have your name used, do not let that keep you from writing on the postal. If you have no questions or suggestions, please send back the card anyway with your name on it to let us know that you have received it and will be glad to know more about Mendham schools."

Can anyone suggest a better method of feeling the pulse of the people on the matter of school affairs, except possibly through an expensive referendum election? Even then all discussion would have to be confined to certain specified matters. At times in the past there has been criticism of the Plainfield board. Whether or not this is justified we do not care to discuss, but is it not true that if the local board gave public notice of all its meetings, and invited the local taxpayers to be present, there would be less criticism? The law provides that the meetings of the Board of Education in every municipality shall be open to the public, but how is the public to know of them, unless notices are printed in the local papers, or circulated through some other method?

While the Mendham plan is not exactly practical because of the size of Plainfield, still it opens a field which the local Board of Education might well enter. Publicity never did any harm to any public body, and it should be welcomed. The Mendham example is a good one.

Three or four years ago if the question of passing a constitutional amendment permitting woman suffrage had been broached in New Jersey it would have been met with a hue and cry that would have been heard from one end of the State to the other. This year the bill was taken so much as a matter of course that many of the State papers did not even record the fact that it had passed the Senate on Tuesday. When it passed the House a few weeks ago, by a vote of 49 in favor and 4 against, there was some publicity but the passage by the Senate hardly caused a ripple, the vote being 15 for and 3 against. Now the matter has to be advertised and passed by next year's legislature, after which it will be submitted to a vote of the people. Then the real campaign will begin. If the women secure the vote at the election in 1915, well and good, but if they lose they cannot try again for some time, as constitutional amendments cannot be submitted but once in five years. The women who have secured the passage of the amendment are to be congratulated upon the success of their efforts.

HAVE YOU MADE YOUR RETURN?

Returns under the new Federal income tax law must all be made by tomorrow. All who are affected by its provisions and who fail to send a statement to the internal revenue collector at Newark, of their income for the year ending December 31 last are liable for an amount equal to double their tax, and are also subject to a heavy fine. The law is so framed, however, as to make it optional with the collectors to grant an extension of a few weeks to persons who may offer satisfactory proof that they were prevented from making returns because of sickness or for some other unavoidable cause. Neglect will not be accepted as an excuse, however, and it behooves all who have not already made the return to get busy tonight or tomorrow. Several of the local banks have the necessary blanks.

Plainfield dollars are going to do great work tomorrow. The first "Dollar Day" under the auspices of the Merchants' Association promises to be the greatest one from a point of view of value giving that this city has ever seen. One dollar will do the work of two in practically every case, and even so much as a five-dollar value is offered for a dollar in one of the advertisements in today's Daily Press. We congratulate the Merchants' Association upon what promises to be the biggest and most successful business day that the city has ever had.

Frank L. Holt, for many years one of the hardest working and most conscientious members of the City Council, has written the editorial for tomorrow's Daily Press. In it he discusses what has been done at Staunton, Va., the birthplace of President Wilson, since that hustling municipality adopted the commission form of government.

HAWTHORN GINGER JAR BRINGS $2,100

Chinese Porcelains in Carvahlo Collection Attracts Many Buyers.

Some of the finest pieces of blue and white Chinese porcelain, part of the rare collection of S. S. Carvalho, of Plainfield, were sold yesterday at the American Art Association, in New York. The top price of the day was $2,100, which was paid by one Kaldenburg, a dealer, for what was said to be a matchless hawthorn ginger jar. This piece brought $8,000 at the Jarvis sale. Another dealer in antiques, S. Chait, secured three lovely palace pieces, formerly the property of King William, of Holland and known to collectors and connoisseurs as the Madame de Maintenon garniture, for $1,200. They cost the owner, it is said, $4,000. A pair of palace vases, 48 inches in height, and kown as the dragon band vases, fetched $2,800.

For a K'an-shi fish bowl, 22 inches in diameter, $270 was paid. A magnificent club vase brought $640, declared to be just one-half of its value, and another that was sold for $360 was regarded by many of those who were present at the dispersal sale as being almost given away. For a triple gourdvase, 28 inches in height, $520 was paid. One K'ang-hsi temple jar went for $340, and a pair of vars of the same period, with dogs of fu, brought $780. This was declared by dealers to be only one-tenth of their value. One of the gems of the entire collection, a lang-lizen garniture, sold for only $520.

Edson Russell paid $925 for an exquisite club vase of soft paste and for the finest beaker in the collection he paid only $590. The same buyer secured a most beautiful eggshell ginger jar for $180. This sum was said by collectors present to be scarcely sufficient to pay for the cost of the cover and the stand on which the jar stood. A five-piece garniture with the flowers of paradise, was sold to Mrs. Ogden Goelet, for $600, and a pair of globular bottle vases brought only $500.

Altogether, the prices paid for articles at the sale were extremely low, it is said. Mr. Carvalho's single color jars, vases, galipots and garnitures will be sold Saturday afternoon, and the snuff bottles, family rose cups, saucers, vases, plates and teapots will be disposed of on Monday afternoon. This will conclude the sale of the fine collection.

BRYAN SAYS HUERTA HAS NOT ASKED AID OF U. S.

(By Telegraph to The Daily Press.)

Washington, Feb. 27—Secretary of State Bryan was asked today if there was any truth in the despatch from Mexico City to the effect that Provisional President Huerta in a memorandum said to have been forwarded by Senor Rojas, minister of foreign relations, had asked the co-operation of the United States in restoring peace in Mexico. Mr. Bryan said that the despatch was false in all respects.

It was also said at the White House that nothing had been heard from Provisional President Huerta along the lines in the despatch from Mexico City to the effect that aid had been asked of the United States government to put down the rebellion.

Newark bowlers have captured the championship in the Elks' League, finishing the season two games each way ahead of the New Brunswicks, who take second place honors. The Newark five captured two games on its own alleys last night, taking the Paterson quintet into camp, while the New Brunswicks lost two games out of three to the Elizabeths. The Plainfield five got two games out of three from the New Yorks and the Hobokens turned a similar trick at the expense of the Jersey City quintet.

Newark bowlers did fine pinning in the first game of the match on the Green street alleys last night, and with counts of 910 and 972, accounted for two easy victories. Then with the championship clinched, they let up, and a total of 872 was insufficient in the last contest, the Patersons, with 896, winning by twenty-four pins. Weingarth was very much on the job for the Newarkers, with counts of 227 and 218, and an average of 208-1. Dick Erler rolled 221 and 213, and averaged 202. Romary led for Paterson, with 231.

Larry Westphal, of the New York quintet, practically clinched the second game for his team by setting up the high score mark of the evening, a 229 in the second session. Cose, Nash and Campbell all chalked up double centuries for the Plainfielders.

BRUNSWICK DIED GAME.

New Brunswick's last chances of capturing the Elks League championship were shattered last night, when they dropped two games out of three on the Elizabeth Elks' alleys. The home five, with counts of 928 and 940, romped away with the first two games. New Brunswick came through with 922 in the final setto and showed the way by forty-seven pins. Maloney did great work for Elizabeth, having counts of 248 and 205 and an average of 214-2. Keller was there for 214. "Sportdom Tips"

COACHES ARE NEEDED.

During the past season of basketball in local and borough school centers there has developed the need for more adequate coaching systems and a couple of the local institutions, not necessarily schools, have been sadly in need of some competent director to handle the coaching reins. A team trainer is as necessary to the success of a team as material for playing and without someone at the helm who is not actively engaged in playing the game a basketball team is almost sure to be a failure as far as winning championships is concerned. A captain has authority, but in most cases is reluctant to exercise his rights over his fellow team mates. A coach is an outsider who is not trying to hold down or win a permanent berth on the team itself and he can shift and fire as he sees fit. It is a notable thing in this section that the teams now hailed as champions of one branch or another have had real coaches at the helm while those having inefficient coaches or none at all have been trailers. To be sure, coaches do not make the teams and in some instances good coaches have turned out failures because of the deplorable lack of material for playing purposes.

LOCAL BOYS MAKING GOOD.

With the incoming season of baseball and other spring and summer sports near at hand, we note that Plainfield is already well represented in the collegiate and professional world of sport endeavor. In the University of Pensylvania we have Russell Miller as captain of the gym team and president of the Intercollegiate Gymnastic Association; in Columbia University we have Russell Lawrence as captain of the university track team and logical champion in the shot put event; in New York University there is Ray Dutcher as club swinging champion of the intercollegiate and amateur world; "Hub" Stine is trying out for the catching berth on the Springfield Training School nine; Clyde Doane is after baseball honors at Williams; Jim Nash is representing Temple University on the diamond, and numerous other Plainfield school boys are shining more or less prominently. Jack Martin will represent Plainfield in the National League; Tommy Mullin goes to the Empire State League; Eugene Lidgate, P. H. S. boy, goes as a catcher to Baltimore; Lou Dixon goes to the New York State League, and many other local favorites are packing up to leave for the sunny South. Summing up all sides local sportsmen will have much to watch during the days to come.

Not content with pushing basketballs, kicking pigskins and heaving the horsehide, Westfield High School students have decided to take a crack at the bowling game. Splitting wood is healthy exercise if done the proper way.

Those who love bob sleding have plenty of the pastime nowadays. The hills hereabouts are dotted with sleds and bobs of all sizes every night.

'Tis said that "Doc" Doyle, manager of the Holy Cross football team has decided to insure his players against injuries during the off season. If any of the Holy Cross boys try the stunts their team-mate, Jack "Windy" Caulfield, has been trying during the past week on a bob sled, "Doc" will have some policies to collect.

Speaking of football, several of the Holy Cross warriors recently announced that they had certain football paraphanalia for sale (meaning the annual retirement gag). We have a slight suspicion, however, that these men will make a wild scramble for the moleskins next October.

Jack Martin will further establish his claims to being a real ball player tonight—Jack will do what many other stars have done before him, tread the footlights and answer to encores. Martin is the clerk in that Mock Trial court, being held in Hope chapel tonight.

What has become of the interscholastic meet certain promoters started in these diggings several weeks ago? It was a good thing, why drop it now?

One of the most interesting games of basketball of the season will be played on the Saengerbund Hall court, tonight, when a team of players, mostly Y. M. C. A. products, will meet the N. P. H. S. schoolboy five.

Feathers flutted red in that meeting of North Plainfield High School baseball moguls yesterday. We note that they neglected to fire any Murphys or sign any Evers.

Fitz has proven to us that he really has $250 worth of property in this little old State of ours. Now for some real press agent stuff for the oldtimer who says that we are still young at 150.

It's pretty near time to put the fire out on that Hot Stove League circuit. Wagon tongues will soon take the place of human tongues in the world of sport.

Y. M. C. A. TEAM WILL PLAY IN SUMMIT Y. M. C. A. GYM

The Plainfield Y. M. C. A. basketball team, with several new faces in the lineup, will go to Summit tomorrow night, to play a game with the Y. M. C. A. team of that place. Negotiations have been under way for some time for a contest between these two associations and much interest has been aroused over the affair.

The trip will be made via auto bus and a number of rooters are expected to accompany the team to Summit. Moulton and McNamee will be out of the lineup on this occasion and their places will be taken by Peacock and Ted Gavett.

PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL'S GAME WITH YONKERS CHANGED

The basketball game originally scheduled to be played by the Plainfield High School basketball five on the Y. M. C. A. court tomorrow night, against the Yonkers High School quintet, has been put ahead to tomorrow afternoon, in order to enable several of the P. H. S. players to accompany the Y. M. C. A. team to Summit on that occasion.

Plainfield High was trimmed by Yonkers early in the season but the locals except to come back on their home court, which is much smaller than the big one at Yonkers.

VANEMBURGH'S COLTS TOOK THE ODD MATCH

Opening of the Elks' Club Tourney, Marked by Some Keen Rivalry.

Edward Laing's team of pets took two out of the three games rolled with the team captained by Harry VanEmburgh in the Elks' bowling tournament, last night, winning the rubber contest after each aggregation had come through with a victory in the opening two matches. Van Emburgh's opened the league competition with a victory, setting up a mark of 769 against the other side's 660. The opposition came back in the next setto with a mark of 778 against the other side's 680.

Good pinning on the part of Van Buren was largely responsible for Van Emburgh's single win. He set up 210 in the first conflict. Swalm chalked up the high water mark of the evening in the third game, when he knocked down 214 of the wooden images.

AJAX QUINTET WILL MEET N. P. H. S. ON SAENGERBUND

A basketball double header of unusual merit will be staged on the Saengerbund Hall court tonight, when the North Plainfield High School clan lines up against the Ajax aggregation, an old time rival of the boroughites, and two "kid" teams appear in the preliminary attraction. Included in the visitors' lineup will be a majority of the Y. M. C. A. players and N. P. H. S. will have its regular squad on the floor.

The teams will lineup as follows:

AJAX.	N. P. H. S.
Moulton, forward	Van Mater
McNamee, forward	Love
Farmer, centre	Dunning
Brynairski, guard	Abrams
Peacock, guard	Burner

MEADOWVIEW ENGLISH SETTER THE BEST IN THIS COUNTRY

Plainfield dogs took two special cups at the Grand Central Palace in New York, yesterday, where the thirty-eighth annual show of the Westminster Kennel Club is in progress. Both of the prize winning exhibits were entered by the Meadowview kennels and brought home the Charles Raymond cup for the best English setter bred in the United States and Canada, and the Louis S. Thompson cup for the best English setter.

EFFORTS MADE TO ROUT AN ATHLETIC CLIQUE

At a meeting of the North Plainfield High School Boys' Athletic Association, yesterday afternoon, the body became involved in one of the most complicated arguments that has ever been brought up. The difference was over the number of medals that are to be given for the city interscholastic championship that has just been won. One of the substitutes took the floor and asked whether or not he was to receive a medal. Almost immediately after another of the second string men of the team got up and stated reasons why he should receive a medal. The association divided into two factions and fought for a full hour over a decision. It was finally decided by a vote of the student body that eight medals should be awarded.

The meeting yesterday was the climax of something that was started two years ago. At that time there was a Greek letter society organized in the borough in which there were a number of High School students. This club has grown until it has become quite a body and this year the power of the athletics of the High School has come to the members of this organization. It was then accused of "bossing" High School affairs and a hot meeting was held. At this meeting it was shown how the officers obtained their positions and everything went well for a time. Four members of the championship team this year belong to this club so do the captain and manager.

This argument put Manager Van Mater in a bad light and in a roundabout way today he was accused of incompetency, because the association has overruled the methods of the man that they put in this position to take charge of affairs at the beginning of the season. The ruling of the governing body is, of course, final and steps will be taken accordingly.

PLAN INTERSCHOLASTIC TENNIS COMPETITION

Harold Lounsbury, manager of the Plainfield High School tennis team, is trying to start interest for a city interscholastic tennis tournament to be held this spring. This is a new feature along athletic lines for the local schools.

There are a number of fine tennis players in the three local schools and an interesting fight could undoubtedly be staged when the court game starts. Lounsbury has received word from the manager of the Leal's team that they are willing to enter but the borough school has not yet decided. Most of the "Canadian" racquet wielders are members of the baseball team and have their time pretty well taken up between practice and the annual play that is now under way. The borough Athletic Association will decide in the near future whether or not they will enter.

POSTAL REFUTES BELL'S STATEMENT

Criticism which has been made by the Bell Telephone Company at two of the 66 rates which are being quoted by the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company in comparing the rates charged for telephone service in New Jersey with the rate charged in other States and cities has resulted in a statement being compiled by the Postal Company, refuting a statement made a few days ago by A. B. Wilson, of the Plainfield office of the New York Telephone Company. Here are the facts which they adduce:

"The Postal Company said that the unlimited rate of Dayton, Ohio, is $40, while the limited Paterson, N. J., rate is $156. The Bell Company says this comparison is unfair because the 'average' limited Paterson N. J., rate is $63.23. We know nothing about this 'average' $63.23, but assuming it to be true, what does it prove? It proves that the Paterson rate is over 50% greater than the Dayton rate, notwithstanding the immense saving of the Bell Company in Paterson by having a monopoly. The Bell Company convicts itself by its own claim.

"The Bell Company says that our comparison of the $30 Decatur, Ill., rate with the $156 Plainfield, N. J., rate is also unfair because the 'average' limited Plainfield, N. J., rate is $61.09. Assuming here too that this is true, it onlly proves that the Plainfield rate is over 100% greater than the Decatur rate, notwithstanding the immense saving of the Bell Company in Plainfield by having a monopoly. The Bell Company says further that the Decatur rate quoted by us is for a two party line, while the Plainfield rate is for a one party line. This claim of the Bell Company is false. The $30 Decatur, Ill., rare is for a one party line. Whether the Bell Company intentionally has misstated this fact we do not know.

"Similar misstatements in regard to the table of telephone rates put out by the Postal Company are being made from day to day by the Bell Company at differne points in New Jersey. We are prepared to prove the accuracy of the table of comparative telephone rates and all other statements which we have published in New Jersey."

OBSERVES NINETY-FIRST BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Aaron Foster Celebrates Event by Entertaining Company of Friends.

Mrs. Aaron Foster quietly celebrated the ninety-first anniversary of her birthday yesterday at the home of her son-in-law, John W. Dickinson, on Leland avenue, with whom she has been living for some time. Although well advanced in years, Mrs. Foster possesses unusual health and strength. She is very active, her only trouble being a slight deafness. She takes a deep interest in the newspapers, which she reads every day, being anxious to keep abreast of the times in current event happenings.

Mrs. Foster spends a portion of her time sewing, being especially fond of quilting. Her eyesight is unusually good, never having experienced any trouble in this respect. She removed to this city with her son-in-law and grandchildren in August last. Yesterday Mrs. Foster entertained a frew friends from Newark and congratulations were offered.

Mrs. Foster is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Price. She was born on Bank street, Newark, where the Prudential Insurance Company building now stands, living there for sixty years. Her parents lived there a great many years before her. Mrs. Foster is a life-long member of the First Presbyterian church, Newark, and until she removed here attended the services regularly. The members of the immediate family comprise John W. Dickinson, a son-in-law, who is employed in the Walter Scott Printing Machine Works, and two grandchildren, Miss Edith M. Dickinson, a teacher in the Stillman Public School, and John Aaron Dickinson.

READY TO PURCHASE FARM

which was sounded yesterday by former Mayor Newton B. Smalley, of North Plainfield. Mayor Robert Clark, Jr., and other councilmen of North Plainfield who were seen today by a reporter for The Daily Press, declared that now that the project had been agreed upon and all of the preliminary arrangements made, the sewer should be begun and at the earliest possible moment. Plans have been effected for the bond issue that will be necessary to build the line and Treasurer W. F. Arnold and Secretary Dolliver are both ready to perform the dutes of their respective offices in connection with the poject.

Mayor Clark pointed out the fact today that when Newton B. Smalley was Mayor of Nodth Plainfield in 1909 and 1910 it was proposed to purchase the Zvolneck farm for the location of sewage beds. Bound Brock residents enjoined such action. Relief was sought through legislative action but the measure, although passed, was vetoed by Governor Wilson. Strangely enough the same collection system as is now favored was advocated by the borough authorities, of which Mr. Smalley was the head at that time.

Legislative enactment as far back as 1905, it is said, provided that crude sewage could not be emptied into any navigable stream after the year 1913, and that filtration plants must be established by municipalities.

"You may quote me as saying that I am heartily in favor of the proposed joint sewer," said Mayor Clark, "and I hope the work will be started soon and carried to completion without any unnecessary delay. The need of such a sewer is great and citizens will welcome the improvement."

Councilman Edmund Rushmore also spoke emphatically in favor of the joint sewer project and urged the necessity of beginning the work as soon as possible. Speaking of the interview with former Mayor Smalley, which was published in the newspapers of yesterday, Mr. Rushmore said:

"In Mr. Smalley's article he complains of the cost to the borough. There was talk of locating the beds on the Zvolneck farm when he was mayor in 1910. If he had carried out this project, the cost for the installation of the sewer would, so far as I can see, have been the same as now. The location of the sewage disposal beds on the Zvolneck farm would have placed them nearer to a community that is already built up than if they were located as is now proposed on the Darling farm.

"As regards the proposition made to empty into the Raritan river such a scheme is impossible and entirely out of the question as the law prohibits it. Mr. Smalley's pet county idea is not very likely to materialize during our time. Anyone who is at all familiar with the political situation can readily understand that counties like Hudson, Essex and Passaic would certainly never stand for increased representation, to their detriment, from as small a county as the proposed boundaries would be as regards population.

"The present joint sewer project which is now so well under way has been well thought out and passed upon by not alone the citizens of this city and borough but also by some of the best engineers who have given careful attention to the matter. Yesterday's article would seem to make it appear as if the opinions of such men was not to be as highly regarded as the opinion of the writer.

"If Mr. Smalley is really so desirous of saving the borough money, why does he oppose sending the children of North Plainfield to the Plainfield schools. This, as experts have demonstrated, would save the borough thousands of dollars yearly. And why was it that he opposed carrying the tax matter to the Court of Errors and Appeals, when lawyers who ought to have been in a position to pass upon such matters said that we had the best possible chance to win.

"Why is it that some of the inhibtants of the township take such an interest in borough affairs?"

NEW $10 COUNTERFEIT BILL.

Washington, Feb. 27—A new counterfeit $10 note has made its appearance, the secret service announced in a circular issued yesterday. The note is of the series of 1901, and the number of the specimen is "D46792-035." The secret service says that while the note is of fairly good appearance it should not deceive the ordinary careful handler of money. It is a photo-mechanical reproduction on two pieces of paper pasted together, and the silk fibre of the genuine note is imitated by pen ink marks.

TROOPS WON'T MEAN WAR

"Those editors of this country who attack the policy of President Wilson so bitterly and viciously because of his desire to keep hands off of Mexico would never, safe to say, venture at any time within smell of powder smoke. Those who know him intimately, and best will tell you that President Woodrow Wilson is extremely conscientious and that he is at all times anxious and eager to do his best. It is true that he has reversed his former policy as regards the charging of tolls for vessels entering the Panama canal. He now wants to conciliate England. We will, upon the completion of the canal, have spent $400,000,000 on it. Prediction has been made that we will never be able to get this great sum of money back. Yet the Suez canal pays, and not only pays but yields large returns in the shape of dividends to its shareholders. Our canal in Panama will prove a great competitor of the Suez canal, and will be used by those navigators who prefer to sail around the world our way. The Panama canal cuts off 10,000 miles of travel, 5,000 miles each way.

NEEDLEWORK

A NEW SPRING BLOUSE

Characteristic of the new imported blouse is this pretty model with its front-closing raglan sleeves and narrow turn-over collar. These blouses are made of crepe de Chine, crepe voil, batiste, handkerchief linen and all the pretty cotton crepon weaves that are new this season. They are trimmed only with collars, cuffs and fronts worked in dainty little flower designs in French embroidery.

Simple enough for the home dressmaker to construct and as pretty as any imported model, is blouse 7715, the pattern for which comes in sizes 32 to 42 inches bust-measure. Size 36, requires 3½-yards of 27 or 2⅝-yards of 36-inch material. The new type of raglan sleeve is very becoming to the slender girl as is the slight fullness below the shoulder line. The collar, cuffs, fronts and sleeves may be stamped with transfer pattern 14664 and should be embroidered with filo silks on crepe de Chine or number 25 white mercerized cotton on any cotton or linen fabric. The bow-knots and roses may be done in outline and seeding or over-and-over stitch and seeding, while the larger leaves may be worked in long-and-short or solid embroidery and the flowers, dots and small leaves in either solid or eyelet work.

Pattern 7715, for cutting the blouse, and transfer pattern 14664 can be supplied to readers on receipt of price, 15 cents each.

Some Cookery Suggestions

JUST A FEW TURNIPS.

LUNCHEON MENU.
Cheese Fondu.
Baked Potatoes.
Fried Turnips.
Crackers.
Cheese.
Jam.
Tea.

TURNIPS should be prepared in the following ways to make them popular in families that find turnips cooked in the ordinary ways insipid:

Fried Turnips.—Pare and cut turnips in half inch slices, soak for twenty minutes in cold water. Drain and parboil them for twenty minutes, drain again and wipe dry. Salt, pepper and dip in corn meal or flour and fry in bacon fat or other shortening.

A Novel Way.

Stewed Sugared Turnips.—Take turnips of equal size, put them into a saucepan with a lump of butter and fry till well browned. Sprinkle powdered sugar over them, season with a little salt, pour in about a teacupful of stock according to the number of turnips. Place the cover on the saucepan and let it simmer till they are tender. Serve on a hot dish.

Turnips With Tarragon Sauce.—Take some turnips, scrape, wash and trim them and boil them. Then serve them with a sauce made as follows: Prepare half a cupful of melted butter sauce, using milk and no water; season it add a teaspoonful of finely minced dried tarragon and bring it to boiling point. Have ready the yolk of an egg beaten up with a large teaspoonful of lemon juice, stir this quickly into the sauce and remove it at once from the stove, and then add half a tablespoonful of fresh butter and pour the sauce over the turnips.

Served With Boiled Meats.

Turnips and Potatoes.—Take two good sized turnips, pare and cut into slices, drop into an uncovered vessel of boiling unsalted water and cook just below the boiling point until transparent. Have ready boiled the same bulk of Irish potatoes. Drain the turnip slices in a colander, let the potatoes dry off, then add them to the turnip and press both through into a hot dry dish. Add half a tablespoonful of butter, half a teaspoonful of salt, a dusting of white pepper and paprika. Beat until light, then add two tablespoonfuls of hot milk or four tablespoonfuls of reheated cream sauce or thick cream soup of any kind. Beat and pile in a small hot dish. Send at once to the table. Use a dish without a cover.

In the Trunk Were Lovely Dresses.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

Kay and the Finding of The Trunk.

"KATHLEEN, or Kay, as she was always called for short, lived by the ocean in a little fishing village," said daddy. "She used to watch the men fishing all day and hauling their nets in at night. And she would watch her mother cook the fish for their meals, for they practically lived on it.

"There were no little girls of Kay's age, so she played most of the time all alone, except sometimes the old men, when they felt tired of fishing, would let the younger ones finish the day's work and would tell Kay stories.

"Sometimes, too, Kay would help her mother hook mats, although her little fingers were almost too chubby and fat to do much of it."

"What is 'hooking mats?'" inquired Evelyn.

"In some coast villages," said daddy, "the women save all the bits of rags and ribbons they have, and they sew them together with a hook needle, pulling them into shapes of rosebuds.

"But for the most part Kay was very much by herself. One morning she was up very early, and she thought she'd go down by the beach to see the nets thrown out into the water. It was not far from her home, but before she got there she heard her daddy call to her:

"'Little Kay, we've a surprise for you today.'

"Kay ran along, and what do you suppose she saw?"

"A big fish," suggested Jack.

"No; a big fish wouldn't have been such a surprise for Kay. It was a trunk that had been washed ashore and had probably fallen off one of the big boats passing by.

"In the trunk were lots and lots of lovely dresses—a pink dress, a yellow satin dress, a green velvet coat, a hat with soft, big plumes on it, and, oh, so many lovely things! Kay was breathless for a moment, she was so excited—all those gorgeous things for a little girl who had never seen anything but fishing nets and such things.

"'Is it for me?' cried Kay.

"'Yes; all for you,' said her daddy. 'Nobody else wants these things here in our fishing village, and you can have them to play with.'

"'Oh, how marvelous!' said Kay. 'I'll never be lonely now. I can play I'm a queen when I wear that yellow satin dress and the velvet coat, and I'll pretend that the fishes are my subjects, and I can play I'm a beautiful lady going to a ball when I wear the pink dress.'

"She jumped around and around with joy, crying: 'Oh, what a fine time I'll have dressing up! Oh, such fun!'"

Home Care of the Nails.

A home manicuring outfit is a great convenience. It should contain two or three smooth, nicely polished sticks, a pair of small, curved, sharp pointed scissors, a couple of emery boards, a nailbrush (not too stiff), a slender, flexible file of hard steel; a box of any guaranteed nail polish, a soft buffer and a small bottle of peroxide of hydrogen, with a bit of lemon and a fine toilet pumice stone. A soap with olive oil in it will be found the best, and a jar of plain cold cream should be provided.

If the nails have been neglected and seem clogged with dirt and grime fill them with cold cream, rubbing it in well; then with a piece of fine old linen remove the dirt from one set with the nails of the other hand, never with an instrument of steel.

A little white vaseline should be on hand also, as it heals and helps to prevent brittleness. After the soaking rub in the vaseline well, then use the brush and clean suds, warm, but not hot. The nails are then ready for the careful looking over to rid them of any ragged bits of flesh clinging to the sides and base. The stick should be dipped into the peroxide and passed around the nails as well as under. This helps to whiten and cleanse them. If there are callous places use the toilet pumice with the soapy water, rinsing well afterward.

Stains may require the juice of a lemon, but cold cream should be applied after to prevent the roughness that would otherwise be caused by the acid, and great care must be taken not to cut the skin around the base, or it will remain ragged, as it is really a "selvage."

Filing Finger Nails.

Before beginning the home manicuring the file, which should be a thin flexible one, should be used. The nails are then in a condition to stand this, as after the soaking they will be too soft.

They should never be allowed to grow too far beyond the tip of the finger. Long, pointed nails are entirely out of style, if they were ever in, as a woman does not want the talons of the Chinaman at the ends of her pretty fingers.

So, in the filing, rub them down to pass just a trifle beyond the finger itself, rounding them nicely, and do not file the sides down too closely, as the natural support is then withdrawn, and this causes hangnails.

Often a nail will persistently break or show a flaw in the same place for years. As the new nail grows the split or crack seems to come naturally, and the only cure is to watch that nail, using the emery board to smooth off the first sign of the flaw.

Ridged Nails.

The little emery boards should be used daily to remove any roughened edges from the nails, and it is advisable to use these every day instead of the steel file. Where the nails are scaly and ridged it shows an excess of acid in the blood. Those afflicted with rheumatism often find their nails ridged as they grow and the ends will break off in fine scales. Some treatment for the disease itself should be used, and, in addition, a small piece of wash leather, dipped into powdered pumice stone, will make the nails fairly smooth, but there should also be used a little thick gelatin. Dip each nail in this at night, wrap the fingers separately in old linen and let it remain all night. Dip each into warm water next morning. This helps greatly in preventing and curing the scaliness.

Simple Nail Powder.

A good nail powder is made of a quarter ounce of talcum powder, boric acid and starch, also powdered very fine. Add a few drops of carmine tincture. Mix the powders and add the tincture. Pass the whole through a fine sieve three times, forcing out all lumps. Coat the nails with a very small bit, rubbing it in well with the fingers; then use the buffer lightly. If too much is applied it should be rinsed off, the nails carefully wiped dry and then the buffer used, finishing by rubbing the nails of one hand on the palm of the other, a natural polisher.

Too Much Manicuring.

When the finger nails are constantly breaking and seem soft and brittle there is either something wrong in the general health or they are improperly cared for. Many women in the effort to have nice nails scrub and file and polish all the health out of them, making them frail and too thin. Usually too much manicuring does the harm, so it is just as well to let them alone once in awhile, permitting them to thicken and harden, so they will stand the ordinary wear and tear of daily use.

White Spots on Nails.

When white spots appear on the nails they show a bruised condition, although the cause may not be recalled, and they also denote a highly nervous condition of the system. Melt a half ounce of myrrh and refined pitch and spread over the nails at night, wearing glove fingers. In the morning apply olive oil to remove this, and use almond meal in place of soap for the hands.

Points for Mothers

Candy For the Children.

Every child likes an occasional sweet, and an occasional sweet in the way of dessert is not only not harmful, but good, for the little one. The sweet should be eaten immediately after the meal; hence it can best be served as a part of the dessert.

The teeth should be cleaned, of course, after every meal, and incidentally the child who once forms the habit of brushing its teeth regularly will be uncomfortable when it forgets to do so. The teeth should always be thoroughly washed after eating sweets of any kind.

Treats Between Meals.

If candy is indulged in between meals the mouth and teeth should be immediately washed. Of course candy should not often be indulged in between meals, but a little milk chocolate eaten at a specified time between meals is not so harmful when the teeth are washed as when they are not washed, for the sugar remaining in the mouth forms an acid which causes the enamel of the teeth to decay and so leads to serious cavities.

Chocolate Wholesome.

Milk chocolate is probably the most wholesome sweet for children. It possesses real nutritive value and so should be considered a part of the child's food; hence it should be given with meals to do the most good as a dessert.

Candied Fruit.

Candied fruit is wholesome. It can be made at home without much trouble, but it can be bought in good quality of any reliable dealer. Candied fruit peel—lemon, orange and grapefruit—is difficult of digestion and should not be confused with candied fruit when planning a treat for children.

Old Time Candy.

Barley sugar is not injurious. It possesses the disadvantage of molasses candy—it must be held a long time in the mouth in order to be dissolved. But if a stick of barley sugar flavored with some pure fruit juice be given after dessert no ill results will be produced.

Molasses Candy.

Molasses candy may be given to children as a part of dessert. It should never be given between meals. It is wholesome, to be sure, but it is necessary to keep it in the mouth for a long time, and during that time it causes the digestive juices to flow unnaturally; hence it should only be eaten at meal time.

Correcting Knockknee.

In cases of knockknee in young children there is weakness of the ligaments and muscles connected with the knee joint. To correct this give the child two baths a day, with sea salt in the water. After the baths massage the knees for ten minutes with a little cocoanut oil. He should take at least two pints of milk per day. Mix it in this way: Milk, twelve tablespoonfuls; water, two tablespoonfuls; limewater, one tablespoonful; cream, one and a half teaspoonfuls; sugar of milk, one teaspoonful. This makes eight ounces. The limewater will strengthen the bone. Give the little boy as much fresh air, light and sunshine as he can possibly get.

Sugar Sifter For the Kiddies.

Seventy-five cents is the price of a sugar sifter that would surely bring joy to the heart of any child. The sifter is no more than a porcelain or china dog, with holes in the top of his head, from which sugar sifts. The dog, an overgrown, sprawling puppy, from appearance, looks at the beholder with a ridiculous grin on his china features that brings a smile ever to a grownup. Children appreciate quaint things of this sort and when they are purchased for the nursery table the little ones try to take care of them. The ordinary nursery dishes are too often carelessly handled.

Toy For Baby.

Tumbling dolls in the shape of small baby heads of indestructible character, fastened in roly poly little balls of pink and white silk, are sold. They are ideal gifts for the small baby, for they can neither be destroyed nor inflict hurt of any sort, they are so soft and rounded. When they are knocked over they cheerfully right themselves, and so would bring comfort to both baby and nurse.

Baby's Food.

The following is recommended by one authority as a good way to prepare a six-months-old baby's food: Milk, seven tablespoonfuls; water, three tablespoonfuls; limewater, one tablespoonful; cream, one teaspoonful; sugar of milk, one and a half teaspoonfuls. This makes five and a half ounces and is sufficient for a meal. Baby should be fed every three hours.

Regulating Diet.

To prevent the occasional little attacks of sickness which sometimes come to little folks with weak stomachs after meals train the child to sit still for ten minutes after each meal, and half an hour before give him or her as much bicarbonate of soda as you can hold on a dime in a spoonful of water. Care should be taken to regulate such a child's diet.

CHAPTER XXVI.

The Usual Thing.

MR. MAGEE postponed the protest on the tip of his tongue, and, climbing the gloomy stairs that newspapers always affect, they came into the city room of the Star. Though the paper had been long on the street, the excitement of the greatest coup of years still lingered in the place. Magee saw the deferential smiles that greeted the girl and watched her as she made her way to the city editor's desk. In a moment she was back at his side.

"I've got my assignment," she smiled ruefully. They descended to the street. "It's wonderful," she went on, "how fast a city editor can be with any one who pulls off a good story. The job I've got now reminds me of the experience of an old New York reporter who used to work on the Star."

With difficulty they threaded their way through the crowd and moved along beside the green decked windows.

"He was the first man sent out by his paper on Park row on the Spanish war assignment," she went on, "and "Take care of me," she whispered. "I—I love you so!"

he behaved rather brilliantly, I believe. Well, he came back after the fight was over, all puffed up and important, and they told him the city editor wanted him. 'They're going to send me to the Philippines,' he told me he thought as he went into the presence. When the city editor ordered him to rush down to a two alarm fire in Houston street he nearly collapsed. I know how he felt. I feel that way now."

"What was it, a one alarm fire?" asked Magee.

"No," she replied, "a sweet little story about the Christmas toys. I've done it to death every Christmas for three years. Oh, well, I can do it again. But it'll have to wait until after Mrs. Norton's lunch."

She led him into a street where every house was like its neighbor, even to the "Rooms" sign in the windows, and up the steps of one she could have recognized only by counting from the corner. They entered the murky and stereotyped atmosphere of a boarding house hallway, with its inevitable hatrack and the uncollected letters of the homeless on a table. Mrs. Norton came breezily forth to meet them.

"Well, Mr. Magee," she said, "I certainly am glad you've came. I'm busy on that lunch now. Dearie, show him into the parlor to wait."

Mr. Magee was shown in. That rooming house parlor seemed to moan dismally as it received him.

On an easel was the sad portrait of a gentleman, undoubtedly the late lamented Norton. His uninteresting nose appeared to be turned up at the constant odor of cookery in which it dwelt.

Mr. Magee stared round the room and smiled. Was the romance of reality never to resemble the romance of his dreams? Where were the dim lights, where the distant waltz, where the magic of moonlight amid which he was some day to have told a beautiful girl of his love? Hardly in Mrs. Norton's parlor.

She came and stood in the doorway. Hatless, coatless, smiling, she flooded the place with her beauty. Mr. Magee looked at the flabby angels on the wall, expecting them to hide their faces in shame. But no! They still rode brazenly their unstable clouds.

"Come in!" he cried. "Don't leave me alone here again, please. And, tell me, is this the gentleman who took the contract for making Mrs. Norton happy?"

"I—I can't come in," she said, blushing. She seemed to wish to avoid him. "Yes, that is Mr. Norton." She came nearer the easel and smiled at the late lamented's tonsorial crown. "I must leave you—just a moment"—

"You're never going to leave me again," he cried. "Don't you know that? I thought you knew. You're mine. I love you. I love you. It's all I can say, my dearest. Look at me—look at me, please."

"It has happened so quickly," she murmured. "Things can't be true when they—happen so quickly."

"A woman's logic," said Mr. Magee. "It has happened. My beautiful girl! Look at me."

And then—she looked. Trembling, flushed, half frightened, half exultant, she lifted her eyes to his.

"My little girl!" he cried down at her.

A moment longer she held off and then limply she surrendered. And Billy Magee held her close in his arms.

"Take care of me," she whispered. "I—I love you so!" Her arm went timidly about his shoulders. "Do you want to know my name? It's Mary"—

Mary what? The answer was seemingly of no importance, for Mr. Magee's lips were on hers, crushing the word at its birth.

So they stood, amid Mrs. Norton's gloomy objects of art. And presently she asked:

"How about the book, dear?"

But Mr. Magee had forgot.

"What book?" he asked.

"The novel you went to Baldpate to write. Don't you remember, dearest—no melodrama, no wild chase, no—love?"

"Why"— Mr. Magee paused for a moment in the joy of his discovery. Then he came back to the greater joy in his arms.

"Why, darling," he explained gently, "this is it."

THE END.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

No. 8206 shows one of those smart little coats that will be so much worn a little later in the season. They are suited to almost any suiting material, wool or cotton and are easily and quickly made.

This model shows a separate vest which may be used or omitted as preferred.

If this coat were made up in one of the new cotton duvetyns or a dark serge it would be very effective to have the vest of a rather bright silk or tapestry. Collar and cuffs may also be of the figured silk or may be plain.

This model can be made in size 36 with 1¾ yards of 42 inch material.

The pattern is cut in 5 sizes: 34 to 42.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to give right size, measuring over the fullest part of the bust for dimensions.

THE PLAINFIELD THEATRE

Burr Caruth who, as Matthew Lamson in "The Clever Woman," which comes to the Plainfield theatre, tomorrow afternoon and evening, plays the part of the rich westerner who has ambitions for the marriage of his son to a society "fluff" and who is so successfully outgeneraled by his wife (May Robson) is in real life a New England farmer. He owns 210 acres in the green mountains of Vermont, about 175 miles from Boston. He spends his time away from the footlights leading the simple life, and says that when his actor days are over he intends to be once more a plain farmer. However, despite nearly a generation on the stage, Mr. Caruth makes haste to assure that he purposes to make farming but an avocation for many years to come. Six feet tall with iron grey hair, massive face and shaggy brows, Mr. Caruth needs no make-up to play the part of the character commonly regarded as a personification of the New England farmer, a character which wins from all visitors a large portion of praise for the men one sees in old New England.

Among book plays "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," which returns to the Plainfield theatre, Thursday, March 5, seems to have the most superabundant vitality. From the first the dramatization of Mrs. Rice's two popular stories, "Mrs. Wiggs" and "Lovey Mary," met with a degree of public favor more enthusiastic if anything than that awarded those "best selling novels" of low life in mean streets. In "Mrs. Wiggs" herself, Miss Hazy, Lovey Mary and Mr. Stubbins, the play presents four salient types, each one of which remains firmly fixed in the most pleasant recollections of the playgoer. Strong as the roles, the play has been even more richly cast. There are twenty character parts and Cuby, the "fit horse," is prominent though a little broken in the wind. "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" comes to this city from a triumphant tour on which it was hailed as the American genre play par excellence. Mrs. Flexner, the dramatist, has added some new comedy which has improved with travel, despite its original excellence. The play will be presented here under the management of the United Play Company.

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat if You Feel Backachy or Have Bladder Trouble.

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.—Adv.

JUDGE IS ACCUSED BEFORE PRESIDENT

Banker Makes Serious Charges Against Jurist.

Washington, Feb. 27.—Charges of a serious nature were filed with President Wilson against Supreme Court Justice Daniel Thew Wright of the District of Columbia. The charges were made by Wade Cooper, president of the Union Savings bank and the United States Savings bank of this city. Mr. Cooper asked for an investigation with a view to the removal of Justice Wright from the bench.

Justice Wright is the judge who sat in the case against Samuel Gompers and the other labor union leaders and sentenced them to jail because of contempt of court in the well known Buck's stove and range case.

The banker filed with the president a long series of charges against the justice, giving names and details. He accuses Justice Wright of many serious offenses and characterizes his conduct as "a disgrace to the judiciary."

The bank president complains that Justice Wright has accepted favors from attorneys practicing before him; that the counsel for the Washington Electric Railway company was indorsed on his notes when appearing before him in the trial of cases; that he permitted his notes for $1,500 to be presented to an attorney for discount at or about the time he had threatened to have this attorney's conduct investigated by the grand jury.

There is a long string of other charges against Judge Wright, some of which are of a moral character and involve the personal side of his life. The banker contends that Judge Wright has contracted various bills and refuses to pay them and that his creditors are helpless and afraid to sue him.

The charges are of such a direct, serious character that President Wilson probably will be obliged to take cognizance of them. Justice Wright's friends contend that Cooper has brought these charges as a matter of spite because he had lost a case before Judge Wright.

GROUNDHOG TIES UP CENTRAL

Crawls Into Conduit and Short Circuits Tarrytown Signals.

Tarrytown, N. Y., Feb. 27.—The New York Central railroad was tied up by a groundhog. The little fellow burrowed into a conduit at the main crossing, short circuiting all signal wires. The trouble was first noticed by the motorman of a northbound electric train when the signal above the Wildey street crossing flopped up and down alternating between danger and clear. The gateman at the crossing looked into the pipe and saw the groundhog.

A fire was started to smoke out the animal. The towerman, seeing smoke, thought the crossing was on fire and stopped all northbound trains.

The groundhog finally capitulated, and normal traffic was resumed.

RESUME N. H. CONFERENCE.

Expect Speedy Adjustment In Separation Proceedings.

Washington, Feb. 27.—Negotiations between President Howard Elliott and attorneys representing the New Haven railroad with department of justice special counsel looking toward a complete separation of the New Haven and the Boston and Maine railroads were resumed.

An extended conference between Elliott and Attorney General McReynolds early in the day indicated a speedy adjustment of the differences which last week preceded the abrupt departure of Governor Walsh of Massachusetts, who had been a party to the discussion. President Elliott was accompanied by Morefield Storey, John W. H. Crim and W. H. Rowland.

BECKER RETURNS; READY FOR TRIAL

Whitman Plans to Move Case In April.

EX-POLICEMAN IN TOMBS.

Greets Wife For the First Time—Both Wept as They Embraced Each Other. Gunmen Must Pay the Death Penalty on April 13.

New York, Feb. 27.—Former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker returned to the Tombs from the death house at Sing Sing to await a new trial.

The heavy doors of the Tombs closed on him again after an absence of fourteen months and seventeen days. In a very few minutes the formalities had been complied with between the sheriff and Warden John J. Hanley and Becker was in cell No. 117, on the first tier, Leonard street side, three cells distant from the one he occupied from July 29 to Dec. 12, 1912.

District Attorney Whitman will himself conduct the prosecution of Charles Becker when Becker is again brought to trial, which will be in the second week of April, according to the present plan.

Since he heard the news that the court of appeals had granted him a new trial this was the moment for Becker that he had most eagerly awaited. The thought of it, together with the joy of his victory, had made him pass a restless night, and he made feverish inquiries through the keepers whether they had heard anything of the time of his wife's expected arrival.

Mrs. Becker went to Ossining with her brother, John Lynch, who carried a large suit case.

"Charley's clothes are in that," said Mrs. Becker, pointing to the suit case as she alighted from the train. "He is going to wear them when I take him back to New York with me."

Mrs. Becker jumped into a sleigh and was driven rapidly to the prison. On the way she said that she was feeling well.

Happy, Despite Other Griefs.

"I have had a lot of trouble," she said quietly. "But nevertheless this is the happiest day of my life."

"I am sorry to see,' Mrs. Becker continued, "that an effort is being made to create the same unfavorable atmosphere that surrounded my husband's case at the time of his first trial. However, we are sure that if he has a second trial he will get fair treatment. We do not fear any graft charges.

"I had been teaching school up to the time my mother died. I expect to go back to teaching next week."

Mrs. Becker hurried through the main entrance of the prison and soon was in the warden's office. She waited there tremulously while a keeper was sent to tell Becker that his wife awaited him. Then Mrs. Becker went to the counsel room and in a few minutes she and her husband were together.

A deputy warden was the only other person in the room where Becker and his wife met. At the sight of her, the deputy said later, Becker rushed over and took her in his arms, showering her with endearments. Both were in tears. The deputy told inquirers later that the conversation between husband and wife was carried on in such an excited, hysterical fashion that he could hardly remember what was said.

Becker, exultant over the decision of the court of appeals, which reversed his conviction for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, declared in his cell in the death house that if District Attorney Whitman intended to move for a new trial the sooner it came the better. He said that he was eager to go on the stand himself and added that he was prevented from telling his story before Justice Goff by the advice of counsel. When he was told that Justice Seabury had been spoken of as the judge likely to hear his case, should he be tried again, he seemed glad. "Justice Seabury will give me a square deal," he declared.

Before leaving Becker was heard exhorting the gunmen, who had been told that the court of appeals had set April 13 as the day on which they must go to the electric chair. Of the four the nearest to Becker is "Gyp the Blood."

"Take this from me, Gyp," said Becker to the gunman, "and pass it along. I hope you won't get shocked to death, and I don't think you will. I know you fellows didn't do Rosenthal. You were just in bad like I was. Keep a stiff upper lip."

DR. WILEY HAS ANOTHER HEIR

Former Chief Chemist Is Proud Papa Again.

Washington, Feb. 27.—Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, former chief chemist, was a proud papa again. John Preston Wiley arrived Thursday. He is a ten pound youngster, and Dr. Wiley, plain matter of fact scientist that he is, couldn't help telling his friends that he was "the greatest baby in the world," second only to Harvey W. Wiley, Jr., who was born May 16, 1912.

Mrs. Wiley and the doctor, who is seventy years old, were married in 1911.

JACK LONDON, AUTHOR OF

The Abysmal Brute

Life among two fisted men is Jack London's text, and he sticks to it.

He tells of existence and of men as he has found them—from the Bering sea to the south sea islands.

The experiences of his characters have been his own. That is what makes them real men.

Add to his contact with life and his capacity of keeping vivid impressions of it a power to make his readers feel with him and you catch hold of the secret of his great power over his readers.

Few living men equal London in "getting down to facts." He has the ability of making the word fit the scene, of telling a story in a phrase, of revealing a life in a chapter.

When you finish a London story you have lived with the characters. They are not men and women of straw, set up to fill out an idle hour.

They are living, breathing, feeling, suffering, triumphant human beings.

Jack London is only thirty-eight years old. In twenty years he has crowded more real life than most men do in a long lifetime.

He left college to go to the Klondike, and his farewell to book schools was permanent. Since then he has learned his lessons before the mast, in Japan, seal hunting in the arctic, tramping through the United States and Canada and as a war correspondent in the Russo-Japanese war.

Thousands of men and women have heard him lecture and have felt as they heard his strong, sincere voice that they were listening to a real man among men.

In "The Abysmal Brute" he has chosen a novel theme and handled it with an art that holds the reader's interest from first word to "finis."

This Newspaper Has Succeeded In Securing the Serial Rights of Jack London's New Story, and It Will Be Published Soon

BENTON CASE AT AN ACUTE STAGE

Convinced Villa Will Not Surrender Body.

EMBASSY GUARD IS DENIED

Huerta Refuses to Allow Marines to Land to Protect United States Legation—Wilson Is Standing Firmly on His Original Mexican Policy.

Washington, Feb. 27.—A week has now passed since the death of Benton, the British rancher, was first learned, and still the efforts by this government to ascertain the truth as to the killing are absolutely futile. At every turn the United States has been balked by the stubborn silence and contradictory statements of Villa and his subordinates.

For the past forty-eight hours not an inch of progress has been made, and with Great Britain still courteously insistent the situation remains unchanged except for its increased tensions.

In the meantime sentiment in congress and throughout the country is obviously becoming aroused. This has been indicated by the attacks on the president on the floor of congress within the last two days and especially by a development last night.

Mexico City, Feb. 27.—Provisional President Huerta refused permission to the United States government to send 2,000 American marines as a guard for the legation here. This information came direct from General Huerta himself.

General Huerta says Washington asked him to agree to the dispatch, in addition to the Americans, of 1,000 more men made up of Germans, English and French. To all of this he returned a negative reply on the ground that there was no need for such precautions.

Wilson Is Hopeful.

Washington, Feb. 27.—President Wilson is standing firmly on his original Mexican policy. He is hopeful that the threatened international complications growing out of the developments of the past few days will be cleared. While not trying to minimize the situation growing out of the killing of Benton, the president explained to callers that much had been printed about the matter which was untrue.

England, he explained, had been eminently fair to the United States. It had made no arbitrary demands. It had asked that the cause of and circumstances attending Benton's death be fully determined. The president explained to his callers that the American consular representatives were slowly eliminating many exciting rumors and he hoped that the entire matter would be cleared up within forty-eight hours.

The president frankly admitted that this government does not know where Benton is buried or even if he is buried at all.

The state department is unable to get into satisfactory communication with either Carranza or Villa. As a result, the president explained, no reply had yet been received to this government's request that it be permitted to send a medical expert to view Benton's body. Consul Letcher at Chihuahua City is still trying to get a satisfactory answer from Villa, but so far has failed. No word at all has been received from Carranza since Benton was first arrested.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 27.—Virtually positive proof that Gustav Bauch is not a prisoner in Juarez was secured when Federico Gonzales Garza, legal adviser to Colonel Avila, the garrison commander, conducted a party of American newspaper men through the municipal jail and all the cuartels where prisoners might be held. The whereabouts of Bauch, dead or alive, is still unknown, but the fact is definitely established that he is not a prisoner in Juarez.

$100,000 FIRE IN JAIL.

Blaze Destroys Hospital Annex of Canadian Penitentiary.

Montreal, Que., Feb. 27.—The hospital annex of St. Vincent de Paul's penitentiary was destroyed and the surgical department considerably damaged by fire.

Three hundred and fifty prisoners were all moved safely to the main building, and there was no loss of life, though at one time it was believed a number of inmates had been cut off from rescue.

The penitentiary is fifteen miles from this city. The estimated loss is $100,000.

SEEKS BREMNER'S SEAT IN CONGRESS

Senator Hughes' Secretary Announces Candidacy.

OTHERS ALSO AFTER PLACE

James O'Byrne Announces Self After A. L. Pettersen, Who Had Been Approved at Washington, Declared Himself Out of Race—Republicans and Progressives Fail to Unite on One.

Paterson, N. J., Feb 27.—James O'Byrne, private secretary to United States Senator William Hughes, announced his candidacy for the seat in congress made vacant by the death on Feb. 5 of Representative Robert G. Bremner of Passaic. Mr. O'Byrne announced himself after Anton L. Pettersen, who had been approved by the Democratic leaders of the county and also those at Washington, declared himself out of the race. Mr. O'Byrne became Senator Hughes' secretary when the latter was elected congressman, ten years ago, and has been with him ever since.

Walter Carrington Cabell, judge of the Passaic city district court, who was appointed to that office by President Wilson when the latter was governor of New Jersey, is also a Democratic candidate. As yet the leaders here have not decided which to indorse. There probably will be half a dozen other candidates when the last of the petitions are filed in the county clerk's office today.

Efforts on the part of the Republicans and Colby Progressives to unite on a candidate have proved futile so far. Nearly a dozen Republicans have petitions out, among them Dow H. Drukker, former director of the Passaic county board of freeholders; Assemblyman George H. Dalrymple and Major Edward Thomas Moore of Passaic, John M. Ward, Harry W. Gledhill, former Assemblyman Leonard Piknart, Albin Smith of Paterson and William J. Barbour of Haledon. Thomas Foxhall of Passaic filed his petition.

The election will cost the county $25,000, and the term of the candidate will expire on March 4, 1915. At the general election in November another congressman will be named to fill the regular term.

MYSTERY IN MAN'S DEATH.

Either Fell Off Train or Shot Himself First.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 27.—Mystery surrounds the death of a man who fell from an eastbound train on the Lackawanna railroad on the Harrison meadows. It was first supposed that he was killed by a fall from the cars. Later it was claimed that the man shot himself before he toppled to the track.

The victim got aboard the train at Morristown. He apparently was a foreigner, about forty years old. After the train left the station at Harrison the man walked to the platform of one of the cars. He apparently seated himself on the steps.

Conductor John Friery of South Orange was taking up the tickets when he heard what he believes to have been a revolver shot. He ran to the platform where the foreigner was sitting and saw him roll off. The train was stopped, but when the man was picked up he was almost lifeless. Before medical help could arrive the man was dead.

BIG JERSEY CITY STORE QUITS

Receiver For Furst Company Gives Up Attempt to Continue Business.

Jersey City, N. J., Feb. 27.—The Furst company of this city, which conducts the biggest department store in town, will close tonight. It will not open again except for a quick sale to dispose of the $100,000 stock, unless the court of chancery so directs.

Prosecutor Robert S. Hudspeth was appointed receiver two weeks ago. He made an effort to continue the business, but found it was losing money, so he deemed it wiser to shut down entirely. The company, it is thought, will be able to pay dollar for dollar.

Joseph E. Bernstein of this city, who served on President Wilson's campaign committee, is president of the corporation. The other two stockholders are Abram Z. Benedict and Meyer Lambert of New York.

AGED WOMAN SAVED IN FIRE.

Two Men Raise Ladders and Carry Her Out Unconscious.

East Rutherford, N. J., Feb. 27.—While a score of residents and the passengers of a trolley car cheered Otto Kellerman and Joseph Einstein raised a ladder to the second story of the burning frame building at 252-258 Park avenue and carried Mrs. Harriet Drummond, sixty years old, who was unconscious from smoke, to the street, where she was revived by a physician.

The fire made four families homeless and wrecked the cigar and confectionery store of David Taylor and Einstein's shoe store. The damage was $10,000.

Mrs. Drummond, who is an invalid, was lighting an oil stove, which exploded and set fire to the kitchen. The flames spread so rapidly as to cut off her escape.

BEAUTY OF FABRICS THE CHARM OF GOWNS

MORE puzzling than the choice of a new style for Spring dresses and suits will be the choice of materials among the extraordinary variety of fabrics and weaves in silks, woolens and cottons. Novelty has been the effort of the producers, whose looms, as if by magic, have turned out the most fascinating things imaginable. Staple serges, poplins, ratines, and mixed suitings vie with checks, stripes and broches, changeable taffetas, bengalines, and exquisite cottons, such as duvetyn, frizzé, velours, etc., that resemble similar weaves of winter goods.

The idea of artistic beauty, as regards dress, which couturiers have thrust upon us until we are almost persuaded that it exists in shapeless garments, calls for such supple textures as these mentioned, to satisfy the styles of curiously draped and much ruffled dresses. The slender girl will revel in full flounces such as shown on the model in the upper left corner of this page. Her sisters, less svelte, will find the double tunic of the lower figure (8100) equally fashionable and becoming. It remains for the stouter woman to choose graceful flowing drapery and the long lines of a design like that illustrated in the evening gown of peacock blue velvet brocade and crêpe de Chine (8215). This is an admirable style for combining two materials, plain satin or silk being used for the three-piece underskirt, and brocade or some other novelty for the twopiece tunic crossing at the waistline. Other smart models show bretelles similar to those of this costume which carries the skirt coloring over the lace blouse. It suggests a way of combining old and new materials for the sake of wise as well as fashionable economy.

Paris designers are sending over some gowns, remarkably simple in the making. Such is the model on the lower right side of the page (8100). This was reproduced because it is a type which can easily be made with enviable success, when using bordered material. It is white chiffon cloth with printed Persian bands in Oriental colorings; and draped over brown satin meteor. The ever-present crushed girdle gives the finishing touch.

Ruffles you must have, and the sooner the better to be on the crest of this fashion wave. As introduced on the novel magpie model (8069) they are straight and full-edged with black satin bands, and placed diagonally at the bottom of a short tunic, gathered in pannier effect. Like most dancing frocks and afternoon dresses, this has a simple kimono blouse ornamented with bands of silk. Notice the flowing, or angel sleeves, with a jet tassel on each, matching the front dangle. The narrow foundation skirt is of black satin. By the way, the model displays a novelty bracelet of black ribbon-velvet with a diamond studded rosette.

From new and interesting fashion disclosures at Southern resorts, one dress has been picked out and illustrated (8211) because it is a practical design which will lead next summer. It is a beach suit of white serge with a black hair-line stripe. One feature is the latest shaped tunic, the material cut crosswise, high in front, with fullness below the hips, and directed downward in a cascade ending in two points behind. Black velvet buttons in clusters of three each are the trimming. The drop-shoulder surplice blouse has a wired frill collar and sleeve ends of white chiffon with colored embroidery edge.

Plain serge, ratine and silk dresses are being made after this popular model. To reproduce it as shown, would not cost more than $8 exclusive of the making.

Each pattern on this page is 15 cents.

OFTEN a dainty bit of handwork will give an otherwise simple frock an air of individuality, and set it apart from commonplace clothing. Hand embroidery costs practically nothing, when done at home, except the expenditure of time, yet is always the mark of an exclusive gown. A little girl's frock of such inexpensive material as chambray, cotton poplin, cotton ratine or albatross, may be made in the plainest way, but if it is finished with a dainty collar of batiste or linen, embroidered with a design like that of the set shown, it will have a distinctive air. This collar is also appropriate for an older sister's dress of cotton crêpe or serge.

In planning Spring clothes you will find that you can save many a dollar by using handwork for trimming. The Embroidery Book, which illustrates over five hundred designs for embroideries of all kinds, will suggest how to make smart, inexpensive decorations for dresses, waists and children's clothes. The transfer pattern for the collar shown, and The Embroidery Book will be sent for eight cents.

Embroidered Collar and Cuff Set

Patterns for designs shown on this page can be obtained from any agency selling LADIES' HOME JOURNAL PATTERNS

NEWER than the outstanding Medici collar, is the Chinese one, appearing in a great variety of guises, for dresses, separate blouses and even on some jackets of fancy suits. Though known by various other names, the neck finishing device is merely a straight lengthwise band of material, like a piece of ribbon, about five or six inches wide, folded lengthwise in the middle, and having both edges sewn around the neck of the bodice, so that it stands up. Some speak of it as the "horse" collar. Necks on which it appears are inclined to be cut out at the sides, and a little higher at the throat, in front.

There has been considerable call, in city shops, for silk Tango bloomers, extending to the ankle. They are shirred on an elastic band at the knee, and ankle, and have four satin bows on either leg between the knee and the ankle. Val lace ruffles, and small rhinestone buckles are the finish at the extremities.

Novelty sashes in black and colored ribbons, which are looped once at the waistline, in the front, have a pocket in either end, decorated with hand embroidery and sometimes with beads. These are one of many Spring accessories to embellish plain frocks, and to make them appear different for different occasions.

Dutch suits in two colors of linen combined, are a late novelty for little boys' wear in warm weather. The trousers are high waisted, of the bright colored ramie, such as rose, blue, green, or tan; and the blouse of white or ecru, with collar and cuffs of the trousers material.

Golfine is the name of a very beautiful new cotton material, having a raised ratine rib, with a cut line or gauze stripe of self color. It comes in the new rose, green, bright blue, orange and ochre colors; and will be used extensively for Summer sports coats. It ranges in quality and kind from $2.50 to $5 per yard.

"The New Bracelet Glove" is attracting notice in metropolitan shops. It is of tan kid, cut similar to a gauntlet, with a strap about 3½ inches above the wrist, in effect like a bracelet, and fastened with two snaps.

Small hats of black taffetas or moiré silk with a "halo" of black tulle, and extremely tall, close turbans of the same materials with unstanding plaited ruchings are the noticeable between-seasons hats. They are dressy, and comfortable, and especially good for windy March days.

Household Hints

EPICURES consider a salad of alligator pears one of the most delicious of all fruit salads. In the tempting dish of the picture, grapefruit pulp is mixed with the pear and served on chicory in the shell of the grapefruit. The delicate flavor is afforded by marinading the fruits with white wine, and by a French dressing in which lemon juice is substituted for vinegar. Lettuce shredded with scissors will make a "bed" for the contents of the grapefruit if chicory is not available.

Chestnut Salad

Housewives who aim to have a varied bill of fare are only just beginning to discover the value of French chestnuts for the home table. They too, will increase the list of salads, suitable to serve with a hearty dinner, or as a luncheon course.

Boil the chestnuts, peal off the skins and chop the meats, either with a chopping knife, or by running them through a cutter set for large pieces. Chop equal quantities of tart apples and celery; mix them all together, and send them to the table on crisp leaves of lettuce, with mayonnaise.

Stuff green peppers with cream cheese and chopped walnut or pecan nuts. Chill and slice crosswise, and serve as a salad on crisp lettuce leaves. Add a spoonful of mayonnaise dressing, and a cracker.

GAS stoves that pop with the sound of a mild explosion, when lighted should be regulated at the "mixer." An over-supply of air causes the disturbance. A small friction lighter, which may be had in the household departments of many shops, or in a hardware store is better than a match to use when lighting the jets under a gas oven.

A sheet-iron tray, just the size of the gas oven, and which can be slid in and out will make it easier to keep the oven clean and free from grease. A one-burner oven for the top of a gas stove will be an excellent warming closet.

Frequently brush out the gas jets, which get clogged with dust and grease if not regularly attended to. The principle of cleaning the gas stove to facilitate cooking, applies to the care of a sewing machine. Do not wait until it refuses to move, because the inside has become clogged with dust and oil. Clean it with kerosene occasionally on the under side, to remove old and hardened oil.

PRINCETON TEACHERS' CLUB ASKS PEDAGOGICAL COURSES

Princeton, Feb. 27—A movement has been started by the Teachers' Club of Princeton, an undergratduate organization which was formed last year, to get the university to establish some courses in pedagogy. The campaign is the result of a need felt among the men who, upon graduation, expect to go into the teaching profession.

The faculty will be asked to institute a course in educational psychology and one in the history of education, since both of these are required by the laws of New Jersey of applicants for positions in the schools of the State. A canvass was made of a number of members of the faculty and all who were approached indorsed the idea.

The movement is headed by W. Avery Barras of the senior class, president of the Teachers' Club. The club was addressed Wednesday night by Dr. Stewart Paton of the faculty on "The Essentials of an Education."

MISS MARY A. D. PERKINS A BRIDE

Becomes Wife of Thomas H. Thomas at St. Stephen's Church at Noon Today.

RECEPTION FOLLOWS

Ceremony Performed by Rev. W. E. L. Ward, Assisted by Rev. Prescott Evarts. Uncle of Bride—Couple to Live at Florence, Italy.

Miss Mary A. D. Perkins, daughter of Mrs. Edward C. Perkins, formerly of Plainfield, but now of New York, and Thomas H. Thomas, of Dayton, Ohio, were married at noon today at St. Stephen's Episcopal church, this city, by Rev. Warner E. L. Ward, the rector, assisted by Rev. Prescott Evarts, of Windsor, Vt., uncle of the bride, in the presence of about one hundred relatives and intimate friends of the couple.

The bride was gowned in white satin, with pearl trimmings and wore a veil of old lace and carried a bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley and white orchids. She was attended by her cousin, Miss Elizabeth Evarts, of Windsor, Vermont, who was also gowned in white and carried a bouquet of roses. The best man was Chauncey Hackett, of Washington, and the ushers were Louis A. Perkins, of St. George's School, Newport, R. I., and Charles C. Perkins, of New York, brothers of the bride, and Walter G. Oakman, Jr., of New York.

The bride was given in marriage by her eldest brother, Edward N. Perkins. The bridal party entered the church while the Mendelssohn Wedding March was being played. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of Mrs. and Mrs. Howard C. Tracy, on Prospect avenue, being attended by all who witnessed the ceremony. There the couple received the congratulations of the guests and a wedding breakfast was served. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas will sail on April 3 for Italy, it being their plan to make their home in the future near Florence.

The bride is a granddaughter of the late United States Senator William M. Evarts, of New York. Up to a few years ago the family lived in this city, where Mrs. Thomas was prominent in the social activities of the younger set. She is a graduate of The Seminary. She received a large collection of wedding gifts from relatives and friends. Mr. Thomas, who is a graduate of Harvard, Class '03, was an instructor there for awhile, leaving in 1907. Since that time he has been engaged as an art critic. While his home has been at Dayton, Mr. Thomas has lived abroad a great deal. The best man, Chauncey Hackett, was a classmate of Mr. Thomas at Harvard.

Thomas Lynch, fifty wears old, a farm hand, was struck and killed by a train on the Lackawanna Railroad, yesterday morning. His body was found about 200 feet away from the railway station at Berkeley Heights. County Physician F. W. Westcott, of Fanwood, viewed the remains and gave permission for the removal of the body to the undertaking rooms of George W. Cole, in this city.

The dead man was about five feet, six inches in height, weighed about 170 pounds, wore a sandy moustache and was well dressed. It is believed Lynch has a mother, brother and a sister who live in Newark. The police are trying to locate them so as to notify them of Lynch's death.

Smith & Brothers', and closed the Park avenue office. The concern, which is composed of a number of local people, with Edward F. "LEFT" DAVIDSON'S GANG HAD A FEAST

Four Small Youths Steal Pigeons and Cook Them at Pollock's Expense.

A quartet of young Americans, none of whom have seen more than a dozen years of this world's doings, were arraigned before City Judge William G. DeMeza, in the city court, this morning, charged by Lewis Pollock, of 653 West Third street, with stealing fifteen pigeons from the loft of his barn one night last week. The youngsters gave their names and ages as follows: Victor Velinsky, ten years old; Leo Lyons, twelve years old; Thomas Lyons, ten years old, and Isadore Davidson, eight years old, all promising sons of West End residents, two of Hebrew extraction and a pair of Irish brothers.

"Lefty" Davidson, the youngest of the gang, was singled out by the other "desperadoes" as the ring-leader, and although the ten-year-old director shot threatening glances at his quivering companions they revealed the whole story which savored strongly of the dime novel variety.

According to the story told by the juvenile offenders, as they were individually subjected to a quizzing by the judge, Pollock is the owner of some particularly tempting specimens of the feathered tribe that have their abode in a barn which has a board loose in the rear. Led by Davidson in the darkest hours of the night the quartet squeezed through the opening and "bagged" fifteen of the choicest birds with little trouble. They then went to the home of Levinsky and drew lots to see who should act as executioner. Tom Lyons drew the big number and he wrung the necks of five of the plumpest birds, and thinking these were plenty for one meal the youths liberated the other ten thinking that they would fly back to the loft and remain until needed again.

Levinsky's parents were away at the time and the boys plucked and "drew" the birds and placed them in the oven to roast. They enjoyed a sumptuous feed with all the fixins' and thought nothing more of the incident until a bluecoat invited them to the police station this morning. After a reprimand the court allowed them to go on a suspended sentence providing they promised to abstain from pigeon meat in the future. This they all promised to do and made a hasty retreat from the courtroom.

NARROWLY ESCAPES FATAL INJURIES

Samuel Ayers Meets With Mishap at Plant of Union Grain Company.

Samuel Ayers, of 22 Harmony street, an employe of the Union Grain Co., at its East Third street plant, met with an accident while at work, yesterday, which almost resulted fatally. While shovelling grain he slipped and became entangled in the hoisting machinery. Prompt action on the part of Henry Nisehwitz and others nearby in shutting off the power is all that saved him from being crushed to death.

Ayers was extricated from his perilous position, suffering from a badly contused back and lacerations on the head. He was removed to his home, where he is now under the care of Dr. A. F. Van Horn. He will probably be incapacitated for a week.

FRANK DOWER NARROWLY ESCAPES FATAL INJURY

While coasting on Spencer's hill, at Scotch Plains, on Thursday afternoon Frank Dower met with a serious accident which might have cost him his life. Speeding down the steep incline the heavy bob-sled which Dower was steering crashed into a horse and sleigh driven by Peter Ritter, a Fanwood hackman.

The force of the collision was so great as to knock young Dower unconscious. He was struck a glancing blow on the head, his scalp badly lacerated and for a time it was believed his right hip was broken and several of his ribs fractured. In the sleigh that Dower collided with was Dr. Runnels, of Bonnie Burn Sanatarium. He gave the boy aid. The horse bolted and ran away but was caught at the top of the hill.

PEASANTS TERRIFIED WHEN AIR PILOTS FALL TO DEATH

(By Telegraph to The Daily Press.)

Constantinople, Feb. 28.—Two pioneer aviators of the Turkish army were killed today, while trying to fly from this city to Cairo, Egypt. They were Fethy Bey, pilot of the machine, and Sadik Bey, a passenger. Just after leaving the ancient city of Damascus, the frame of the aeroplane collapsed and both men fell to the ground from a height of 800 feet.

They alighted near a village but the peasants, terrified by the strange spectacle of men flying through the air, feared for some time to venture near the wreckage. Both men were dead when they were finally picked up. Fethy Bey and Sadiku Bey were both educated in aeronautics in France.

Williams, of Kensington avenue, was yesterday appointed receiver of the $3,000 assets in the Metropolitan district of the Standard Plunger Elevator Company in an equity suit brought by George B. Smith, a creditor with a claim for $12,702. In the action brought in New Jersey on February 25, Mr. Williams was appointed receiver. The company has $2,200,000 capital stock and has a plant at Worcester, Mass. The total assets are $377,841 and the liabilities $492,583.

In the United States District Court at Worcester, yesterday, Judge Dodge appointed Mr. Williams receiver for the company in Massachussets. The company is one of the best known in the country, and the appointment of Mr. Williams is generally considered an excellent one by the interested parties.

TRIAL POSTPONED FOR FURTHER CONFERENCE

Portion of Loot Taken by Plainfield Youth Found at Mother's Home.

The trial of Chester Chamberlain, the seventeen-year-old Plainfield boy accused of stealing money and jewelry from New York Y. M. C. A. members, was postponed in the West Side police court, New York, yesterday. Counsel for the defendant asked for the adjournment to permit a further conference with parties interested. Chamberlain has been unable to secure the $1,200 bail bond originally fixed and after the trial was declared off he was removed to the Tombs, where he will remain until the case is disposed of.

A large amount of the articles which the young man is alleged to have taken have been recovered and his accusers are inclined to be lenient. Some of the loot, it is said, was found hidden in his room at his mother's home.

NEW PAY SYSTEM CAUSES CONFUSION

Trolley Company's New Rules Upset Service on Local Lines.

Much confusion resulted from the introduction yesterday of the pay-as-you-enter system on the local trolley cars. Persons, for the most part, who traveled on the several lines, seemed unfamiliar with the innovation and as a consequence there were many vexatious delays to the service all over the city. In one case there was a ten-minute delay on the Netherwood line.

Men who have ben accustomed to standing on the rear platform of the trolleys and enjoying a pipe, cigar or cigarette, were particularly incensed when they were curtly informed by the blue uniformed conductors that from now and henceforth no smoking would be permitted by the Public Service Corporation on any of its cars. This rule is regarded by smokers generally throughout the city as a hardship. There was much grumbling on account of it and many a cigar, all of which were declared by the owners to be expensive brands, were obliged to be discarded upon entering the cars.

There was a great deal of crowding because of the unfamiliarity of passengers with the new system and the tempers of many men and women were ruffled through compliance with the hard and fast rules which the trolley heads laid down and which will be strictly enforced.

The new pay-as-you-enter system will, it is said, be introduced on Main Line cars Monday.

SYLVANUS B. KEEN DIES IN 75TH YEAR

Veteran Whaler and Soldier Passes Away After a Brief Illness.

Sylvanus Bunker Keen died this morning, at his home, at 414 New street, in this city. He was seventy-five years old. Born in New Bedford, Mass., Mr. Keen spent his early boyhood in that place. As a youth he made many whaling voyages, the cruises sometimes lasting as long as four years, as far back as the year 1855. During the Civil War he was engaged in duty on one of the Federal transports which moved the Union troops about. By occupation the late Mr. Keen was a steel die cutter. He worked for the Crescent Embossing Company, a former Plainfield concern, for thirty-five years, and was with that company throughout its various changes in organization, coming to this city with the company from Rahway.

Mr. Keen leaves three sons and two daughters, all of whom reside in Plainfield. They are Edward R., Henry L., George W., Mrs. C. J. Vincent and Mrs. William Baker. He has five grandchildren. Mr. Keen's wife died twenty years ago. The funeral of Mr. Keen will be held at his late residence, 414 New street, on Monday afternoon, March 2, at 1:30 o'clock. Burial will be in Rahway cemetery.

TAXICAB DRIVERS SEEK MEAN JOKER

Offer a Reward Leading to Identity of Person Giving a False Call.

William Willis and Whitted Hall, two enterprising taxicab drivers, who recently installed an office on North avenue for the convenience of patrons, today authorized a reward of $5 for information leading to the person who sent in a false telephone call to their place last night. Michael Higgins, another taxi man, and the owners of several horse drawn vehicles, innocently drawn into the affair, have also guaranteed payment of a like amount for three minutes' interview with the miscreant, stating that that amount of time is sufficient to accomplish their purpose.

Willis and Hall have installed a boy in their office to take calls and shortly after 6 o'clock last evening, the 'phone rang. When answered a voice at the other end huriedly asked that all of the taxicabs at the North avenue station be sent to the corner of Sixth street and Arlington avenue as soon as possible. In his excitement the office superintendent failed to ask for names. He hustled across the street to the cab stand on the Belgian block lawn of the depot and bawled out the call. The effect was something like the hubbub that follows a cry of fire in a crowded hall. Willis, Hall and Higgins broke all records getting their cars in motion and a dozen pilots of glass cars, as the old-style vehicle carryalls are called, took it for granted they were entitled to a look-in on the order in the event of the motor cars not being enough to go around.

The cavalcade tore down North avenue and into Park like a stampede of Texas steers. Some of the drivers had difficulty in retaining their seats, the pace became so dizzy before half the distance was covered. When Sixth and Arlington was reached, there was no sign of any crowd eager for transportation, the only person in sight being Elias Hickman, a photographer who said he was waiting for a trolley car. The onslaught of taxis and wagons scared him so he dropped a costly camera, breaking the lens. His lamentations and queries as to who was going to reimburse him, only added to the confusion.

The angry cabmen canvassed the neighborhood but gained only one clue as to who it was duped them. William Drake, manager of Blair's stable, said a man had used the office 'phone about the time the call was sent in and hurried out as soon as he hung up. His description tallied with that of a cabmen who Willis and Hall say has been jealous of their success. This individual did not show up at the stand today and he is being sought.

It was a sorry procession that wended its way back to North avenue, all manner of threats varying the monotony of the return trip.

When Higgins was seen by a Daily Press reporter later, he said:

"It was a scurvy trick on Willis and Hall and I hope they catch the perpetrator of the dastardly deed. Personally, I wouldn't care so much, only I had just sat down to supper in Melvin's restaurant and went away leaving the best half of a fine porterhouse steak. That's what makes me mad."

There will be communion services tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock at the Congregational church.

NEWTON B. SMALLEY ISSUES A CHALLENGE

Invites Edmund Rushmore to Public Debate on Taxation and Sewage Questions.

Challenge to debate on taxation and sewer question was issued today to Councilman Edmund Rushmore, of North Plainfield, by former Mayor Newton B. Smalley, of that borough. He declared that he would welcome the opportunity to debate these much mooted questions upon the public platform. Inasmuch as Councilman Rushmore has entered into controversy over these matters with him, the former head of the municipality of North Plainfield believes it but fitting that he should publicly discuss these matters. This, he said today, ought to result in a decision on the part of the public as to which is right in his contentions.

"It is," said former Mayor Smalley today, "with no intention of getting into any newspaper controversy with Councilman Rushmore, or anyone else, that I offer the suggestion that he, together with his legal advisers, consent to meet me upon the platform, at a public hearing, to be held in North Plainfield in the near future and in a debate discuss both the tax and the sewer propositions. The public can then decide which of us is right."

Councilman Rushmore is out of the city today, having gone to Atlantic City with his wife for the week-end.

In the interview with Mr. Rushmore, published in the Daily Press of yesterday, he was quoted as asking why Mr. Smalley objected to sending the school children of North Plainfield to the Plainfield schools. Mr. Rushmore referred to the proposition to send the High School pupils of North Plainfield to the Plainfield High School, and not all the school children of the borough.

IRBY WILL HAVE TO LEAVE THE CITY BEFORE MONDAY

Edward Irby, the sixteen years old colored youth, who has given the police of this city more trouble than all the other juvenile offenders put together during the past year, was arraigned before City Judge W. G. DeMeza in the city court this morning on a charge of vagrancy. Irby was arraigned before Judge James C. Connolly in the Juvenile Court two weeks ago charged with larceny and allowed to go providing he left Plainfield prior to next Friday.

When picked up by the police last night the youth had $1.65 on his person, which he refused to account for and was locked up until this morning. In court this morning Judge DeMeza instructed the guardian of the youth to get him out of Plainfield before Monday, otherwise he will be picked up and put in some institution. Numerous efforts have been made to have the offender put in some institution but to date has successfuly evaded all attempts.

CAMPAIGN ENDS IN BLAZE OF GLORY

Four Days' Campaign Nets $12,566.75 for Young Women's Christian Ass'n.

GREAT ENTHUSIASM

Total Subscriptions Will Cancell Budget Expenses of $6,000 and Note of $3,250—Thanksgiving Service to Be Held Tomorrow.

With the culmination of the four days' financial campaign of the Young Women's Christian Association, which came to a close last night, announcement was made that the total subscription of the ten teams of solicitors was $12,566.75. This is considerably in excess of the $10,000 which the women of Plainfield, who are deeply interested in the work of the organization started out to raise through voluntary offerings.

Mrs. Leslie R. Fort, captain of Team No. 8, announced the collection of $500 by the nine members of her team yesterday. This was the record collection of the day's campaign, and entitled Mrs. Fort's team to the award of the $500 offered from the Janet Richards fund by Mrs. Percy H. Stewart, bringing the total collections of Team No. 8 up to $1,000.

Scenes of pleasant excitement and great enthusiasm attended the close of the hard-fought campaign late yesterday afternoon. There was a large gathering at the Y. W. C. A. building, on East Front street, at 4 o'clock when the meeting of the solicitors was called to order by Mrs. Frederick Goodhue Mead, president of the Y. W. C. A. Each of the women who have been engaged in the four days' canvass for subscriptions was presented with a card, printed in red and black as a souvenir of the occasion by Mrs. Mead. The cards read:

Young Women's Christian Ass'n
Plainfield, New Jersey
Lest we forget
February 24-27, 1914

"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—Zach. 4:6.

A statement was made by Miss Harriet Taylor, executive finance secretary of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A., and who has been in charge of Plainfield's campaign since its start, that it was, to her mind, "the ideal finance campaign," and she declared that she had witnessed many such.

Brief speeches were made by Miss Taylor and by Charles W. McCutchen, the latter contributing his pledged $500 which will be applied to payment of the $5,250 mortgage on the adjoining property of the association. Mr. McCutchen spoke of the great joy of giving and of the delight that attended the paying of one's debt, two kinds of happiness which he declared should be highly prized. Scriptural quotations were given by Miss Taylor that were made while the ten teams were figuring the totals of the day's collections and preparing to make announcement of the grand total.

In the opinion of Mrs. Frederick Goodhue Mead, the president of the local Y. W. C. A., the campaign was a wonderful one and its success she attributes in a large part to the indefatigable efforts made by all of the scores of women who engaged in it. Not one of them, it was declared, but devoted herself to the work in hand throughout the four days that the crusade was waged. The utmost optimism and cheerfulness reigned among the many workers and the women of Plainfield are held to have rendered truly remarkable service to the Y. W. C. A. cause in this city. Only one case is known of where the person solicited for a subscription did not give gladly. Hundreds of cards have been received from both men and women of this city who regretted their inability to give money but who said they would be not only willing but very glad to aid the work of the association in any friendly way. Such offerings are prized by the Y. W. C. A. workers as showing the friendly spirit of the populace and the sympathy that is felt in the work that is being so well carried on in Plainfield among its young womanhood.

Vesper services, to which the public is invited, will be held at the Y. W. C. A. building, Sunday afternoon, at 4 o'clock. The services will be in charge of Mrs. Frederick Goodhue Mead, the president, and Miss Besler will be the soloist. It will be a thanksgiving praise service for the success of the recent campaign.

With the monies now on hand in the treasury and with the amounts that have been pledged by subscribers, the Y. W. C. A. will be enabled to meet the $6,000 budget, to liquidate the note for $3,250, held by the City National Bank, and will then have a very substantial residue, which, it was said today, will be applied towards the payment of the mortgage of $5,250, now outstanding

Monday Our Most Brilliant March Sale Of CHINA, CRYSTALS and ART WARES

It Will Set a New High Level in New York in The Desirability, Diversity and Economy Of its Wares

Ever since the opening of the GIMBEL Store in New York, it has held a high reputation for the beauty and richness of its collections of China and Crystals—equaling fine specialty shops in exclusiveness and surpassing them in the extent and variety of its collections.

It is these magnificent stocks that now enter into what we are confident will be our most important March Sale.

Of the more than a quarter-million dollars' worth of these superb wares, there are special purchases amounting to $90,000—the largest amount we have ever bought specially for a sale.

Our permanent foreign offices in Paris, London and Berlin have been of immense value in securing exactly what we wanted at very low prices. And our special agent in Italy has been most successful in the same mission.

LIVES WITH PART OF HIS SPINE GONE

Union Hill Man Survives a Rare Operation.

SEES DOCTOR USE KNIFE

Conscious While Operation Was In Progress and Kept His Eyes Open Throughout—Believed Patient Will Be Restored to Health—Received Injury by Fall From Scaffold.

Jersey City, N. J., Feb. 28.—While only partly under the influence of an anaesthetic, Godfrey Kruse, a painter, of Union Hill, N. J., underwent one of the rarest operations known to surgical science. That he is alive is due to the skill of the surgeon, who cut a tiny bit out of his spine. He is said to be recovering.

The operation was performed by Dr. Joseph Rector of this city in the North Hudson hospital. Kruse has been in the hospital since Jan. 22, when he fell from a scaffold at the second story of a building. One section of the vertebrae of the spine was fractured and this caused total paralysis. It appeared that he was dying and this led the surgeon to undertake the delicate operation of removing a small portion of the spine.

Kruse was conscious while the operation was in progress and kept his eyes open throughout. An incision was made in his body the full length of the spine and the spinal cord was moved aside to be out of the way. The spinal canal was then flushed with a saline solution.

It was the fifth dorsal vertebrae that was injured, and after it had been exposed Dr. Rector, assisted by Drs Gelbach and Heilstern, wired the sections of the spine together. After removing three blood clots and a small section of the vertebrae the incision was sewed up.

It required fifty-two stitches to close the wound. The patient was then placed in a plaster cast and returned to his bed.

Dr. Rector declared that he could not yet say definitely what the outcome of the operation would be. He said it would be two or three days before he could determine whether the man would ever be able to walk again. It is quite possible, in his opinion, that the patient will be restored to health as a result of the operation.

AUTO INCASED BY ICE.

Machine Prisoner Until Warm Weather—Left In Cold Storage Plant.

Burlington, N. J., Feb. 28.—Having little use for his auto during the winter, George A. Woodward of Cookstown, this county, put the car in a cold storage building then vacant. Thinking he would take a short run in the auto he was dumbfounded upon opening the temporary garage to find that nature had actually refrigerated the car, a water tank above it having burst, with the result that the leakage, freezing, incased the car in a mound of ice.

The car is a prisoner until warm weather, as Woodward fears the fire risk from gasoline fuel, should he attempt to artificially thaw the machine out of the ice.

FALLS DEAD IN MAYOR'S HOME

Victim of Exposure Asked to Be Admitted to Get Warm.

Franklin, N. J., Feb. 28.—William Wood, thirty-six years old, came to the door of the home of Mayor David W. McCarthy and asked to be admitted to get warm. Wood sat down in a side room and while the mayor was getting him something to eat he fell dead.

Investigation showed that Wood had slept out the night before and that his death resulted from exposure. Wood is survived by three brothers and two sisters.

MELLEN ARREST IS NOW CALLED ILLEGAL

Effort Is Made to Quash Bench Warrant.

Bridgeport, Conn., Feb. 28.—In behalf of Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad company, an argument was made by his counsel in superior court to quash the bench warrant sworn out by State's Attorney Stiles Judson, charging him with responsibility for the death of one Jane Doe in the collision of two Springfield express trains at Westport, Conn., on Oct. 3, 1912. The specific charge was that of manslaughter.

The motion to quash was based on a plea as to jurisdiction of the court. Homer S. Cummings, Mr. Mellen's counsel, claimed that the issuance of the bench warrant in question was not supported by affidavit or affirmation, sworn to by an officer of justice and that the proceeding was an arbitrary one. He argued along constitutional lines, claiming that the bill of rights safeguards a person against false arrest. He characterized the bench warrant as a "long arm which reaches out to get persons suspected of crime." He praised the bench warrant as a useful adjunct of the court, but declared it could not break down any safeguard of individual liberty.

Mr. Cummings said that the question might be raised that if the court granted the motion it might have far reaching effects in that it might let persons accused of crime go free and might even upset the administration of justice itself.

"Not so," said Mr. Cummings. "We do not believe this, nor do we believe that your honor will so believe that that is our contention. If this warrant is disposed of it will have absolutely no effect upon any subsequent action which may be taken to fix responsibility for the wreck. The motion means that we hold that the warrant which makes Mr. Mellen the defendant was not supported by an oath or affirmation and is void."

The courtroom was thronged while Mr. Cummings made his argument.

NEW FIRE ENGINE WILL NECESSITATE CHANGES

Owing to the fact that the width of the new Nott automobile fire engine allows a clearance of but four inches on either side of the doorway of fire headquarters on East Second street, arrangements will have to be made to widen the entrance.

Chief Doane said today that the present slight clearance would be insufficient as there would always be considerable danger of accident and of damage to the engine in starting out on an alarm of fire.

ACCO CLASS GIVES A SALAMAGUNDI PARTY

Under the auspices of the members of the Acco class of the Sunday-school of the Congregational church, a salamagundi social was given last night in the new social rooms of that church. There was a good attendance and the affair was thoroughly enjoyable in every way. Progressive games were played. Mrs. D. F. Updike is teacher of the Acco class, which is composed of young women of the church.

DEMOCRATS DID NOT OPPOSE SELECTION OF CODDINGTON

Following the meetings of the City and County Democratic Committees held in the local Democratic Club rooms, Sunday and Monday last, it was erroneously reported in other public newspapers that the name of W. A. Coddington had been brought up before the body and following a discussion was rejected as a possible candidate for the vacancy to be filled on the Union County Board for the Equalization of Taxes. Mulford Scudder at present holds this office and his term expires May 1.

On the contrary Mr. Coddington's name was not mentioned at the meeting, according to a statement made by John T. Caulfield, chairman of the City Democratic Committee today. It is known that Mr. Coddington is one of the many applicants for the political plum and that certain newspapers are vigorously opposing his selection.

WAITED SEVEN YEARS TO PLAY A REAL PART

How many actresses would have waited seven years as an understudy to get a chance to play a real part? That is exactly what Miss May Robson, who is starring in "The Clever Woman," at the Plainfield theatre, this afternoon and evening, did before she got her real chance. Seven weary years of waiting for someone to get sick. Seven years that almost pulled all of the starch out of her ambitions to be an actress. But then the chance came. The name of the play was "Nerves." Miss Robson won't say how long ago that was, but it was her first chance and that she made the most of it when it came her way is attested by the high position she now holds.

NEW IDEAS FROM THE OLD DOMINION.

At the election held in November, 1912, the State of Virginia adopted a constitutional amendment designed to allow cities to govern themselves in any way that they see fit. The way in which the movement for this purpose crystallized into the form of a constitutional amendment is an interesting story.

A few years ago, Staunton, Va., the birthplace of President Wilson, and a town of about 12,000 inhabitants, was governed by a Common Council consisting of twenty-two members. It was not only an old town but was a town of old traditions. It contained many intelligent and educated citizens who were excellent doctors, merchants and lawyers, and who in their own various vocations were experts and successful, but when it came their turn to serve the town in the Council or as municipal officers, they were not able to make the success of it that they did in their respective lines of business. In other words they were doing something for which they were not trained and it would have been unusual if they had met with the success that they did in the vocations for which they had undergone a long and difficult training. The exceptional part of the matter was that they came to recognize this fact, and that they were able to shake off their conservatism to a sufficient degree to acknowledge this and to look about for the remedy.

Under the old fashioned system of government, Staunton had been governed in about the usual way that the business of running American cities is conducted. It had spent a good deal for paving without getting very satisfactory results. It had a bonded debt of $600,000 and it was running somewhat deeper into debt all the time. It owned its own water and lighting system which it ran without conspicuous success, and in dry weather there inevitably was a shortage of water. It had bought its supplies in the usual unbusinesslike way, each department purchasing wherever it pleased. The graft that is the feature of so many purchasing departments of cities was absent, but business management was absent also, and the general situation was unsatisfactory and was becoming more so as time went on.

While things were being run in this way it happened that there was a washout in the business district of the city. Local contractors were called upon to bid for the work of repairing the damage, and the lowest figure offered was $4,000. Some genius at this time conceived the idea of getting the opinion of an outsider as to the work, and Charles E. Ashburner, the Engineer of Maintenance for the Staunton Division of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, was called upon for his opinion. He looked the situation over and said, "$737 will leave you a little margin." The local contractors jeered at these figures but the Councilmen were sufficiently impressed to go ahead and have the work done under their own direction, and the complete bill was $725.

Whether this incident opened the eyes of some of the progressive citizens or whether the increasing expenses, the rising tax rate and the general unsatisfactory conditions had been gradually arousing the spirit of criticism, it is hard to say, but the result was that after some work and agitation, the Common Council adopted an ordinance providing for the appointment of a General Manager whose duties were prescribed by the ordinance, and who in general was given charge of all the administrative and executive work then performed by the several standing committees of the Council, except those of the finance committee.

Following the German custom the position was advertised at a maximum salary of $2,500 a year. Naturally, there were many applications from local men, contractors, etc., and all of these were willing to work for much less than the maximum salary, some of the figures running as low as $1,000 a year. Possibly some of the applicants thought they saw a way of making up the difference. There was just one man who placed his minimum figure at the Council's maximum. He was Mr. Ashburner, who has been mentioned before. When the Council saw his name among the applicants they immediately awarded him the position.

He made a success of his job from the beginning. Of course he met with a good deal of opposition, and it may as well be admitted that such a position calls for qualities in a man which are not always to be readily found. The contractors who had previously felt that the city belonged to them, naturally resented losing a large and profitable business, and they had influence enough to make the General Manager's path rather thorny at times. Mr. Ashburner had had a rather special training. He was a civil engineer by profession and had been educated in Germany, and had probably absorbed some of the German ideas as to practical efficiency in municipal matters.

During his administration a much greater amount of paving was done than had ever been done before. One contract for which the lowest bid had been $2.25 a square yard, was completed by him at a cost of $.96 a square yard. The water and lighting system were put on a better and more businesslike basis with a saving of approximately 1,000 tons of coal a year, and the usual periodic shortage in the water supply has not since occurred. The purchasing of supplies has been systematized at a large saving. Daily records have been kept showing all work done, and these are public, so that if any citizen wished to walk into the General Manager's office and see exactly what was being spent for the work which was being done in front of his house, he was at liberty to do so and to offer any suggestions or criticisms which occured to him. A new sewer system and a better method of disposing of garbage, two things which had been crying for attention for a long time, but which had not been attended to because of the lack of funds, were taken up and without any increase of the tax rate were satisfactorily disposed of.

The weak point in the Staunton plan lay in the fact that the city could not get rid of its Council of 22 men, as the constitution of Virginia required cities to maintain this system of government, and it was found that where such a large number of men were in power, some of them could always be depended upon to take the part of dissatisfied contractors, and to oppose the various measures which it was necessary from time to time to pass through the Council. This finally became such a source of danger to the proper administration of the work that the legislature was petitioned to bring about a constitutional amendment reducing the Council to five in number.

The writer has a letter under date of February 3, 1914, from the Secretary of State of Virginia, enclosing a copy of the amendment which was adopted in November, 1912, by popular vote, and which authorizes the General Assembly to make laws for the governing of cities so as to provide for a commission or other form of government. After referring in his letter to the fact that Staunton employs a General Manager who has supervision over all public work, he adds that the city of Richmond now has a similar form of government with a board of five members, and that the city of Norfolk has also adopted the same plan. He adds that several bills are now before the present session of the General Assembly, granting to cities the right to use any form of government that they may see fit.

Of course the problems which beset one city are never exactly the same as those from which other cities may suffer, and the specific arguments in favor of placing a city under the direction of a General Manager as applied to Staunton, might not fit the situation as applied to Plainfield, but it is reasonably certain that conducting the business of a $27,000,000 corporation (the assessed value of Plainfield's real estate) should be confided to those who make a business of that sort of work, and who have every incentive in the world to use foresight and to look further ahead than the end of a comparatively brief term of office.

We may extol the various advantages of Plainfield, and much of what we said would be true, but the fact remains that many other cities are forging ahead of us with improvements which a little foresight would have secured for us; and calling it "The City Beautiful" will not overcome the fact that we have no public parks, and that both the public and private development of the city is proceeding along no carefully planned idea, having due regard to the future.

The writer has always thought that the commission government plan, notwithstanding various imperfections to which public attention has frequently been called, possesses distinct advantages over the present form of government, but that its chief value lies in the extension of the right of local self-government which it apparently bestows on cities adopting it. The section which enacts that any city adopting the provisions of this act "shall have all powers necessary for its government not in conflict with the laws applicable to all cities of this state, or the provisions of the constitution," and shall have power and authority "to preserve and enforce the good government and general welfare, order and security of such cities," would apparently enable the commissioners, in case this form of government were adopted, to employ a General Manager or to adopt any similar plan which might be considered advisable.

Two important provisions of the act have never been mentioned in any public discussion which I have happened to notice. The first is that the compensation of the commissioners is to be fixed by an ordinance adopted by themselves immediately after organization, but not exceeding for Plainfield, $1,500; and the second provision is that commissioners have authority to decrease their number, by an ordinance, from five to three. A plan by which commissioners were elected with the understanding that they were to adopt an ordinance reducing their number from five to three, and fixing their salaries at say $1,000 a year, and with the further understanding that they should then employ a General Manager to have charge of all of the administrative work of the city, would result in a system of government which would probably be as nearly perfect as any we are likely to see for a long time. Financial matters and matters of general policy, as for instance the question of liquor licenses, would of course, be retained in the hands of the three commissioners.

FRANK L. HOLT.

HOW NOT TO BE A COP

The information in the news column recently that only two men out of twenty-six applicants for appointment for the local police force, survived the rigid physical and mental examination required, leads The Daily Press' official poet, J. Augustus Goof, to rid himself of the following:

If you a copper's job do crave,
To nightly sleuth along the pave,
In search of robber, crook or knave,
List to my tale.

Don't try the physical exam,
Believing you're the great "I am,"
For health and strength, devoid of sham,
For you might fail.

The doctors at your claim will scoff,
If once you had the whooping cough,
Or measles nearly took you off,
When you were young.

If on your chin there dwells a mole
Or one tooth has a tiny hole,
Stay right at home, you poor lost soul,
For you'll get stung.

Your fine physique will be decried,
If someone on your mother's side
Way back in 1850, died
From drinking soup.

And neither will your form suffice,
If once you slipped on jagged ice
And from your ear tore off a slice
That makes it droop.

But, say for instance you pass by
The doctor's keen, unfriendly eye,
The mental test you'll have to try,
And that's some task.

You know right now you cannot tell
How old was Ann or why Rome fell,
And in what book its "Little Nell,"
But yet they'll ask.

These questions seem beyond belief,
But if you doubt, just ask the chief,
He'll say they help to catch a thief,
Or Peeping Jack.

No, no my friend, the likes of you
For Plainfield's force will never do;
So dream no more of wearing blue—
Go drive a hack.

MOCK TRIAL IS GREATLY ENJOYED

Young Men's Association of Hope Chapel Give Fine Entertainment.

An audience that crowded the parlors of Hope chapel to their limit capacity, last night, enjoyed two hours of mirth and music during the presentation of the first annual entertainment of the Hope Chapel Young Men's Association. The affair took the form of a mock trial and numerous local topics added considerably to the successof the entertainment.

The manner in which the cast carried on the court proceedings reflected with credit on the work of those in charge of the coaching, and the many topical roasts kept the audience in a constant round of raptuous applause. The characters in the courtroom were composed of members of the club and all were particularly well fitted for the parts they took. A crack was taken at the local police force, newspapers and other local characters and institutions and these were especially clever.

During an intermission, Bert Hansen, a German turner, provided entertainment with novel tumbling acts and an Italian dialogue was presented by "Mutt and Jeff," known in public life as Richard Schott and George Hunter. Those in charge of the executive part of the presentation were Jack Martin, George E. Leighs and William Doig. The officers of the club are Thomas Heron, president; Arthur Thorn, vice-president; E. Luthman, second vice-president, and George T. Leighs, secretary-treasurer.

Those in the cast were:

Judge, G. T. Leighs; Attorney Skin, John Heron; Attorney Takethecoin, A. Grisley; Dennis Casey, A. Snyder; clerk, J. Martin; Miss Dotty Perkins E. Luthman; Ruben Louder, G. Snyder; John Gunn, James Doig; Claw Hammer, F. Clark; I. C. Uno, N. Bohl; I. M. White, R. Cratsley; One Lung, A. Campbell; Michael Mulcahy, D. Wardrop; Fritz Bumblesburgerhorfendorfenstein, H. THE PLAINFIELD THEATRE

The original "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" is not quite as sunny a soul as she was before Anne Hegan Rice discovered her to the world in her stories and since Anne Crawford Flexner dramatized her. Fame has made uneasy the head that once lay down so easily in the "Cabbage Patch" of the Louisville suburb and insistent visitors, eager for a bit of first hand philosophy, often receive a first class scolding. Indeed, the impetuous prototype of Mrs. Wiggs, not long since doused an excellent society lady with water, and was summoned to police court. "I won't trouble no toriety, if notoriety don't trouble me They kin put me in books and in stage plays until they're sick of it, but you all have got to stear clear of me in person," remarked the "Mrs. Wiggs" of Louisville, to a reporter recently. Meanwhile the sale of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "Lovey Mary" has gone into the hundreds of thousands and in their dramatized form the characters of the book are still more effective and entertaining. New York never took more kindly to anyone than to Mrs. Wiggs, and for one hundred and fifty performances, The Savoy theatre was crowded by folk seeking a surcease from boredom. All the cabbage patch folk will be seen her at the Plainfield theatre on Thursday evening, March 5, when the play will be presented by the United Play Company.

Y. W. C. A. CAMPAIGN ENDS

on the property adjoining the present Y. W. C. A. building. The total collections were $12,566.75. This leaves a balance of $3,316.75 which will necessitate the raising of but approximately $2,000 to pay off the $5,250 mortgage. While it is believed there will be but little, if any, difficulty in securing this sum it was said today that there would be no more team work. Subscriptions towards the still needed $2,000 will be solicited by individuals and it is unlikely that this work will be very speedily begun.

In the four days' campaign subscriptions have been received from 1,335 persons. The ten teams visited 422 subscribers yesterday alone, a greater number than were seen on any previous day of the canvass. Team No. 1, of which Mrs. Rufus Lincoln is captain, collected $112.75 from 34 subscribers. Team No. 2, of which Mrs. Frank W. French is captain, collected $178 from 55 subscribers. Team No. 3, of which Miss Edith Mellick is captain, collected $130 from 27 subscribers. Team No. 4, of which Miss Dorothy Fleming is captain, collected $216.50 from 49 subscribers. Team No. 5, of which Mrs. Francis de Lacey Hyde is captain, collected $199 from 38 subscribers. Team No. 6, of which Mrs. Lewis A. Williams, Jr., is captain, collected $175 from 39 subscribers. Team No. 7, of which Mrs. Walter McGee is captain, collected $291 from 25 subscribers. Team No. 8, of which Mrs. Leslie R. Fort is captain, collected $500 from 54 subscribers and was awarded from the Janet Richards Lecture Fund by Mrs. Percy H. Stewart, for its success in distancing the other nine competing teams. Team No. 9, of which Mrs. W. D. Murray is captain, collected $158 from 23 subscribers, and Team No. 10, of which Mrs. W. C. O' Donnell is captain, collected $154.50 from 78 subscribers.

The day's collections reached the sum of $2,614.75 and ninety-six women were engaged in the canvass. Collections the first day were $4,165.25, for the second day $3,034.50, for the third day $2,347.25, and for the fourth and last day $2,614.75.

Chicago Charlie White's recent defeat at the hands of Marty McCue in Milwaukee, cost him his chance to meet Johnny Kilbane for the championship.

The famous "Arts and Crafts" Furniture from the well known Stickley Brothers Company needs no introduction to New Jersey people. Hahne & Co. have exploited these sales with great success—the furniture sells on its own merits! In every day circles this "Arts and Crafts" line is called mission furniture.

The best methods of cabinet work are used in the making—the joints are mortised and tenored and the joints are practically never open. The wood is carefully selected quartered Indiana white oak—fumed in a very rich brown shade—thus making a perfect finish. There's one very pertinent point to remember about Stickley furniture: Positively no veneers are used in its making.

Genuine Spanish Morocco leather is used in the covering of the upholstering and cushions—guaranteed high quality, and in a shade that perfectly blends with the soft brown shade of the wood itself.

LOCALS SURPRISE EVEN THEMSELVES

Plainfield High School Girls Shock Their Supporters by Walloping Boroughites.

GOOD FOUL SHOOTING

Miss "Dot" Crane Led the Plainfield Feminine Quintet to a Notable Verdict—Penalty Throws Prominent in the Work of Both Teams.

Foul shooting, with Miss Dorothy Crane and Miss Marjorie Burtis playing the leading roles, played a prominent part in one of the most spectacular and at the same time, most surprising basketball games ever waged between the feminine forces of Plainfield and North Plainfield High Schools in the local gym, yesterday afternoon. The surprise came not in the number of fouls called, but the number in which Miss Crane, a practically unhear of point winner, was able to bag from the penalty mark and her aggressiveness and ability to net the sphere led her side to a 28 to 16 victory and tied things up in the feminine interscholastic basketball race, each team now having one victory to its credit. The third and deciding game will be played on the Y. M. C. A. court in the near future.

Soon after the initial whistle was sounded it could be plainly seen that the game was to be one of individualism where foul shooting played a prominent part and the two little ringleaders ran a nip and tuck race in the opening period. Miss Crane's long throws just grazed the edges of the iron ring and dropped through while Miss Burtis's high and clean cut throws counted with equal regularity.

Miss Burtis suffered a complete reverse in form in the second period missed shot after shot, wasting numerous throws which, if bagged, would have boosted the boroughites' tally card far above that of the Plainfielders. Field goals were defeats on Canadian soil and the few that were chalked up were of the sensational variety. Close guarding on the part of the goal preventers on both sides kept the field scoring down to a par and at the same time resulted in the calling of numerous unintentional fouls. Plainfield was the principal offender, particularly in the second half, and fully twice as many fouls were called on the locals during the forty minutes of play.

Every one of the eleven players who took part in the game were conspicuous in one phase of the contest or another and although Miss Crane eclipsed her teammates and the visitors in the scoring department there were others on the floor who did equally as well in the departments they were performing in. North Plainfield High School was visibly handicapped by the limited playing space while the Plainfielders were at home on the small P. H. S. gym, which is at present undergoing a remodeling.

"Sportdom Tips"

It looks kind of suspicious to see a feminine team follow in a male team's footsteps. Although we do not claim there is any significance attached to the North Plainfield High School girls' defeat of yesterday, it went a long way toward bringing about a third game and the consequent swelling of certain treasuries.

Putting eighteen out of twenty-one foul shots on the shelf as one point scores is no mean feat—in fact Miss Crane's performance is pretty nearly a record for feminine basketball.

The question has been raised as to why boys cannot shoot fouls with the accuracy displayed by feminine athletes. It must be that the girls get more opportunities to shine from the fifteen-foot mark. Some fifty fouls were called yesterday afternoon.

That city and borough championship problem was further complicated last night by the defeat administered to North Plainfield High School. It now looks as though an actual champ would never be decided.

The election of basketball captains in the two high schools is the chief topic for conversation among the schoolboys at the present time. Several good aspirants have loomed up this season and the balloting will no doubt be close.

Plainfield Elks failed to figure in the Elks' Bowling League melon cutting this season, and as a result the Plainfielders will not have to tog home any of the prizes after that beefsteak dinner in Skeetertown next week.

Another feed has been announced for the boroughites who brought the title to North Plainfield High School this season. These feeds might better be postponed until, after the Canadians wind up their schedules.

Joe Evers, brother of John, has refused to sign with the Terre Haute Central League Club. Joe doesn't expect as large a salary as his famous brother, but at the same time he can't see the Terre Haute figures.

ANOTHER STAR ATHLETE IN THE PEACOCK FAMILY

The Stillman Grammar School girls' basketball team sprang a surprise, yesterday afternoon, on the North Plainfield High School Freshmen, by defeating them by the score of 20 to 18. This is the second time these two teams have met, the Grammar School being defeated before.

Miss Helen Peacock, forward on the Grammar School, was the chief basket shooter of the game, scoring all of her team's points, which consisted of six field goals and eight fouls. Miss Peacock started the scoring by shooting a foul goal, but Miss Barkalew promptly retaliated with a field goal. North Plainfield held the lead until time was about up in the first half, when Miss Peacock dropped in two field goals, which put the Stillman School in the lead and the first half ended with the score at 14 to 8 in Stillman's favor.

North Plainfield outscored their younger rivals in the second half, but only by one point, which was not enough to win the game. The addition of Miss Spencer, of the first team, greatly strengthened the Freshmen and she scored seven of their ten points in the second half. The deciding game of the series will probably be played off in the near future.

STOUT'S TEAM WON AND LOST BY 8 PINS

After Capturing the First and Second Games Team No. 1 Takes the Count.

Team Number One in the Elks' Bowling Tournament copped two and lost the third of a series rolled with Team Number Nine, on the club's alleys, last night. Chauncey Stout's cohorts came through with colors flying in the first game, captured the second by a margin of eight pins and dropped the final match to Bill Nash's youngsters by eight pins.

Several good scores marked the pinning of the respective aggregations, last night, and the league competition has brought to light several unknowns who will prove good material for the first team next year. Double centuries were credited to Hall, High, Demler and Stout, Demler and High tying for the evening's high score honors with 223 each.

INVINCIBLES WILL NOW HAVE TO FIND NEW NAME

North Plainfield High School freshmen basketball players trimmed the Invincibles on the Saengerbund Hall court, last night, by a score of 28 to 8. The contest was featured by many long shots and the guarding of the goal preventers on the winning side, the visitors being held without a single two-point score in the second period.

Scoring field goals was pretty even up on the winning side, Doty, Denny, Force and Hebert doing the bulk of the work.

CHANGE IN ATHLETIC RULES.

New York, Feb. 28.—More than ordinary interest is manifested in the annual meeting to be held in this city tomorrow by the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletics of America. It is expected that several important amendments to the constitution and by-laws of the association will be adopted with a view to increasing the desire for participation in competition and encouraging keener interest and enthusiasm for athletics among college students. The most important of the proposed changes is the suggestion to add a fifth place in each event in awarding the championship cup for the annual track and field meeting, scoring five for first, four for second, three for third, two for fouth, and one for fifth place, a total of fifteen points for each event instead of eleven points—five, three, two and one, which has been the method is vogue since 1898.

BASEBALL NOTES

Clinton and Marshalltown, Ia., have displaced Monmouth and Kewanee, Ill., in the circuit of the Central Association.

Tim Jordan, the old Brooklyn fence buster, now with the Toronto team, will iron out the kinks with the Giants at Marlin, Texas.

A new major league rule prohibits a coach at third base from touching or holding a base runner rounding the third station.

There is talk of forming a new baseball league with a circuit made up of Pueblo, Cripple Creek, Colorado Springs, Fort Collins and Greeley, Colo., and Cheyene, Wyo.

The new Erie team in the Canadian League will be piloted by George H. Smith, who was formerly a big league catcher and later manager of the Buffalo team.

The Federal League promotors have been making a strenuous effort to land Tris Speaker, of the Red Sox; Sam Crawford, of the Tigers, and Mike Doolan and Tom Seaton, of the Phillies.

Joe Jackson, of the Cleveland Naps, and Bill Laval, of the Richmond, Virginia League team, are joint proprietors of a billiard parlor recently opened in the Virginia State capitol.

The National Association of Professional Baseball Clubs has sustained the objections of President O'Rourke, of the Eastern association, against the action of the New York-New Jersey League in changing its name to the Eastern League.

Manager Bill Phillips, of the Indiana Federal League team, is trying to induce Vincent Campbell to re-enter the game and join the Hoosier Feds. Campbell's last appearance in the big yard was in 1912 with the Boston Braves.

The High School, of Everett, Mass., boasts three of its former baseball players among the tryouts in the big show this spring. Eddie Harrison is with the New York Giants, "Dutchy" Bold with the St. Louis Browns, and George Brickley with the Philadelphia Americans.

Just as he was about to leave Allentown to report to the Buffalo Club, Thir Baseman Frank O'Rourke was pinched for wife desertion. Curses on 'em.

Manager George Stallings has promised to try out Catcher Fred F. Tyler. The young backstop is a brother of Pitcher "Lefty" Tyler, of the Braves.

George Stovall, manager of the Kansas City Federal League team, says he has a bunch of ball tossers that will prove one of the strongest in the new league.

George Hogriever, who taught Jake Beckley how to hold a bat in the late '30s or early '40s, has been appointed an umpire in the Wisconsin-Illinois League.

Two veteran gardeners, Harry Wolter and Birdie Cree, will be missed from the New York Yankees' lin up this season. Wolter goes to Los Angeles and Cree has been released to Baltimore.

Pitcher Jeff Tesreau, the Giants spitter, has pitched all winter for the San Diego team in California. If Jeff doesn't show class this season McGraw will be inclined to cuss Jeff, San Diego and winter baseball.

WITH THE BOXERS

Boston ring followers don't like the looks of the proposed bout between San Langford and Carl Morris.

Now it is the Pittsburgh promoters who have become involved in a row among themselves and queered the game in their town.

Abe Attell will try to show that he is still there with the clever ring work when he meets K. O. Mars in Cincinnati on March 2.

Bob Moha, the Milwaukee middleweight has caught on in great shape in New York, where he is a favorite with the boxing fans.

Mike Gibbons up and says: "If Packey McFarland thinks he is such a drawing card, why isn't he willing to fight me on a percentage basis?"

Joe Coster, the well-known New York lightweight, has retired from the ring. His knockout recently at the hands of Young McAuliffe showed Joe that it was time to hang up the mitts.

BORO CHAMPIONS BEATEN BY AJAX

Sensational Struggle on the Saengerbund Hall Court Last Night.

GAME ALWAYS CLOSE

Few Field Goals Recorded—Close Guarding Plays a Prominent Part—Association uintet Exhibits Better Teamwork.

Leading from the time the score was brought up to 6 to 4 in the opening minutes of play, the Ajax team, of the local Y. M. C. A., sprang the second surprise of the day in the local basketball world last night, by taking the North Plainfield High School interscholastic champions into camp with a score of 25 to 23. Although the association boys continually held the upper hand the difference between the respective scores was never a comfortable one and it was either team's game up until the final whistle was blown.

Fast footwork and some clever passing made the playing rough in many stages and excellent work on the part of the local guards may be assigned as a direct cause for the verdict. During the initial period the scoring was slow and repeated fouls interrupted the game at numerous intervals. Both sets of guards clung to their men like leeches and the few shots made were from difficult angles of the floor and in most cases the two point scores were long throws to the net.

The keen rivalry that exists between Y. M. C. A. and N. P. H. S. forces lent enthusiasm to the affair and neither team let up a bit during the forty minutes of battling. The Ajax led at the conclusion of the first half by a margin of six points, the score being 16 to 10, but soon after the final session was ushered in North Plainfield took a brace and although the Canucks came within an ace of striking a par in several instances they never passed their rivals. Love was the chief scorer for North Plainfield with a quaret of field goals, while Moulton and Farmer led the offensive work for the winning crew.

The score:

News of Interest in Building World

BUILDING TRADES ARE DEAD IN PLAINFIELD

But Suburban Towns Continue to See Houses Erected at Lively Pace.

The last week of February shows but slight improvement in the condition of the building trades in and around town. There have been two permits of minor importance issued during the past week by Building Inspector Doane, but taken as a whole all branches of the building trades are about dead.

With the exception of the permit for the new building to be erected on Bergen street by Axel Lagstrom, there have been no prospects of a new building boom such as this city was subject to all last year. It is estimated that the total amount involved in buildings for the past two months is not equal to the poorest month's business during the year 1913. With this fact made known, the local architects, who are the ones to have any foreknowledge of possible building, say that the worst is now on hand and that within a couple of months business will pick up and a better year than the one past will be had, or in other words the total amount that will be involved by the end of 1914 will be greatly in excess of the amount spent during 1913.

A number of the local contractors are busy at times doing small jobs of repair and alteration work, which is insufficient to employ all the hands that they usually have working for them.

Although the prospects for this city are at present very hazy, the suburbs give promise of having the busiest of seasons in their history. Those that have the best prospects at the present time include Scotch Plains, Fanwood, Dunellen, Bound Brook, Lincoln and the Dewey Park section. It is reported that as soon as the weather moderates a little, work will be started on the erection of ten houses for one syndicate on the outskirts of Dunellen, while twenty-two workingmen's cottages will be started by another realty company in and around the Lincoln section.

NEW FANWOOD HOME FOR JOHN HEINRICH

Many Attractive Features in Borough Residence to Cost $5,500.

John Heinrich, of Scotch Plains, is having a two and a half story frame dwelling erected on South avenue, Fanwood. The house, which has a frontage of thirty-two feet and a depth of thirty-four feet, will cost $5,500. When completed the exterior below the belting will be faced with Colonial type weather-boards, painted white, while the upper walls and gables will be faced with shingles dipped in silver gray staining solution before being placed. The roof will be finished with dipped moss green shingles. The foundation walls, of brick, will be faced with white stucco, as will the exposed surface of the two chimneys at either side of the house. Across the front is a ten foot wide veranda, supported by three stone piers. Three large round columns support the porch roof. The main entrance steps, which are to the right of the front porch, are bordered by stone bulkheads, which have been capped with slabs of cut stone.

By passing through the large front door, which is at the east corner of the building and is bordered by two panels of leaded glass windows, the reception hall is entered. At the rear of the reception hall is a large open stairway affording access to the second floor. At the side of the stairs a cloak and umbrella closet has been built. At the foot of the stairway three newel posts have been placed upon the top of each have been placed an artistic electrical lighting fixture. These posts are of the paneled type and have been so arranged that they correspond with the trimmings and aid to set off the appearance of the hall.

To the left of the reception hall at the front of the house is the living room, fourteen feet, six inches square. At the centre south side an open fireplace has been built, faced with tapestry brick, lined with white mortar. On either side of the fire-place bookcases have been built with leaded glass panel doors. At the rear of the living room is the dining room. This room has been finished with a false beamed ceiling and paneled walls, to the heighth of four feet, six inches from the floor and topped by a Dutch shelf. Where the beams cross in the ceiling decorations four artistic drops have been placed for lighting purposes, while in the centre of the room a basket dome will be placed. Special columned openings separate the reception hall from the living room and the living room to the dining room. At the rear of the dining room, with sliding doors between, and at the extreme western corner of the building is a small sun parlor, enclosed by seven casement sashes which can be removed and replaced with screens in the summer time.

Between the dining room and kitchen is a butler's pantry. At the north corner of the house is the kitchen, with a combination gas and coal range, and opening through a small entrance way upon the back porch. An enclosed stairways connects the kitchen with the front stairway at the platform.

All the rooms on the first floor have been finished with trimmings of chestnut material, finished in the dull mission style, double floorings, with a finished surface of half inch white oak, with the exception of the kitchen, and doors of birch.

The stairway has been built of solid chestnut with pancled stringers and a plain square balustrade. On the second floor are four bedrooms, bathroom, hall and linen closet. The four bedrooms are finished in chestnut, mission style, stained golden oak, with comb grained North Carolina pine floors. The bedroom at the front has also been fitted with an artistic mantle shelf of the same material as the trimmings. The bathroom has a tiled floor, imitation tile side walls, white porcelain enameled fixtures, including shower, and a medicine cabinet with a plate glass mirror door. The fixtures in the linen closet are all of red cedar.

All the doors are of the two panel birch type, stained a deep mahogany. Each door is finished with glass knobs and heavy brass faced locks.

The third floor has one servant's bedroom, trimmed with cypress left natural, and North Caroline pine flooring, and storage room.

The building is wired throughout for electric lights, is piped for gas, and has a hot water heating system. Double white porcelain laundry trays will be placed in the cellar.

Anthony Albert, of Scotch Plains, has the general contract and is supervising the carpenter work, and the painting and decorating. Johnson Brothers, of Scotch Plains, have the contract for the masonry and plastering work; S. B. Macauley, also of Scotch Plains, the plumbing, heating, etc. George W. Ord, of Plainfield, is doing the wiring and placing the lighting fixtures. All the lumber and mason materials were furnished by the Fanwood Lumber and Supply Company. A. M. Griffen Hardware Company, of Plainfield, furnished the hardware; the J. D. Loizeaux Lumber Company, of Plainfield, supplied all the millwork and interior decorative materials, and William Bartles' stone yard, of Plainfield, the cut stone.

The house will be completed about April 1 and will be occupied by the owner.

TWO PERMITS, ONE FOR HOUSE OTHER FOR ALTERATIONS

Two permits have been issued by Building Inspector T. O. Doane during the past week to local people for the erection of one building and the altering of another building. Those that received the permits were:

Axel Lagstrom, permit for the erection of a two story and attic frame dwelling on his property at 338 Bergen street. The building, which is to have a frontage of twenty-two feet and a depth of twenty-eight feet, will cost its owner not less than $2,500. The exterior walls of the building will be faced with weather-boards, which will be painted a light color, while the roof of the building will be of dark green shingles. The building will be heated with a steam heating system and will be lighted with both gas and electric lights. William H. Clum, the local architect, drew the plans and Axel Lagstrom, the owner, will do both the masonry and carpenter work.

A permit has been issued to Charles Sebring for alterations to the building at 230 and 232 West Front street, now occupied by the F. W. Woolworth five and ten cent store. It is estimated that the alterations and extensions planned will cost about $1,000. The proposed changes consist of removing the present show windows and building an entire new show front with three display spaces instead of two, the new windows to include the space now occupied by Leo Slonim's jewelry establishment, which will in a few days be removed to the owner's new building, next door to the present location, also to form a new door in the side wall of the building near the rear. The Grenier Contracting Company, of Brooklyn, will have entire charge of the changes to be effected in the appearance of the local store.

IMPROVING BARBER SHOP.

Extensive improvements are being made in the barber shop owned by Alfred Seidel, on Park avenue, between Front and Second streets. The changes include a new wainscoating around the room, repairing and painting of the interior and the installing of three up-to-date chairs. Wright & Hummer are doing the carpenter work in connection with the changes and Charles Lane the painting and decorating. When the improvements have been completed the interior of the shop will be finished with white enameled walls and ceilings, thus going far towards making the establishment sanitary. It is expected that the work will be completed by the latter part of next week.

WILLIAM WARD'S NEW HOME AT 'PLAINS

Township Councilman Will Have House With All Improvements by Aug. 1.

Councilman William Ward, of Scotch Plains, is having a two and a half story frame dwelling erected on Grand street, Scotch Plains. The house, which will have a frontage of thirty-one feet and a depth of thirty-five feet, will cost not less than $4,500.

The exterior walls of the building will be covered with red cedar shingles, stained velvet brown, while the roof will be of shingles, stained dark green. The color scheme will be set off by the white trimmings. Across the front and at the side of the building a ten foot wide veranda will be built, supported by eight brick piers, on the exposed surfaces of which will be stucco.

Supporting the porch roof are eight fourteen inch square, paneled, box columns, and around the porch runs a panaled rail. At the northeast side of the house one large exposed chimney will be erected, faced with a coating of white stucco. The main entrance at the east corner will be fitted with a plate glass door, bordered on either side by smaller panels of artistically designed leaded glass.

On the first floor will be living room, dining room and kitchen. The living room, which runs the entire depth of the house, has a measurement of eleven feet, eight inches by nineteen feet. In the centre of the northeast side of this room a bow window will be built, containing a window seat with a hinged top. At the northwest centre a large open fire-place will be erected, faced with tapestried bricks of original designs. At one side of the fire-place a bookcase, with leaded glass doors, will be built, while at the other side will be a partly enclosed stairway to the second story. A false beam ceiling and paneled side walls will add to the decorative features. The stairway leading to the second floor will be open only to the platform landing. The stairs will be constructed of solid chestnut, with oak treads.

At the front of the house, on the southeast side, the dining room will be built. It will have a measurement of twelve by fifteen feet, will have a false beam ceiling and strip paneled wall, above which a Dutch shelf will be placed. Between the panelling strips a linen wall covering of a light colored, artistic design will be placed. At the front of this room extending on to the porch, a bow window will be placed which will also be equipped with a window seat.

Both the living room and the dining room will be finished with chestnut trim of the mission type. All the trimmings will be stained a golden oak finish. Double flooring will be laid in these rooms with a finished surface of white oak.

The kitchen, at the south corner, will have a combination range. From it a flight of stairs to the platform landing of the front stairway gives access to the second floor from the rear of the house. It will be trimmed with chestnut material, finished natural, and will have a double flooring with finished surface of white oak. In addition to the customary equipment of the room, a large double dresser and a pantry will be built at the side. The laundry will be in the cellar.

There will be three bedrooms, a bathroom and a linen closet on the second floor, in addition to the private hallway leading to the third floor stairs. All the rooms will be trimmed with chestnut, mission style, birch doors, stained similar to the trimmings, which will be golden oak, and will have North Carolina pine floorings. The bathroom will be equipped with white porcelain sanitary fixtures, and a large medicine cabinet with a plate glass mirror door. The side walls of this room will be marked to represent tile. The third floor will be used for storage.

A hot water system of heating will be used low radiators being placed underneath every window. The house will be piped for gas and wired for electric lights, with combination fixtures.

Charles W. Anderson, of Westfield drew the plans for the house. Anthony Albert has the general contract and is doing the carpenter and decorative work. Johnson Brothers will do the masonry and plastering work S. B. Macauley will install the heating and plumbing system, etc George W. Ord, of Plainfield, will wire the house and place the fixtures. The Fanwood Lumber and Supply Company will furnish all the lumber and mason materials. J. D. Loizeaux Lumber Company will supply the millwork and trim and also the stucco. William Barties' stone yard, of Plainfield, will furnish the cut stone used.

Work will be commenced on this dwelling as soon as the weather moderates and mason work can be done without fear of freezing. It is expected that the house will be finished ready for occupancy by August 1, when the owner will move in and take possession of the property.

BRYAN ACCEPTS VILLA'S OFFER

U. S. Officials Will Be Sent to Chihuahua.

WASHINGTON IS IN DOUBT

Convinced That Expedition Will Never Take Place—Capital Growing Tired of Villa—Distrustful of His Methods. Bryan Has Faith.

Washington, Feb. 28.—Secretary of State Bryan has accepted Pancho Villa's offer of a special train for United States and British officials to be sent to Chihuahua to view the body of William S. Benton, the British ranch owner killed by the rebels.

Washington officials, however, doubt that this plan will ever be carried out, as the rebel leader has said nothing regarding the date of departure of the train.

Juarez agents of the reoel chief now say that Carranza alone can settle the Benton case, as he is the "supreme chief" of the Constitutionalists.

Mr. Bryan has dismissed all officials of the department of state from participation in the handling of the Benton case and is giving it his personal attention exclusively. He declined to say whether any arrangements are being made for American and British representatives and American army surgeons to view the body of Benton, now said to be interred in a cemetery at Chihuahua.

Notable officials of the administration dismiss the statement of Villa that the body of Benton is at Chihuahua as mere "buncombe," intended to fool a little longer the government of the United States. It is pointed out that already ten days have elapsed since the execution of Benton and that probably but a little more time is required before the body will be in such condition as to destroy all evidences of how Benton was killed.

For the United States once more to accept Villa's word as to the location of the body of Benton would be beneath the dignity of this government. It is declared here. Many officials declare that the time has come for the United States to say to Villa that it has lost all patience with him, that it will pay no more attention to any more of his evasive and contradictory statements and that it is satisfied that Benton met his death in a foul manner and will henceforth adopt its own measures according to its own judgment There is no indication that Mr. Bryan, however, has lost any of his faith in Villa and Carranza.

Villa's Tale Disbelieved.

It is pointed out as inconceivable that Villa should cause the death of a man whom he has since denounced as the "bad man of the border," a man who tried to take his life and an enemy to the revolution, and then carry his body to Chihuahua in order to do all proper honors to it and inter it in the best cemetery in Mexico Villa has given these reasons for his taking the Benton body to Chihuahua

It is declared that his most recent statements are simply to delay and deceive the United States. The conviction held here that the body of Benton will never be seen, at least not until it is too late to determine anything as to the cause of death, prevails even more generally today

No Trace of Bauch Yet.

Meanwhile no evidence has been found of Gustav Bauch, the German American last seen in prison in Juarez on Feb. 18. Witnesses in Juarez declare that he was taken out by a squad of soldiers late on that day. He has not been seen anywhere in Mexico or the United States since that time The belief here is that the man is dead. No further action has been taken by the state department, however, since its inquiries developed only a mass of contradictory statements of which nothing could be made except that some one is lying.

TANGOES ON CAPITOL STEPS

Charming Dancer In Abbreviated Costume Does "Movie" Stunt.

Washington, Feb. 28.—A petite toe dancer in a shockingly abbreviated costume used the front steps of the capitol for a stage. While she tripped some fancy whirls a motion picture operator ground out several hundred yards of film, but both he and the charming dancer beat a hasty retreat to a taxi when a capitol guard appeared.

And the funny part of it all was that the guard liked the exhibition, wasn't empowered to stop it, and there wasn't a "cop" in sight.

BONNETS AND HATS FOR THE BABY

Pretty bonnets for the baby are among the things that can be made at home for a few cents, yet cost dollars when bought, ready-made, in the shops. A bit of lawn, linen, corded silk, or a broadcloth, trimmed with hand embroidery which can be done in a few hours, will make a charmingly dainty bonnet. 14467, for instance, might be carried out on lawn, handkerchief linen, or batiste in solid work or solid and eyelet embroidery. For cool weather, a little cap of quilted silk may be worn inside the washable bonnet, or the bonnet may be made of corded silk or white broadcloth, lined with China silk, and embroidered in this dainty design with white filo silk. Transfer pattern 14467 includes the cutting outline in one size, and designs for the ends of the string.

14564 should be maile of a washable fabric and satin ribbon in pink, blue or white may be run through the wide eyelets and tied under the chin in place of strings. This transfer pattern also includes the cutting outline in one size.

For the elder baby of one or two years, the attractive little hat 14416 is appropriate. This might be made of white broadcloth, or heavy silk for winter, or of linen for summer. The brim is 12-inches in diameter, and the round crown is fastened to it with buttons and loops on the under side. In making this hat, first embroider the flower sprays on the material, then baste the lining to the outside, and buttonhole-stitch the two fabrics together, when working scalloped outline.

These guaranteed hot-iron transfer patterns can be supplied to readers on receipt of price, 10 cents each.

Some Cookery Suggestions

DINNER MENU.
Brown Potato Soup.
Baked Striped Bass With Maitre d'Hotel Sauce.
Parisian Potatoes.
Baked Salsify.
Bavarian Cream.
Coffee.

SOME nice ways for cooking side dishes for the dinner table are the following:

Baked Salsify.—Scrape and wash and cut in small pieces sufficient salsify and put it into a basin of cold water containing lemon juice or vinegar. Drain and plunge into boiling water with a little salt. Cook until tender. Make a white sauce.

Put the drained salsify and sauce on a buttered dish, sprinkle over with breadcrumbs and small bits of butter. Bake brown.

A Welsh Dainty.

Leek Souffles.—Take one ounce each of flour, butter and ham, one pint white stock, a gill of milk and cream, a small onion stuck with a clove, six peppercorns, three whites of eggs, one-half pint well reduced leek puree, a pinch of paprika pepper and salt, souffle cases. Melt the butter, mix the flour with it and let it cook without coloring. Boil up the stock with the onion and peppercorns and let it reduce to half its original quantity, which would be a gill. Boil up milk and cream together, add to the roux and strain in the stock carefully; cut the ham into small pieces and add also. Stir the sauce well until it boils and let simmer until it is well reduced; rub through a fine sieve (take out the ham), add the leek puree, whisk the whites of eggs to a stiff froth and add to the mixture with the seasoning. When the former is sufficiently cool fill up three parts full some souffle cases and bake in a moderate oven.

A Delicious Dish.

Mashed Turnips au Gratin.—Two pounds young turnips, one gill Bechamel sauce, one-half pint rich stock, salt, pepper and nutmeg, three ounces butter, one-quarter ounce flour, one medium sized onion and breadcrumbs.

Wash, peel and slice the turnips, put them into cold water with a little salt. Peel and blanch the onion, chop it finely, then cook for ten minutes in an ounce of butter; add the turnips, previously drained. Stir the whole over a slow fire for about fifteen minutes. Melt an ounce of butter, add the flour and cook a little without browning, moisten with the stock and let it boil up while stirring, cook for ten minutes. Now add the turnips to the thickened stock and let simmer for about half an hour. Pass all through a sieve, season to taste with a pinch of sugar, salt, pepper and nutmeg, arrange in a pile on a gratin dish, mask with white sauce, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and divide the remainder of the butter into little bits on the top. Bake and serve immediately.

Daddy's Bedtime Story—

Midgie and The Rare Old Violin.

The Violin Spoke to Midgie.

"A LITTLE girl named Midgie was very, very fond of music. In fact, she was fonder of it than of anything else," said daddy. "She would listen outside of a window she was passing if she heard any one inside. She loved to hear the big organ in the church, and the singing of the choir boys almost made her cry.

"But, above all things, she loved to hear the violin. And she had only heard it once. That was at the church entertainment, when a wonderful violinist had played piece after piece.

"Her family was poor and could not afford to have her take music lessons. But when her daddy saw how fond she was of music he said:

"'Up in the attic there is a very old violin. It isn't much good, but maybe you'd like it to play with.'

"Midgie was delighted, and the next day her daddy took her up in the attic, where they found the old violin put away on a shelf. It was covered with dust, but Midgie held it affectionately and vowed that she would some day be able to play it.

"Midgie lived in a big city where there were always plenty of fine concerts, but her family could not afford such pleasures.

"Midgie always had her old violin on a table by her bed. One night she lay awake humming to herself some of the melodies 'the man' had played. But after awhile she fell asleep, and in her sleep the old violin was talking to her. 'You think I'm old and no good,' said the violin, 'but I'm very, very valuable. Your father picked me up at an old curio shop and paid very little for me. He used to want to play, too, just as you do. The people at the curio shop didn't realize that I really could be sold for a great deal. But now I hope to help you, for any one who is as fond of music as you are should hear it and take lessons. You tell your daddy to take me to a violin dealer and just see how much I'll sell for, for I know I'm very rare.'

"The next morning at the breakfast table Midgie told her daddy of her dream. Her daddy smiled and said:

"'I'm afraid it was nothing but a sweet dream of yours. But I will do as you ask and see if I can sell it. I'll take it with me today.'

"Midgie could hardly wait until the evening came to hear of the result, and when evening at last came Midgie's daddy came in without the violin, and his face was very smiling as he said:

"'Midgie, the dream has come true. The violin was very rare, and now my little girl can learn to play one herself.'"

ANTI-SUFFRAGE

Conducted by Plainfield Branch New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage.

Despite the undesirable, unalterable fact, that the result in New Zealand and Australia, of granting the franchise to women, have no remotest bearing on the expediency of granting it to them in this country, we constantly hear of the millenium resulting from it in those two Colonies.

As to this established millenium a few quotations given below may prove interesting and enlightening, but there exists two or three fundamental facts regarding this country, which cannot be ignored, proving the fallacy of all arguments claiming that a like millenium would result here. No other country in the world has a population increased yearly by "hundreds of thousands of potential citizens" from Europe. This annual increase, presents a never ending problem, if we hope to assimilate, in time to come our cosmopolitan population.

Is it not perfectly obvious that we cannot guage the requirements of our government, or the advantages to result from it by a political step, which might be entirely advantageous for Australia, a country absolutely free from such conditions and where there is always a loud cry for immigration?

Is it not entirely reasonable to declare that New Zealand faces no such problem as that presented to us, of a population of millions, enfranchised simultaneously with its emancipation from slavery?

Wonderfully well are these people acquitting themselves at the end of but fifty years of this responsibility of citizenship forced upon them in their untutored, bewildered entry into freedom.

Regarding New Zealand, a woman doctor says:

"I have been asked what my personal experience of the woman question is in New Zealand. It is that the emancipators of women have gone very much too far. The idea many people at home have of New Zealand, based largely on the inflated statements of a few who lead the van of 'progress,' is that a few really or would-be enlightened acts on a statute book have made a Utopia in the Southern Pacific. Marriage is not so frequent here as it should be in a young country; the small birth-rate causes continual anxiety, and incessant appeal for increase of population by immigration for Great Britain; the high death rate amongst children is a disgrace to the women of New Zealand."

The Wellington, N. Z., correspondent of the London Morning Post says of New Zealand:

"It was natural to assume that without touching the details of statesmanship, enfranchised woman would at least be able by her moral instincts and her intuitive appreciation of character to cleanse and elevate politics by making the character of a candidate the paramount consideration. Character, as Mr. Chamberlain has said, is the first essential in public life. We expected woman to take the same view, but we have been disappointed. It cannot be said that public life has received the moral stimulus which was expected."

And of Australia:

"A great many trades in wihch large numbers of females are employed hardly pay an average wage to those women, even in Australia. Further, wherever there is female labor competing with male labor in an industry wages are lowered or unemployment results."

In conclusion it is interesting to note the following workings of the vote in Australia.

In "The Unexpurgated Case Against Woman Suffrage," Sir Almroth Wright states that "the woman voter in the colonies is only a pawn in the game of politics, and of the opportunist politicians who have enfranchised her."

In "Australia, From a Woman's Point of View," Miss Jessie Acwerman, a prominent suffragette, makes the following remarks on the point raised by Sir Almroth Wright:

"The women electors are divided into two classes; those who want to vote and use it, and those who regard citizenship as a joke, and a very unpleasant one at that.

"It is a statement of fact to declare that the individual is so party-ridden as to be anti-anything and everything that is not clearly and plainly branded with the party earmark.

"There are but two political parties, and, each being so criminally 'anti,' the women are at a great disadvantage in exercising the vote. The many who 'detest it' foolishly imagine they have nothing either to gain or lose by the use of it. The other class is composed largely of the wives of working men.

"It would be unfair to other women to say that the labor women vote because they are burdened with a sense of responsibility they dare not shirk. It is not true. They vote largely from party instinct.

"(The polling of labor women) is due to the unrelenting, ever-acting agencies of organization. In many parts of Australia a leader among the working women knows where to put her hand on her forces at any hour. Not only so, but she is able to marshal them into line in quick time. They are in small companies ready to take up marching orders at the first call to action. Upon election days they swarm to party rescue from every quarter."

To which she adds in reply to "their being pawns in the game of politics," "The point is not how or why they vote, but that they vote."

Finally, in regard to the expression used by Sir A. Wright, "the opportunist politicians who have enfranchised her," a striking confirmation of the accuracy of the description is given by Miss Ackerman. Miss Ackerman states that in western Australia, "a society of women" passed the following resolution and "appointed a committee to wait upon the government, requesting them to bring in a bill" on the lines indicated.

"Whereas: The ballot was thrust upon the women of this State to meet a political and party emergency, before public sentiment was ripe for it, and no effort has been made to educate them to the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.

"Resolved: That the government be called upon to enforce voting by all men and women duly qualified, under penalty of a fine of five pounds for the first offense, and a month's imprisonment for the second."

It is quite true that the "experience" of Australia, if rightly interpreted, has much to teach us regarding the experiment of Woman Suffrage.

Practical Fashion Hints

By Alice Gibson

8186

Women have long since given up the idea that house dresses to be practical, must be dowdy. The regulation house dress of to-day is quite as dainty and becoming as the afternoon or evening gown. Cotton fabrics used for these dresses are becoming more attractive every day; they are colored well and may be washed and ironed indefinitely without fading or becoming ugly; designs also are improving.

No. 8186 shows a kimono blouse, which may be cut with a high or square neck, an elbow length sleeve (pattern is cut for full length as well) and a three-piece skirt, with a slight fullness at the back which may be laid in pleats or gathered.

Cotton voile, crepe, madras or gingham may be used to advantage, and almost any other suitable wash material. As shown here, the neck and sleeves are finished effectively with bands of eyelet embroidery.

To make this dress in size 36 as illustrated it requires 4¾ yards of 42 inch material.

The pattern is cut in 7 sizes; 34 to 46.

This Is a Perfect Pattern.

Be sure to state right size, measuring over the fullest part of the bust for dimensions.

DURING HOME PATTERN WEEK (Feb. 23 to 28) this pattern will be sent free of charge with the compliments of this paper to anyone filling out coupon with name, address, and SIZE and enclosing a two cent stamp to pay postage, to F. B. desk No. 3, 615 West Forty-third street, New York city.

The Evidence Is Supplied by Local Testimony.

If the reader wants stronger proof than the following statement and experience of a resident of Plainfield, what can it be?

Mrs. S. Driscoll, 1009 South Second street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "There was a dull pain across the small of my back and in my sides that clung to me constantly and any hard work made me worse. I was subject to headaches and dizzy spells, especially when stooping or lifting and I felt weak and run down. I tried plasters and various other remedies but nothing helped me until I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Randolph's drug store. They made a lasting cure. I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills just as highly today as I have been for the past five years."

WOMEN'S RELIEF CORPS GIVE SUPPER TO VETERANS

The Women's Relief Corps, No. 10, Auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., gave a Martha Washington supper, last night, in Reform Hall. The guests of honor were the veterans. The members of the corps were dressed in old fashioned costumes and the veterans were in uniform, which lent military color to the scene. The decorations were red, white and blue, and the supper was a bountiful one. The women of the corps danced old-fashioned dances and music was furnished by Naylor's orchestra.

A pleasing feature of the evening's entertainment was the singing of old songs. Recitations, referring to events in Revolutionary times, were given. The supper was served from 6 until 8:30 o'clock. Members of the committee of arrangements were Mrs. Harriet L. Gibbons, chairman; Mrs. Mary Kitchell, Mrs. Ada England, Mrs. Harriet Kirch, Miss Elsie Perrine, Miss Evelyn Manley and Mrs. H. K. Frazee.

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat Less Meat Also Take Glass of Salts Before Eating Breakfast.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps on head. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them rush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water. Also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.—Adv.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.—Adv.
